Mr. PETERS. It is a larger and more important park than remarks of the gentlemen might indicate. It is essentially a park and not a monument, and that is one reason why this bill should pass. Having now an area of 5,000 acres, it is hoped to increase it to 20,000 in the not distant future, all without cost to the Government, through the continuance of the public-spirited efforts of the farsighted and patriotic gentlemen (preeminently including Mr. George B. Dorr, of Boston and Bar Harbor) who have been devoting their energy to this matter for years.

The park already is an important national project, and its possibilities are immense.

It is the only national park area established for the use and enjoyment of the people east of the Rocky Mountains and the only national park area in the country bordering on the ocean and giving people contact with the sea or view of coastal scenery.

It is in the heart of the most beautiful and picturesque scenery on the Atlantic coast, if not in the world. It includes as its dominating feature the highest summit on the Atlantic shore. It is the only spot where the mountains meet the sea. It is in a climate eagerly sought by thousands for its invigorating and health-giving qualities in summer, autumn, and even winter. This New England section constitutes by far the greatest recreational asset in the country and the most available, lying within reach by motor, train, and boat from the most densely peopled section of the United States and of over half of its total population. This shore is being rapidly taken up in private occupation by people coming from every eastern and central portion of the country, and in a few years' time this tract, now nationally owned, will be the single spot of beauty on it freely open to the public and devoted to a public use.

It will furnish recreation and pleasure to different types of people to an extent greater than any other park possible in this country.

Is a man interested in geology? Within the area of this park are some of the most ancient and interesting mountain and rock formations in the world, clearly exhibiting to the trained eye of the geologist changes of level of the coast and the later movement of the ice sheet, which stripped from the land its ancient soil, wore down the hills which had been pushed up, cut the valleys, and formed the innumerable lakes and ponds, now filled with the clearest and purest of water.

Is a man interested in history? This land contains the site, in 1613, of the earliest French missionary settlement upon the continent. It was discovered by Champlain in 1604, who first landed and named these mountains, which for more than a century remained the property of France as a portion of her ancient Province of Acadia, granted in 1688 by Louis XIV to Cadillac, the founder of Detroit and early governor of Louisiana, passed by English conquest into the possession of Massachusetts and by her given to her last colonial governor, Sir Francis Bernard, as a reward for patriotic service.

Is a man interested in botany and forestry? This particular spot, for some reason, through a combination of soil and climate, is more earnest in its effort to grow things than any other place in that fertile section of the country. It is covered by an extraordinary variety of trees, shrubs, and flowers, and capable of sheltering and nurturing many others.

Is a man interested in wild life? This country is rich in bird life, and this particular spot under national management could be made a bird sanctuary of large importance, lying, as it does, directly in the course of the Atlantic coast migration route to the great summer breeding regions of the north. It was formerly a favorite haunt of moose, deer, and beaver, which need protection only to become again abundant. Trout thrive very plentifully in the lakes and streams, and it is alone among our national-park lands in the admirable opportunities it offers for deep-sea fishing.

For the tired professional man, business man, or mechanic it offers unexcelled facilities for recreation and health, walking and climbing its paths and trails, breathing the ozone of the forests mingled with the breath of the sea.

Secretary Lane has called attention to the fact that the creation of this park was not the result of chance but of careful, thought-out intention. No better way of extending into the crowded eastern regions of the country the immediate benefits of our national-park system could have been devised. The bringing of this park into the national-park system will be of inestimable benefit to future generations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine moves that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tracts of land, easements, and other real estate heretofore known as the Sieur de Monts National Monument, situated on Mount Desert Island, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine, established and designated as a national monument under the act of June 8, 1906, entitled "An act for the preservation of American antiquities," by presidential proclamation of July 8, 1916, is hereby declared to be a national park and dedicated as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people under the name of the Lafayette National Park, under which name the aforesaid national park shall be entitled to receive and to use all moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for Sieur de Monts National Monument.

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and promotion of said Lafayette National Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provision of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," and acts additional thereto or amendatory thereof.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept in behalf of the United States such other property on said Mount Desert Island, including lands, easements, buildings, and moneys, as may be donated for the extension or improvement of said park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PETERS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 940) to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the lady from Montana I will reserve my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves his objection.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides that certain people who have taken up land on the Flathead Indian Reservation shall not be required to pay the amount asked for in the second appraisement.

When the Flathead Indian Reservation was opened to settlement, and there was quite a little confusion because some land which had been allotted to the Indians and was afterwards withdrawn, this land was not appraised at the time the settlers went in. The Land Department sent word that these settlers should be allowed to go on the land, and they went on with the idea that the land would be appraised at the same value as similar land. After they had entered this land a second appraisement was made, and now the question is according to which appraisement should they pay. This bill provides that those who settled between August 26, 1910, and June 14, 1911, shall be required to pay the amount asked for in the first appraisement, and that the money shall be authorized to be repaid to the Indians, covering the difference between the two appraisements.

Altogether this difference could not amount to more than $65,000. It is not exactly known how much land will be involved, but the amount will not exceed $65,000. I think that any private corporation or land company that made the representations to the people that the Government made to the people who entered this land on the Flathead Indian Reservation would certainly be held liable for this difference. The people who entered this land increased the value of it before the second appraisement was made, and at that time there was a boom in land values in that part of the country, which partially accounts for the difference in the appraisements.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the lady from Montana yield?

Miss RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the first entry were not all the lands that had been appraised taken and sold to those who had made entry upon them? And is it not a fact that these persons who entered upon lands that were not appraised went there subject to the right of the Government to make any appraisal that it might see fit to make in the future?

Miss RANKIN. According to the letter from the Land Department——

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the lady yield to me?

Miss RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. The situation was this: The land was partly appraised; a large portion was appraised. Let us assume that the first set numbers from 1 to 7. The second set represent a piece of land contiguous to the first, where the value was not appraised. The settlers went upon the second piece of land on the same day, perhaps, that settlers went on the first piece. The Government says in substance, "I can not accept your filing on the second piece until the first piece shall have been appraised." It took five years to get the first piece appraised.

Mr. MANN. This bill does not apply to those cases. This bill only applies to the land that was appraised in 1907 and 1908.

Mr. EVANS. It applies to lands that were settled upon at the date of the settlement of the lands in 1908, when they were appraised, but some of them were not settled upon until 1912.

Mr. MANN. It says, "lands which have been appraised at an amount in excess at which similar lands were appraised."

Mr. EVANS. The gentleman is right. These settlers went on the land in perfect good faith, with the assurance that the price would be no greater than the first appraisement.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was no assurance. It was understood that these lands should be sold at the appraised value, and certain of the lands were appraised. Those that entered upon the land paid the amount of that appraisal. The others went on land that had not yet been appraised, subject to the right of the Government to appraise the land later. The lands rose in value, and then the appraisers placed a higher value upon them than had been placed upon the land originally. Now they are trying to get something from the Government for nothing.

Mr. EVANS. The man who settled on the second piece of land added a value to it just as much as the man who settled on the first piece, because he built roads, and schoolhouses, and ditches, and farms.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Supposing that is the case. This was Indian land?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Government acted as an intermediary between the Indians and the settlers on the land, to transfer the title to the settlers?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why should the intermediary have to pay a large sum of money just because the title passed through the intermediary? If the first appraisement was sufficient to allow settlements with the settlers, why is it not sufficient to settle with the Indians? They are all residents of this same territory, are they not, both Indians and settlers?

Mr. EVANS. Yes. The only reason I could assign in answer to the gentleman's question is that the Government, by reason of its failure to appraise the second piece of land, made itself liable.

Mr. MANN. It is nonsense to talk about the Government paying this because it did not appraise the land. Now, here is the position: This bill was up here before, and the committee itself struck out the provision that the Government should pay the difference.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Here is a case where the Government is not interested in any way whatever financially. It passes the title from the Indians through the Government to the settlers.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. An appraisement is made at a low rate on a part of the land. Settlers acquired part of the land on that basis. Their improvements added to the value of the land. The Indians did not add to the value of the land. The claim is that the settlers added to the value of the land and that therefore the settlers who did not obtain the land on the first appraisement should now obtain it on the payment of the value of the land at the time of the first appraisement. Well, that is very much to the interest of the settlers. It may be just, but thereupon our good friends out there insist that because the Indians also live in Montana the Government also must pay them on the last appraisement, and give to the Indians the benefit of the additional value of the land, a value added by the settlers, but must not make the settlers pay that. Well, the Government is a bare trustee, and for acting as a bare trustee you want to make them pay a large sum of money. Is that fair?

Mr. EVANS. Would it be satisfactory to the gentleman to strike out the second section of the bill and let the first section pass?

Mr. MANN. It would be if it was a House bill, and so we could control it; but, being a Senate bill, if we pass it here it will have to go back to the Senate, and this will very likely be restored there.

Mr. STAFFORD. The insurmountable objection that I had to the bill was that it imposed an obligation on the United States Government, which had no possible financial interest in the matter.

Mr. MANN. I suppose eventually we will pay it anyhow, because we pay almost any old Indian claim in the course of time.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me remind the gentleman from Illinois that you do not pay any Indian claim until after the lapse of about 100 years.

Mr. EVANS. Certainly this is a hardship on those people out there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object to it in its present form.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have this bill passed over without prejudice, to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The lady from Montana asks unanimous consent that the bill may go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO FRANCIS ASBURY.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. When we had under consideration the Senate joint resolution authorizing the erection of a memorial to Francis Asbury, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised certain objections. I have prepared an amendment to the resolution and submitted it to the gentleman, and it meets with his approved, and I think will meet with the approval of the members of the committee. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate joint resolution 107, and to clear up the matter by offering the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to Senate joint resolution 107, authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Francis Asbury, to which he proposes to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the suggested amendment be read first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 2, line 5, after the word "memorial," insert the following:

"Provided, That the memorial herein provided for shall not be erected or placed on any part of the Mall or Potomac Park, nor on any ground within one-half mile of the Capitol."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am quite in sympathy with the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois, that all available tracts of land in the District of Columbia should not be preempted by the erection of monuments or memorials upon them, for worthy persons, it is true, but persons who are not known except perhaps to a small number. Would the gentleman have any objection to having the site chosen by the Commission of Fine Arts?

Mr. MANN. That is provided in the resolution, is it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; it merely says that it shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts. Of course, we know that on Connecticut Avenue——

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. STAFFORD. To have the proviso read:

Provided, That the design of the memorial shall be approved and the site chosen by the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that. I shall be glad to accept that suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the Francis Asbury Memorial Association for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, and the White House, of a memorial to Francis Asbury, a pioneer itinerant, whose continuous journeyings through our cities, towns, villages, and early settlements, from 1771 to 1816, greatly promoted the interests of patriotism, education, morality, and religion and were a distinct aid to the American Republic: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said memorial.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 2, line 5, after the word "memorial," insert the following:

"Provided, That the memorial herein provided for shall not be erected or placed on any part of the Mall, or Potomac Park, nor on any ground within one-half mile of the Capitol."

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think the exception more fitting to lines 5 to 9 carried in the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be from the standpoint of literary construction, but I do not see that it adds anything to the exception.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "site chosen and," and after the word "approved," in line 3, insert "and the site chosen."

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that is in accord with the construction he desires to have placed in the proviso?

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope so.

Mr. WALSH. I suggest that it needs the words "site shall be chosen."

Mr. STAFFORD. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and I modify my amendment to that extent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STOCK-WATERING PRIVILEGES—FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 932) to provide stock-watering privileges on certain unallotted lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I want to inquire if these lands are classified and appraised; and if so, whether they will be sold at the appraised value.

Mr. EVANS. I do not know whether they are classified. My understanding was that they were Indian lands that would be allotted, and when allotted they want to keep open a passageway, so that the cattle can get to the streams of water.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose is, as I gathered from the report, that these lands were to be opened for settlement. It may be that the lady from Montana can give the information.

Miss RANKIN. There are certain lands back in the hills that can be allotted for stock-raising purposes. There is no value to them unless they can have water. Trails have been formed by the cattle going to the water, and it is asked that the Department of the Interior withhold from allotment a narrow strip of land following these trails on the natural highway, so that the cattle may always find water. Then it will be possible to allot the lands back in the hills for stock-raising purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not the purpose to throw the lands open for settlement?

Miss RANKIN. No further than they are opened, but it is the purpose to withhold this land, so that the cattle can get to the water. It is already thrown open to settlement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARNER). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The lady from Montana asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stats. L., p. 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana," and all amendments thereto, be amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 26. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to designate as valuable for stock-watering purposes such of the unallotted and unreserved lands of the Flathead Indian Reservation, which border on streams, as may be subject to settlement and disposal under sections 9 and 13 of this act. Lands so designated shall be disposed of under the terms of this act, subject to the conditions, which shall be expressed in all patents issued for land so designated, that existing trails crossing said lands shall be kept open to the extent necessary to provide access for live stock to streams adjacent to said lands. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to perform all acts necessary to the enforcement of this condition."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Miss RANKIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOTS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES, SUN RIVER PROJECT, MONTANA.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3571) granting lands for school purposes in lots No. 111 in each of the town sites of Fort Shaw and Simms, Sun River reclamation project, Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be hereby authorized and directed to issue patent conveying lot No. 111 in the town site of Fort Shaw, Sun River reclamation project, Montana, to school district No. 82, Cascade County, Mont., and also lot No. 111 in the town site of Simms, Sun River reclamation project, Montana, to school district No. 39, Cascade County, Mont.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I assume that there is some necessity for this legislation although the report does not indicate what it is. Have they not got the sites for schools for educational purposes?

Miss RANKIN. In the reclamation projects they have made no provision for school sites. This is to give school sites in these two townships. The town sites are laid out by the Reclamation Service. It is on Government land.

Mr. WALSH. There is no reservation in reclamation projects for school purposes?

Miss RANKIN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is an informal matter to which I wish to call the attention of the lady from Montana. There is an obvious customary clause omitted in line 1. It reads "that the Secretary of the Interior be hereby authorized." The customary language is "that the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized." The word "be" should be stricken out and "is" inserted.

Miss RANKIN. Then I ask unanimous consent to so amend the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is no information whatever in the report upon this bill. It is one of those reports sent in by the Secretary of the Interior Department and gives no information whatever. The so-called report describes the bill, and the description of the bill occupies most of the report, and then we find the following language:

Upon investigation of the matter I find that there would be no objection to the issue of such patent to the school districts, and I therefore suggest favorable action on the bill.

That is about the limit! We go far enough in accepting the reports of the departments of the Government, and I have always insisted that we have a report from the department, but the object of that is to get information. There is no information here about this case. Although I do not know anything about it, having no information whatever before me, I presume that we have already given the State of Montana her proportionate share of school lands, and generally where additional lands are desired, it has been the practice to permit the school districts to acquire them upon paying the minimum price per acre. Whether there is an acre or more here I do not know. Probably no one else here knows how much there is. The Secretary of the Interior has not given us that information. All we know is that it is lot 111 in the town site of Fort Shaw, and a lot of the same number in the town site of Fort Simms. Does anybody know how much the lot is?

Mr. EVANS. As a Representative from Montana, I will state that I do not.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I surveyed a great many of these lots——

Mr. MANN. That may be true, but the gentleman has not surveyed lot 111, has he?

Mr. BAER. I may have surveyed this lot in the city of Simms, and that is what I was about to refer to. The average size of the lots run about 50 by 140.

Mr. MANN. Nobody knows whether this is the average size lot or not. I have had a good deal to do with lots myself, and I know quite a good deal about it, but when the Committee on the Public Lands comes before the House with a bill to give away public land, it ought to give us some information, and when a bill is referred to the Department of the Interior for information, that department ought to give some information in addition to redescribing the title of the bill.

The Secretary has given us a report about 10 or 12 lines long, and all but a couple of lines of the report repeat information already in the bill. Out of respect to the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN], and because she will not be with us in the next House, which I very much regret [applause], I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, because the amount involved can not be very much; but I shall in the future, as I have in the past, object to considering bills of this character by unanimous consent which come before the House with no information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk again reported the bill for amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Although the bill is not in the customary form, yet because it is a Senate bill, and because the intent of Congress is known, I shall not press the amendment I suggested in respect to the form of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Miss RANKIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GIG HARBOR MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11219) providing for the appraisal and sale of the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if the Clerk has a star print of the bill? A number of amendments were reported by the committee, but they are not shown on the print of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a print known as Calendar No. 327, carrying the same matter as the bill H. R. 11219, which is the bill carrying numerous amendments suggested by the Department of the Interior and adopted by the Committee on the Public Lands. This bill is the same as the bill H. R. 8749, and that bill was reintroduced to cover certain amendments requested by the Interior Department.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I have no way of telling what the committee had in its mind, but this is what the committee reports:

The revised bill is H. R. 11219, which the Committee on the Public Lands recommends with the following amendments.

If those are not amendments to H. R. 11219, then the committee has expressed itself in a very unfortunate way.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The committee made three additional amendments. I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the bill, but will let us make the amendments on the floor.

Mr. MANN. I asked if there was a star print, thinking perhaps that the gentleman on looking at the bill would find that the amendments were not reported and would have a star print of it made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to say that in order to conform to requests of various departments, I am about to offer still another amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman why the bill carries a provision that only one-tenth of the appraised value shall be paid in cash and the balance in nine equal installments, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is following the plan heretofore followed in legislation affecting abandoned military reservations in that section of the United States. There were and are still a number of them, most of them small. This one is only eighty-odd acres.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, where we have heretofore granted deferred payment it has usually been for a period of no longer than five years and the interest rate has been not less than 5 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think these proposed provisions are about the same as in the cases of abandoned military reservations 23 and 24. At any rate, it comes up from the Interior Department fully recommended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman believe when you are going to sell land under deferred payments that it should not be as low a rate as 4 per cent?

Mr. MANN. We have frequently done it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall be satisfied with any reasonable per cent of interest.

Mr. MANN. Of course the interest rate has increased some, but we have frequently done it at 4 per cent.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the interest rate in the gentleman's State?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It varies, but I presume it is 8 per cent generally in the State of Washington.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The gentleman will understand that 8 per cent would be on short loans, but 6 per cent is the rate on real estate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it should be 5 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not object to any reasonable figure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. When will amendments to the respective sections be in order—at the conclusion of the reading of the sections or the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the first reading of the bill. If gentlemen desire to offer amendments, there can be a second reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in sections 5 and 8, all in township 21 north, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, in the county of Pierce and in the State of Washington, be caused by the Department of the Interior to be surveyed and subdivided into tracts and lots to conform as far as practicable to the tracts and lots lawfully occupied by the tenants thereon on December 5, 1917.

SEC. 2. That after said survey and the approval thereof by the Commissioner of the General Land Office the plat thereof shall be filed in the office of the register and receiver in the manner provided by law, and thereafter any lawful lessee in actual occupancy on December 5, 1917, of any portion of the lands described in section 1 hereof who made actual settlement thereon in good faith under the terms of a lease by the War Department, or a sublease thereunder on said date, or the heirs or assignees of such lessee or sublessee, shall be entitled to purchase for the appraised value one of such surveyed tracts so occupied, no right of purchase of such lessee or sublessee to exceed the lands actually occupied and improved by him on December 5, 1917, and in no case exceeding 10 acres in a body, according to Government surveys and subdivisions thereof, upon the payment to the Government of a sum of money equal to the appraisal value thereof, such appraisement to be made as provided by law: Provided, That payment to the Government may be made in one sum, or one-tenth cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments, with interest at 4 per cent per annum, as the purchaser may elect.

SEC. 3. That if any tract of the lands described in section 1 hereof be not purchased by the lessee or sublessees, his heirs or assigns, as provided in section 2 of this act, within 90 days after the same becomes subject to purchase under the provisions of this act, then and in that event the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of the remaining lands under the provisions of the act of Congress of July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations," and the said lessees, sublessees, heirs or assigns, in occupancy of lawfully leased tracts on December 5, 1917, who do not purchase such tracts shall have the privilege of removing from their tracts any and all improvements made thereon, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reappraise any unsold tracts from time to time before offering the same for sale under said act of July 5, 1884.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House consider amendments proposed in the report on this bill, beginning with page 2, line 15, after the word "law" insert the following——

Mr. MANN. It should be page 2, line 18.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; page 2, line 18, add the following amendment: After the word "law" insert the following:

Provided, That in making such appraisements the appraisers shall not include the improvements thereon made by the occupants of such land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "law" insert the following:
"Provided, That in making such appraisements the appraisers shall not include the improvements thereon made by the occupants of such land."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The next amendment is, page 2, line 21, after the word "annum" insert the words "payable annually."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "annum" insert the words "payable annually."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer an amendment to the section under consideration. Line 21, page 2, strike out the word "four" and insert "five."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 21, strike out the word "four" and insert the word "five."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, Mr. Speaker, another committee amendment. Page 3, line 11, strike out the words "and all improvements made thereon" and insert the words "buildings placed thereon."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the words "and all improvements made thereon" and insert the words "buildings placed thereon."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, since this report was made by the Committee on the Public Lands, dated January 15, this year, carrying with it a report from the Interior Department, dated April 1, 1918, that department has made a supplementary report, dated February 12, this year, asking for an amendment providing for a place for a light post site. I feel that in good faith I should offer the amendment as suggested in the supplementary report from the Interior Department, and I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 3, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That any land needed for lighthouse or roadway purposes may be segregated or reserved for such use, and the land so segregated or reserved shall not be subject to disposal hereunder."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, is there a lighthouse at this harbor now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There may be a light post. This speaks of a light post. I think there is not a full-fledged lighthouse there. The Department of Commerce, however, has written the Department of the Interior asking for a reservation, and names one particular lot, lot 1, as desirable to be reserved for lighthouse purposes, and asks for the reservation of a roadway through lots 4 and 5. This amendment is to cover that.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this does not cover it. It would cover lots 1, 2, and 3; this amendment would cover several lots.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, it might, of course, but not likely, unless bureaucracy simply runs wild. This designation of lots 1, 4, 5, and so on, is not, I believe, official. Therefore I can not propose designation by lots in the amendment. This is but an 80-acre tract of land.

Mr. WALSH. Eighty acres; but if the Department of Commerce wants 80 acres for a lighthouse site, which the War Department no longer needs for a military reservation, and the Interior Department does not dispose of under present law, the gentleman has no objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, well, I might as well say I have no objection. I hope it will not be that way. I get so tired, I will say to the gentleman, of running down, hat in hand, to this department and kow-towing to that department on some small thing that ought to be passed through Congress on its own merits, and getting reports and supplemental reports and departmental amendments and committee amendments, that I have given up all thought of having these various abandoned military reservation bills put through with uniform provisions. I have to take what I can get and swallow all amendments, foolish or otherwise. You can not get a bill out of committee until you have received a favorable report on it from some bureau, and then the committee will not let the bill come to the House until it hangs on a few amendments just to show its authority. This bill is a case in point.

Mr. WALSH. I understand. The gentleman is now offering an amendment from the department to the House that has not even been considered by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is sent to me by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I am presenting it simply as a matter of good faith. I would be glad to specify the particular lot No. 1, but I do not know as it officially has that designation in an abandoned military reservation.

Mr. WALSH. I will not object. I wanted to draw out that information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly.

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman is considerable of a runner when it comes to attending to business in the departments of the Government. If it will relieve him, I want him to have this.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, of course, it is some relief; this bill has been so amended that its own father would not recognize any part of it, and can not take much pride in it. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Under the permission just granted, I desire to place in the RECORD the supplemental report from the Interior Department, to which I have referred. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 12, 1919.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: This department is in receipt of a letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, dated January 16, 1919, in which he suggests that if practicable there be reserved for the purpose of the Lighthouse Service of the Department of Commerce a sufficient area for a post light on lot 1, section 8, township 21 east, range 2 east, western meridian, Washington, together with a right of way to such reservation over said lot 1, and also over lots 5 and 6, section 5, said township and range. The lands described are included in the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation.

Said letter calls attention to the fact that there is pending before Congress bill H. R. 8749, which provides for the appraisal and sale of said lands and requests that, unless there be objection to so doing, this department take such steps as may be necessary to enable the reservation for lighthouse purposes and to see that the proposed legislation if enacted into law will not in any way interfere with the interests of the Lighthouse Service in case the land and right of way be reserved as requested.

It does not appear that the lands needed for lighthouse purposes are occupied by any settler, and in view of the suggestions made by the Acting Secretary of Commerce it is recommended that bill H. R. 8749 be amended by adding thereto a fourth section reading as follows:

"That any lands needed for lighthouse or roadway purposes may be segregated or reserved for such use, and the lands so segregated or reserved shall not be subject to disposal hereunder."

The amendment of the bill in the manner suggested would enable the reservation of the lands needed for lighthouse purposes and also the lands required to afford a means of ingress thereto and egress therefrom.

Cordially, yours,

(Signed) F. K. LANE,
Secretary.

Mr. Speaker, it will be noted that the Lighthouse Service designates clearly the tract or lot it desires to reserve, and the portions of lots to provide an approach or roadway. For reasons stated, I have not designated in the amendment to the bill the lots by number, but the intent and purpose is clear.

BRIDGE ACROSS CONNECTICUT RIVER, IN MASSACHUSETTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13369) granting consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in said county and Commonwealth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the city of Springfield, in said county, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Connecticut River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the city of Springfield and the town of West Springfield, in the county of Hampden, in the State of Massachusetts, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "the," strike out: "consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hampden, in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the city of Springfield, in said county, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Connecticut River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation between the city of Springfield and the town of West Springfield, in the county of Hampden, in the State of Massachusetts, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906"; and insert the following:

"That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved August 25, 1916, to be built across the Connecticut River between the city of Springfield and the town of West Springfield, in Hampden County, Mass., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill reported unanimously from the committee. It simply extends the time for constructing a highway bridge.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the objectionable stage passed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. GILLETT. I can not conceive that anybody will object, so I will allow the bill to be put for passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "To extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in Hampden County, Mass."

MODOC NATIONAL FOREST, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17) to include certain lands in the counties of Modoc and Siskiyou, Cal., in the Modoc National Forest, Cal., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman who is interested in this bill explain the purpose that is expected to be accomplished?

Mr. RAKER. The purpose of the bill is to add additional territory to the national forest. Before the committee at the same time was the bill S. 1847, and we agreed upon amendments to the Senate bill, which passed on the last Unanimous Consent Calendar, a bill that came from the Senate and was reported by Mr. TAYLOR for Mr. MONDELL. In H. R. 17, which has been pending for some time, we finally corrected the language sufficiently to harmonize it, leaving it to cover such land as the Secretary of Agriculture might ask to go on, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. This is a tract of land that practically everyone in the community wants to be added to the forest reserve for protection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice the following language in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. RAKER. We have corrected that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says:

From the reports of forest officers it is learned that these tracts do not support commercial timber in sufficient quantities, nor is the forest cover thereon of sufficient value for stream-flow protection to warrant inclusion within the national forest for national-forest purposes.

Mr. RAKER. We have corrected that, on page 2 of the bill, lines 15 and 16, where we have added:

with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

So only such land goes in there as the Secretary of Agriculture requests and the Secretary of the Interior insists, for stream flow. It is identically the language of the bill that we passed last week. The committee had both bills up at the same time, and used practically the same language so as to cover the addition to the national forest.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. This takes in about 2,200 acres.

Mr. RAKER. It takes more than that in. It is a larger tract. There are two tracts, one on the west side of the county, near a large tract, and there are only about 1,000 acres on the east side, which squares up with the Modoc National Forest and Fremont National Forest in Oregon. The Forest Service is very anxious about that being put in there. It was requested by everybody in that community.

Mr. WALSH. It is a large tract to square up the lines. What has that to do with the merits of the proposition, the having of about 2,000 acres to square up a line?

Mr. RAKER. The larger tract is over 22,000 acres.

Mr. WALSH. It may be; but there is nothing in the report that says anything of how large that larger tract is.

Mr. RAKER. Well, that is true; it does not.

Mr. WALSH. Why does it not?

Mr. RAKER. We used the same report. The same conditions existed in this as in the other, and no one raised the objection. We did not think it was necessary, because everybody in that community and in that country have filed petitions, and they have been sent down to the department, and the matter was presented to the committee that such land as may be needed for these purposes, namely, for the production of timber and the protection of stream flow and the proper preservation of the feeding pasturage on that land should be included.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I notice this language in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture:

It would seem to be the wiser policy to take this matter up as a whole and provide for regulative grazing on all the public domain, not otherwise disposed of, so long as it is under Government ownership. If, however, the Congress decides to add the lands in question to the Modoc National Forest at this time, the department would have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. May I answer that?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The policy of the department is that they desire to class in all the public lands remaining in the United States in the forest reserves.

Mr. WALSH. "Class in"?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. They desire that they should make the land part of the forest reserves; in other words, extend the forest reserve law over the remaining public domain. The committee has never been favorable to that, and the people are not favorable to it. He therefore says that as a general policy, but that if these people want to grant the tract, just as you granted last week in the case of a similar kind of tract in Wyoming, to add to a national forest if the people desire it, he approved that inclusion and that addition to the national forest.

Mr. WALSH. Now, that is the objection of the Secretary of Agriculture. I would like to read to the gentleman what the Secretary of the Interior says.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to read that to you, if you will permit.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman is going to answer it in the manner in which he answered the objection of the Secretary of Agriculture, he need not do so, because I do not think he answered it.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will put his question, I will answer it. I am familiar with the matter.

Mr. WALSH. I know. That is why I am asking the gentleman the question.

Mr. RAKER. The Department of Agriculture desires to classify or place in the national forest all the remaining public lands of the United States. The committee and the people are not favorable to that. Now, he says if these people in this community desire a small tract to be added to the national forest, he is favorable to it, but that there should be a general policy. The committee reported this unanimously, as they reported another similar bill two weeks ago, and therefore this particular tract of land is to be added to this particular forest under the law creating and setting aside that national forest.

Mr. WALSH. Which measure does the gentleman refer to, of two weeks ago?

Mr. RAKER. Senate bill 1847.

Mr. WALSH. What was that tract?

Mr. RAKER. That was in reference to some land added to the national forest in Wyoming; a tract of land.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, they did not have the objection of two Secretaries to that. But here is what the Secretary of the Interior says in regard to the policy of Congress for classification of lands suitable for stock-raising homesteads:

In view of this policy, of the classification contemplated by said act, and of the demand for homesteads, I do not believe the area in question should be added to the national forest or otherwise reserved at this time.

I would like to have the gentleman answer that objection.

Mr. RAKER. In answer to that the committee amended the bill so as to include, on page 2, lines 15 and 16, the following language: "With the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that means that what Congress has directed shall meet with his approval before it is done.

Mr. RAKER. No. The Secretary of Agriculture requests certain lands to be designated and added to this forest. He presents that report to the Secretary of the Interior. If the Secretary of the Interior objects to the particular tracts, they are eliminated and only those tracts that the two departments agree upon are classified into the national forest.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, of course if that is so the Secretary of the Interior can entirely nullify this act, and it is likely that he will in view of his adverse report. If he is going to nullify the act, what is the use of passing it?

Mr. RAKER. Two weeks ago we passed another bill——

Mr. WALSH. Yes. The gentleman has already referred to that.

Mr. RAKER. I do that for the purpose of showing that the committee had these two bills before it at the same time and amended them in the same way. If lands are chiefly valuable for these purposes, they may be included in the national forest. We amended the Senate bill 1847, and we dealt with the bill H. R. 17 in the same way, adding certain lands to the Modoc National Forest.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY, SAN DIEGO, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3646) to grant rights of way over Government land for dam and reservoir purposes, for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the city of San Diego, Cal., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have looked over this bill hastily, and it seems to me to be important enough not to be considered in the way it will get consideration here if it is taken up, and therefore I will object.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois reserve his objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I reserve it.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the gentleman from Illinois that this bill has passed the Committee on Public Lands twice and has passed the Senate. It is approved by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Indian Commissioner; in fact, it has been approved by all the departments. It means a great deal to the city of San Diego as a water supply for the city, which is growing very rapidly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, conceding that to be true, what do we know about it? Here you are taking certain public lands that are reserved for certain purposes and giving them away to a municipality or permitting the municipality to take them. What do the Members of this House know about it and what do I know about it? I am entitled to be reasonably informed, it seems to me.

Mr. KETTNER. We have a favorable report here from the Committee on Public Lands, who considered the bill very carefully, and I would like to inform the gentleman that all California cities have had to acquire their water supply in a similar way. The city of Los Angeles had a bill pass the Congress granting a water supply from Owens River. Congress granted the Hetch Hetchy water supply to the city of San Francisco, and several similar bills have passed the House for cities in the State of Oregon.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will take the floor and go into this new plan, so that I and other Members of the House may know about it, I shall not object; but I do not propose to sit here and consent to the passage of a bill like this by unanimous consent without knowing what it is.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until the gentleman from California can explain the bill? This is a very important matter. It involves the water supply of the city of San Diego.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has reserved the right to object.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes, I have reserved it.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, water is king in California. I think the gentleman is aware of that fact. The city of San Diego has grown very fast in the last two years. The census of 1910 gives San Diego something like 39,000 people. At the present time we have over 100,000, and we must have water. This proposition was taken up by the land office in Los Angeles and considered some two weeks by the register and receiver, and they both reported unanimously that the city should have this water supply. I introduced the bill over a year ago, and it was thoroughly investigated by the Indian Department. The Hon. Mr. Cato Sells made a trip to California to investigate this matter, and he reported favorably upon it. The Secretary of the Interior reported favorably. Some of the members of the Committee on the Public Lands, who considered this bill, made a trip to San Diego and went over this dam site, and reported favorably. In fact, everyone who has seen it and studied the question has reported favorably. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. How much land is proposed to be taken?

Mr. FERRIS. It is only a right of way.

Mr. KETTNER. The land is mountainous. It is a dam site that we want. It is a narrow valley with steep cliffs on both sides. The land is not worth anything.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I understand, this land is not useful for any other purpose whatever.

Mr. FERRIS. It is a barren waste.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman, under the reservation of objection, whether the rights of the municipalities up the valley would be impaired by the granting of this privilege to the city of San Diego?

Mr. KETTNER. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been called to my attention from outside sources that if we should grant this privilege to San Diego it would interfere with the municipalities up the valley, whose names I have forgotten, in getting additional water supply.

Mr. KETTNER. I would like to explain to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman cited the outrageous action of this House some years back in granting the right to overflow the most beautiful valley in California outside of the Yosemite, that known as Hetch Hetchy. That was done upon misrepresentation to this House. With others I voted for that without full knowledge of the facts. It was represented to be for drinking-water purposes, when in fact it was a water-power proposition. If the full facts had been disclosed to the House I question very much whether we would have followed Mr. Pinchot and Secretary Lane in granting that privilege. Now, I wish to ask, in this connection, is this for the purpose of securing a water supply or is it for the purpose of obtaining water power?

Mr. KETTNER. Purely for a water supply. It is not high enough for power.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been represented that San Diego has other sources of supply that are available besides this.

Mr. KETTNER. We are trying to develop some other sources. The city is growing very fast, and both the Army and the Navy have recently established new activities there, such as the cantonment and the naval training station. The water is absolutely needed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the Senate bill has many objectionable phases in merely granting a right of way over public lands without compelling the city of San Diego to exercise those rights at any definite time in the future.

Mr. KETTNER. We do not want the Senate bill. We want the House bill. And in answer to the gentleman's former question, I will state that I am firmly convinced that the cities of La Mesa and El Cajon will be better protected under this bill than they are at the present time. I believe that the city of San Diego will purchase the Cuyamaca water-supply system from Mr. Fletcher. If they do not I feel certain they will not be able to carry the bonds to build the dam. I believe it is in the interest of Mr. Fletcher; I believe it is in the interest of the cities of La Mesa and El Cajon and also of the city of San Diego. I would not be in favor of voting bonds to build this dam unless the city of San Diego first purchased the Cuyamaca water system from Mr. Fletcher.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman says it is in the interest of Mr. Fletcher and of these two other towns. Have they withdrawn their objection?

Mr. KETTNER. I do not think so. That is, Mr. Fletcher has not, but Mr. Fletcher has absolutely no confidence in some of our city officials; but I am firmly convinced that the city will not be able to vote the bonds unless they purchase the Cuyamaca system from Mr. Fletcher at a price to be fixed by the State utilities commission.

Mr. MAYS. Does the gentleman believe this bill fully safeguards the rights of Mr. Fletcher and of these other cities and towns?

Mr. KETTNER. I do.

Mr. MAYS. In what respect?

Mr. KETTNER. In every way.

Mr. MAYS. Does the bill contain any provision carrying protection to these towns?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes; it carries the clause that all these bills carry, that no rights which anyone possesses under the State laws of California shall be taken away.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Further reserving the right to object, I have not got very much information yet as as far as I am concerned, but I assume that if the gentlemen in the country where this is located have no objections, perhaps I should not block the passage of the bill. Therefore I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand from the gentleman from California that if consent is given for the consideration of this Senate bill, it is his purpose to offer the House bill as a substitute?

Mr. KETTNER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS). This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate bill and read the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Senate bill and read the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the House bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the south half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 8; the west half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter and the west half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 9, all in township 15 south, range 2 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, within the Cleveland National Forest; and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 15; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the northwest quarter, the north half of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 22; the west half of the northwest quarter of section 27; and the east half of the northeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of section 28; and the northeast quarter, the west half of the southeast quarter, the east half of the southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33, all in township 14 south, range 2 east, San Bernardino base and meridian; also the north half of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 3, and lots 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and the south half of section 4, all in township 15 south, range 2 east, San Bernardino base and meridian within the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation, and all within the county of San Diego and State of California, are hereby granted to the city of San Diego, a municipal corporation in said county and State, for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation and storage of water, whenever said city shall have provided compensation as hereinafter specified for all property rights and interests and damages done to Mission Indians located upon the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation: Provided, That the lands herein granted shall not be sold, assigned, transferred, or conveyed to any private person, corporation, or association; and in case of any attempt to sell, assign, transfer, or convey, or upon a failure to use and apply said lands exclusively to the purposes herein specified, this grant shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the lands herein granted are and shall be subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person, persons, or corporation in or to the above-described premises, or any part thereof, and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States, and no private right, title, interest, or claim of any person, persons, or corporation in or to any of such lands shall be interfered with or abridged, except with the consent of the owner or owners, or claimant or claimants thereof, or by due process of law and just compensation paid to such owner or claimant: Provided, That the rights and claims of the Mission Indians of the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation, located upon the lands herein described and affected by the grant herein, shall be protected and provided for as hereafter set forth in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. That the law of eminent domain of the State of California is hereby extended over and made to apply to said lands, and the Secretary of the Interior or his duly authorized representative is hereby directed to appear on behalf of, in the name of, and to represent the Capitan Grande Band of Indians and the United States in any proceedings instituted by the city of San Diego to condemn the interest of said Indians in said lands: Provided, That any judgment or order of condemnation entered in such proceeding shall be binding upon said Capitan Grande Band of Indians only upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the terms of said judgment: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall require from the city of San Diego in addition to the award of condemnation such further sum which, in his opinion, when added to said award, will be sufficient in the aggregate to provide for the purchase of additional lands for the Capitan Grande Band of Indians, the erection of suitable homes for the Indians on the lands so purchased, the erection of such schools, churches, and administrative buildings, the sinking of such wells and the construction of such roads and ditches, and providing water and water rights, and for such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior to properly establish these Indians permanently on the lands purchased for them; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the proceeds, or any part thereof, derived from this grant for the purposes above enumerated, for the exclusive use and benefit of said Indians: And provided further, That the grant made in this act shall not become effective until payment has been made of the sums herein provided for.

SEC. 4. That within one year after the approval of this act the city of San Diego shall commence condemnation proceedings to acquire the lands herein described and shall diligently prosecute such proceedings to a final judgment. Within two years after the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of any such judgment of condemnation the city of San Diego shall institute, and thereafter shall diligently prosecute, proceedings for the issuance and sale of municipal bonds to defray the amount necessary to satisfy any such judgment of condemnation, paying such additional sum as the Secretary of the Interior may require, as provided for in section 3, and providing for the acquisition, construction, and completion of a dam, reservoir, pipe line, and appurtenances thereto necessary or convenient to the storage and conservation of water upon the lands herein described for the purposes set forth in this bill. Within six months from the time of payment into the city treasury of the moneys realized from the sale of municipal bonds issued as herein provided the city of San Diego shall commence the construction of said dam and reservoir, and the same shall be prosecuted diligently, and no cessation of such construction shall continue for a period of three consecutive years, and in the event that the Secretary of the Interior shall find and determine that there has not been diligent prosecution of the work or that there has been a cessation of such construction for a period of three consecutive years, or that said condemnation proceedings have not been commenced and diligently prosecuted, or that municipal bonds have not been issued and sold as herein provided, then he may declare forfeited all rights of the grantees herein and request the Attorney General, on behalf of the United States, to commence suits or proceedings in the proper court having jurisdiction thereof for the purpose of procuring a judgment declaring all rights to be forfeited to the United States, and upon such request it shall be the duty of said Attorney General to cause to be commenced and prosecuted to a final judgment such suits or proceedings: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make no such findings and take no such action if he shall find that the issuance or sale of municipal bonds or the construction or progress of the dam or reservoir has been delayed or prevented by the act of God or the public enemy or by legal, engineering, or other difficulties that could not have been reasonably foreseen and overcome, or by other special or peculiar difficulties beyond the control of said grantee: Provided further, That in the exercise of the rights granted by this act the grantee shall at all times comply with the regulations herein authorized, and in the event of any material departure therefrom the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively, may take such action as may be necessary in the courts or otherwise to enforce such regulations: Provided further, That if such dam be built the Indians of the Capitan Grande Reservation shall be permitted to reside on, occupy, and cultivate the lands of their present reservation up until within 90 days of the time when water for storage purposes will be turned into the reservoir to be constructed hereunder, provided such occupancy by the Indians will not materially hinder the construction of the dam and storage work, which fact is to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That said reservoir, when constructed, shall be maintained and controlled by the city of San Diego for the use and benefit of said city and the inhabitants thereof, and of such other municipalities within the county of San Diego, State of California, as may be now or hereafter furnished with water by said city of San Diego, and for the use and benefit of riparian owners along the San Diego River below the lands herein described, and for the benefit of persons, corporations, or municipalities situated along or adjacent to the pipe lines of said city of San Diego for the conservation and storage of water for domestic, irrigation, or municipal uses: Provided, That the city of San Diego shall sell to the United States for the use of the War and Navy Departments such water as the War and Navy Departments, or either of them, may elect to take, and shall deliver the same through its system in or near the city of San Diego to the mains or systems of such military or naval reservations in that vicinity as may be designated by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or both, under such rules and regulations as they or either of them may prescribe. In payment of such water and the delivery thereof the United States shall pay to said city of San Diego a rental to be calculated at a fixed rate per 1,000 gallons, said rate not to exceed the actual cost of such water to said city for all water so furnished, as determined by meter measurements: Provided, however, That the grantee shall at all times comply with and observe on its part all of the conditions specified in this act; and in the event that the sums are not reasonably complied with and carried out by the grantee upon written request by the Secretary of the Interior, it is made the duty of the Attorney General, in the name of the United States, to commence all necessary suits or proceedings in the proper court having jurisdiction thereof for the purpose of enforcing and carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That this act is a grant upon certain express conditions specifically set forth herein, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting, or intending to affect, or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or for municipal or other uses, or any vested rights acquired thereunder; and the Secretary of the Interior and the city of San Diego, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall proceed in conformity with the laws of said State.

SEC. 7. That the grantee shall file with the Secretary of the Interior, within six months after the approval of this act, its acceptance of the terms and conditions of this grant.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment. In lines 10 and 11, page 15, strike out, after the word "diligently," the remainder of the line and all of line 11 up to and including the word "years."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 10, after the word "diligently," strike out the language "and no cessation of such construction shall continue for a period of three consecutive years."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, one fear I have had is that we might place certain powers within the hands of the city of San Diego, and by failure to use them they might permanently, or very nearly permanently, tie up the situation, stop developments by private companies, or by other public projects, and not succeed in doing anything themselves.

Section 4 allows them a great deal of time. They have two years after the approval of the judgment, and they have other extensions, and finally after the land is condemned and they pay the money into the Treasury they begin the work of construction of the dam and reservoir. Then, the bill proposes that the same shall be prosecuted diligently, "and no cessation of such construction shall continue for a period of three consecutive years." That to my mind would be a statement that Congress in its judgment thought that any construction would be diligent that did not cease for a period of three years. They might cease construction for 2 years and 11 months, go to work for a week, and then a new three-year period would begin. There would be no end to it. Hence I would omit that language and leave it that "the same shall be prosecuted diligently." Later it goes on to say that if the Secretary of the Interior shall find and determine that there has not been diligent prosecution of the work he may declare the right to forfeit it, and so forth. If this amendment carries, I would omit similar language later down. It seems to me that it does not injure anyone, and it leaves discretion in the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FERRIS. The only thought against that is that it is stated in the negative below.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope to offer an amendment, if this one passes, to cure that.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the amendment. I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to speak out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by many people along the chain of the Great Lakes and have received numerous letters and telegrams urging me to assist in bringing about, if possible, the construction of a ship canal connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic Ocean.

I can see the great commercial value to be derived by the construction of this waterway and the much-needed relief to the delays, inconveniences, and heavy expense incurred by congestion of freight traffic so often encountered on the railroads, especially the great trunk lines from Chicago to the Atlantic tidewater.

It is generally well known that I am a preparedness man; not necessarily a military-preparedness man but an industrial-preparedness man as well.

That I believe in American preparedness; and thus I am personally in favor of a ship canal as nearly as possible entirely within the boundaries of the United States.

We are annually confronted with car shortage to move heavy crops of the Central and Middle Western States that find the Atlantic seaboard the gateway for millions of tonnage for foreign commerce. How often have we heard of the overcrowded condition of warehouses, docks, and piers and railroad terminals; could not the transportation of wheat, for instance, from the great Northwest to the Atlantic seaboard in vessels add greatly to relieving freight congestion and car shortage so often complained of?

If this be true with a part of the wheat crop, is it not true of every other commodity going to the eastern seaboard?

Would not the same condition maintain in westbound freight traffic to Great Lake points?

What we need in this country is a regulation whereby a shipper can send his goods from one point to another over railroads and water lines and give a bill of lading to the point of destination. This canal would cost in round figures a little less than $200,000,000—less than a fifth of the amount alleged to have been spent on aircraft production that rendered no service to this country at all during this war.

I am told that millions of dollars annually are lost by inefficiency of facilities for handling the enormous freight traffic at terminals.

If this be so, and a remedy can be provided by construction of a suitable canal over some properly established route, I think the Congress should move to build it.

I am told it would handle 10,000,000 tons of traffic every year.

That it would pay for itself within a few years.

That it would not only assist the country through which it passed, but would assist the extreme West and save millions of dollars to the people of this country every year.

The question is not whether we can afford to build it, but whether we can afford to be without it.

Let us stop for a moment and realize the long chain of great lakes along our northern border, adjacent to and affording facilities for transporting the products of vast agricultural territory, and along its shores are found many of the largest manufacturing industries of our country, all of which are closely identified with foreign commerce, and yet Congress has failed to provide an American commercial outlet for this great chain of lakes to the Atlantic tidewaters.

It matters little to me what route should be selected; that must depend upon the intelligence and engineering skill of our Government engineers that have to do with this branch of the work; but let us adopt a route, approve plans, and commence the construction of an overwhelmingly and almost indispensably needed artery for freight traffic that will reach every grower and producer east of the Rocky Mountains—if not directly, it will indirectly, by quieting the too-often cry of railroad companies that "We are short of cars and terminals are crowded."

In conformity with the provisions of the sundry civil act of June 4, 1897, to make surveys and examinations of deep waterways and routes most feasible and practicable between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic tidewaters, a board of engineers, appointed by the President, made surveys and examinations, including the estimated cost of deep waterways and the routes for this proposed improvement, and submitted to Congress through the Secretary of War an elaborate report thereon.

It occurs to me that this requisition of Congress, entailing the expenditure of large sums of money for making these surveys and investigations leading up to the location and designation of the most feasible and practical routes, was done for a purpose, and that purpose was designed by the large agricultural and manufacturing interests, and it was intended to build a canal, and any failure on the part of Congress to act was probably caused by the frequent changes in the personnel of Congress or powerful influences outside of Congress.

While I remain in this Congress it will be my constant aim to follow up legislation that will result in the construction of this much-needed waterway, which, according to the estimates of the engineers, will cost $197,393,203.

I therefore have prepared and presented a resolution bearing upon this subject, and at the proper time shall address the House in further detail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in lines 14 and 15 I move to amend by striking out in line 14 all after the words "the work" and striking out in line 15 all up to and including the word "years."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, in line 14, strike out the language after the word "work," "or that there has been a cessation of such construction for a period of three consecutive years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That this act is a grant upon certain express conditions specifically set forth herein, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or for municipal or other uses or any vested rights acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior and the city of San Diego in carrying out the provisions of this act shall proceed in conformity with the laws of said State.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the word "appropriation" is misspelled in line 16, and move that the letters appearing there be stricken out and that the word "appropriation" be inserted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 16, after the word "control" strike out "appropriaion" and insert "appropriation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 5 in order that I may offer an amendment which I think is agreeable to everyone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to section 5. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, to be placed at the end of section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 5, page 18, line 11, the following:
"Provided, That the city of San Diego is authorized to assign all its rights, powers, and privileges under this act to any public water district formed under the laws of California."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, in connection with that amendment permit me to say that I understand from the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER], as made this afternoon upon the floor, and from personal conversation with him, that it is his hope and his expectation that the authority given under this bill may very possibly be used to secure the development of these waters for the use not only of the city of San Diego but of the other communities, chiefly in San Diego County, El Cajon, and La Mesa, and various irrigation projects. In other words, that a number of communities that are entirely dependent for their water supply upon these waters are not to be shut off, but that possibly some project for the common benefit of all may be worked out, and that that may be done under a water district that would include not only the city of San Diego but portions of San Diego County. I understand that that is a fair statement.

Mr. KETTNER. That is a very fair statement, and I concur in it.

Mr. CRAMTON. In addition to that, the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER] is aware that I have had some doubts in my mind about this legislation. Those doubts were aroused not only by my fear that these outside communities were not sufficiently protected but also by some feeling in my mind that there was a personal animosity existing between certain city officials of San Diego active in this project and a private concern, the Cuyamaca Water Co., and that possibly this legislation might not be so much to provide water supply for San Diego as to provide the destruction of the private corporation. The conversation I have had with the gentleman and his assurances have entirely removed my feeling as to that. I understand that those officials are not to predominate in this adjustment, and that these other communities are to be taken care of; in other words, there is to be a sincere effort to bring about a development of that water that will be for the benefit of all.

Section 5 as it is now provides that the "reservoir, when constructed, shall be maintained and controlled by the city of San Diego for the use and benefit of the city" and these other communities, and throughout the section limits the control and ownership to the city of San Diego. Therefore, if the gentleman's hope is realized, that instead of the city of San Diego undertaking this great project a larger water district shall undertake it, the bill would not fit. I have suggested this amendment which does nothing except to provide that if there is such an arrangement brought about and there is a joint effort upon the part of the city of San Diego and the communities of El Cajon and La Mesa, and so forth, to form one large water district, then the rights we give the city of San Diego may be assigned to that larger district. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I will gladly accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill granting to the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes."

On motion of Mr. KETTNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MODOC NATIONAL FOREST, CAL.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill H. R. 17, preceding this, for I believe now there will be no objection to its consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17) to include certain lands in the counties of Modoc and Siskiyou, Cal., in the Modoc National Forest, Cal., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the committee has inserted an amendment in the first section of this bill referring to those portions of the two counties, as follows:

found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be available for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow.

Under that portion of the bill the only land that could be included in the forest would be those lands found to be, by the Secretary of Agriculture, available either for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow. Is that right?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. Well, here is the way it reads, and I ask the gentleman to construe it.

Mr. RAKER. There was a little confusion and I possibly did not get the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. The language of the first paragraph of the amendment proposed by the committee——

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I have it.

Mr. MANN. Reads:

That any land within those certain portions of Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, Cal., found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be available for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, described as follows—may be included in and made part of the national forest.

And so forth—

They are only public lands available for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow——

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. Then what does that mean? That is what it says.

Mr. RAKER. I am trying to answer the gentleman, as I understand it clearly, so there can be no question. Now, turning to page 2——

Mr. MANN. But I am not turning to page 2; I know what is contained on page 2.

Mr. RAKER. That is what it means.

Mr. MANN. According to the first paragraph, no land could be included in the Modoc National Forest unless found by the Secretary of Agriculture either to be available for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, according to the committee amendment which I read.

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. But that is not what the gentleman wants?

Mr. RAKER. Not all of it. I know what the gentleman had in his mind. I was trying to cover it as clearly as I could.

Mr. MANN. Now, the Secretary of Agriculture says, "From the reports of the forest officers it is learned that those tracts do not support available commercial timber in sufficient quantities"—that disposes of the timber proposition—"nor is the forest cover thereon of sufficient value for stream-flow protection to warrant inclusion within the national forest for national forest purposes." That disposes of the second proposition. Now, what does the gentleman want?

Mr. RAKER. I want it for those two purposes, and the further purpose, lines 19 and 20, is for regulation and for improving the grazing thereon.

Mr. MANN. But the Secretary of Agriculture has reported that it is useless for the two first purposes he named, and yet under the committee amendment those are the only two purposes. I say to the gentleman from California if this bill passes in the form it is in, with the committee amendment, it will not add an inch, not a square inch, to the Modoc National Forest.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, as I view it in talking with officials, it will only include the greater part; but what I would like, if the committee will consent to it, in line 6, page 1, after the word "flow," is to insert the words "or regulation and improvement of grazing thereon."

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman wants?

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Yet the committee amendment would exclude that entirely——

Mr. RAKER. Well, I thought that was one object it will include.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether the committee thought it will or not, but evidently they did not. Here is a bill designed to include in a national forest land in order to regulate and improve grazing thereon, and the committee proposed an amendment which would exclude that, and so they give the right to add land for purposes which the Secretary of Agriculture says do not exist.

Mr. RAKER. Well, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. And leaves it to him?

Mr. RAKER. I will try to get an amendment if I can to change it, because that is what I want to get.

Mr. MANN. I believe in adding to these national forests, so I will not object. I am trying to help the gentleman out; I do not always do it, but I usually do it.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hear none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That those certain portions of Modoc and Siskiyou Counties, Cal., described as follows, to wit:

Commencing at that point on the California-Oregon State line where the same crosses the west line of the Modoc National Forest, being in section 29, township 48 north, range 8 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence southerly and westerly, following the meanderings of the said west line of said Modoc National Forest to the point where the same crosses the south line of township 45 north, range 4 east, Mount Diablo meridian, at the southeast corner of section 34 in said township; thence west following the section lines to the southwest corner of township 45 north, range 3 east, Mount Diablo meridian; thence north along the township line between ranges 2 and 3 to the point where the same crosses or intersects the California-Oregon State line; thence east along said State line to the point of beginning; also all of sections 34 and 35, township 48 north, range 16 east, and the west half of section 2 and all of section 3, in township 47 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, be, and the same are hereby, included in and made a part of Modoc National Forest, Cal., for the purpose of regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon, and thereafter to be governed, controlled, and used under the same rules and regulations now in force or to be hereafter adopted governing said Modoc National Forest.

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 3, after the word "that" insert the words "any lands within."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "California" insert "found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be available for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to be added after the word "flow": "or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 1, line 6, amend the committee amendment after the word "flow" by inserting the words "or regulation and improvement of the grazing thereon."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 15, after the word "meridian," insert the words "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 16, after the word "be," strike out the comma and the words "and the same are hereby."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 18, after the word "California," insert the words "by proclamation of the President."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 19, at the beginning of the line, insert the words "production of timber, protection of stream flow, or."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for five days on account of attendance on a conference committee.

WAR MOTHERS OF AMERICA.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 15608.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15608) to incorporate the War Mothers of America.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is none.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ashbrook	Edmonds	Langley	Scully

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 290 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

During the reading the following occurred:

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. That there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Oh, we just counted one.

After the reading:

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. CRAMTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DENTON] asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] objects. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Michigan will take their places as tellers.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order at this time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. That is dilatory. We just had a quorum counted.

The SPEAKER. It has not been more than five minutes since 290 Members answered to their names.

Mr. CRAMTON. It has been long enough to have them disappear.

The SPEAKER. The Chair construes that demand as dilatory and appoints the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DENTON] as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 50.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules does not receive a second.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 5038, with certain committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5038) extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, and authorizing the Federal Board for Vocational Education to accept gifts and donations for specific purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, together with the items of appropriation made by said act, are hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper for the payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act, and the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment and for supplementing any or all of the other items of appropriation made by said act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would it be proper for me to inquire, as there is a great number of Members here who would like to know, whether the calling of the Unanimous Consent Calendar is going to be resumed for the consideration of bills thereon this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has agreed to recognize certain gentlemen. He agreed to do it a good while ago. The number has increased until there are now 24 of them. Of course the Chair does not undertake to stay here until 24 of them get the rules suspended. If the House wants to return to the Unanimous Consent Calendar after two more of these bills have been disposed of the Chair will have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is one of the two, then?

The SPEAKER. This and the next one. Then the Chair would have no objection to returning to the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the Chair kindly indicate what are the other bills where he will recognize gentlemen to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. One of them is by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], about a court.

Mr. WALSH. That is passed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman say that the gentleman from Texas has got his bill passed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The next one coming after that of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is that of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], and then one by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY].

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there will be much opposition to mine. It is so urgent that I wanted to be sure to get it up.

The SPEAKER. And Mr. RAYBURN'S bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think those bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be reached.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised this morning to recognize two gentlemen some time to-day, but the Chair has no sort of doubt but that half of these gentlemen on the list can get their bills passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a most important bill next on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and a number more.

Mr. WALSH. Several Senate bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; there are several Senate bills that should be passed, and passed expeditiously.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] here?

Mr. STAFFORD. We passed this morning a private claims bill which had no right on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Still we passed it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was very generous. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I try to be generous at the close of a Congress.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to take my chances on the last six days.

The SPEAKER. All right. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] comes next. The Chair will recognize Mr. FOSTER and Mr. CARTER.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am willing to take my chances on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. If you are going to call this calendar through, I will have no objection to taking my chances along with everybody else.

The SPEAKER. When we get through with the bill submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], then——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman withdraw his request for a second?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. While the good humor is on, why can we not get unanimous consent for the consideration of the Bankhead bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not proposed to ask unanimous consent that a second be ordered.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not give unanimous consent for its consideration?

Mr. STAFFORD. All right; go ahead.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill S. 5038, with sundry committee amendments.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is on the understanding that there will be none of the others called up.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] would indicate that it does not require unanimous consent that there shall be further suspensions to-day. I want to state that the Speaker kindly put me on the list. It is true I am very far down on the list, but I want a chance to move to suspend the rules and pass a public building bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not be reached under this suspension business for a week.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I might if we should go on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is away down on the list.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I do not want to if unanimous consent is required, but if none is required I will object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to move to suspend the rules, and a suggestion came from somewhere to take up this bill by unanimous consent instead of wasting time to suspend the rules. The Chair asks if there is any objection to taking it up that way?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right, Mr. Speaker, I think there should be some explanation of the bill before that is done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I intend to explain the bill. Is there any objection, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew my reservation of the objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it will all be declared off. The gentleman from Alabama is going to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to suspend the rules. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the special fund for vocational education authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, together with the items of appropriation made by said act, are hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein prescribed, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper for the payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act, and the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment, and for supplementing any or all of the other items of appropriation made by said act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, is a second demanded?

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? The Chair will ask the gentleman from Alabama, Are the amendments already in this bill, or does the gentleman propose to amend it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are printed in italics.

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a second.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Chair appoints Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. CANNON to act as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes none.

Accordingly a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to secure, if possible, the attention of the House while I make an effort, as briefly as possible, to explain the purposes and the necessity for the passage of this bill. It will be recalled that section 7 of the act providing for the rehabilitation of wounded and disabled soldiers, which was approved on June 27, 1918, provided that the board was authorized and empowered to receive gifts or donations from either public or private sources, offered unconditionally, and that the moneys received as gifts or donations should be paid into the Treasury of the United States and constitute a permanent fund, to be called the special fund for vocational rehabilitation, and to be used under the direction of said board in connection with the appropriations then made or hereafter to be made to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation.

Section 8 of the bill appropriated an aggregate sum of $2,000,000 for the purpose of carrying it into effect.

When the joint committees of the House and Senate were having hearings to frame up this legislation, Dr. Prosser and others who were interested in the proposition, when asked to make an estimate of the amount of money that would be required for its operation for the first fiscal year, estimated that it would require the sum of $2,000,000; but on account of the well-known objections in both Houses of Congress to making lump-sum appropriations, it was suggested to him that he should undertake to budget the different items to be appropriated and used for the different purposes of the bill, and at that time it was very frankly conceded that it would be impossible to make an accurate estimate of the amount that would be used for each particular purpose. But in undertaking to do that, there were two items in section 8 of the bill to which I desire to call attention, and which are affected by the bill now pending before the House, one of them an item for renting and remodeling buildings and quarters, repairing, maintaining and equipping same, and for equipment and other facilities necessary for proper instruction of disabled persons, $250,000.

There is another item in the bill amounting to $545,000 for tuition for disabled persons pursuing courses in existing institutions, public or private.

In the course of the practical administration of the vocational rehabilitation act for disabled soldiers it has developed that the board did not require the amount of $250,000 provided in the first item I read for rent and so forth, but, as a matter of fact, on account of existing facilities, it has only become necessary for them to expend a small portion of that item.

It has also further developed that in the administration of the law up to date the board found that at the different institutions of learning in the States—the universities, normal schools, and other places where the States had provided the facilities for instruction of this character—the State authorities absolutely refused to require any compensation whatever, but very generously and patriotically tendered all of their State facilities to cooperate free of charge with the Federal board in the retraining of disabled discharged wounded soldiers. So it has been found that the board would need only a small portion of this item of $545,000 appropriated in the bill for the purpose of tuition.

So that, according to the hearings on the bill, of the amount originally appropriated for these two purposes which I have named there is an unexpended balance of approximately $700,000.

It has further become apparent in the operations of the board that while they do not need these items for the purposes stated, they do need them very seriously and very imperatively for other purposes. We had hearings on this bill. It passed the Senate in December without opposition, and it was explained by Dr. Prosser, Dr. Chandler, and other members of the Vocational Board that it developed that in the discharge of soldiers from the Army and Navy hospitals of the country after they had been physically and functionally rehabilitated it was found impossible, with the limited number of agents in the field, for the Federal board to keep in close and intimate touch with these soldiers or to advise them or confer with them relative to the benefits conferred by this act; so that as a result of this situation, and on account of the very rapid discharge of these disabled soldiers from the various hospitals of the country, thousands of these men who, as a matter of fact, are entitled to receive the benefits of this humanitarian legislation that we passed affecting them, have not had the opportunity even to be informed specifically of the benefits accruing to them under its operations. The purpose of this bill is to authorize the Federal board to spend this unexpended sum—to coalesce these funds into one and spend it for the purpose of sending out their agents to the various hospitals in the country, of which the Army and Navy now have 120. Hundreds of men are being daily discharged from these hospitals without being informed, a great many of them, of the benefits of this act. And you may be surprised to learn that although the Surgeon General's Office promised sympathetic cooperation with the Vocational Board, up until December last the Federal board were deprived of the privilege of having their agents go into these hospitals or of disseminating their literature to these disabled men in the hospitals, and in the meantime thousands of soldiers had left the hospitals without receiving this information.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question.

Mr. WALSH. How many investigators has the board to travel about to these various States to make these inquiries?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I regret that I can not give the gentleman from Massachusetts that information.

Mr. WALSH. If this fund is made available for that purpose, of course the board will eventually have a vast army of them, will it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hardly think that is a fair statement of what it will have. The purpose of the board is to use this money to put into the field a sufficient number of men to carry out adequately the purposes of Congress in passing this legislation, that is all.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Are these investigators to be appointed from civil life?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are to be appointed under civil-service regulations in accordance with the terms of the vocational education bill.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. TOWNER. And it is true that the Surgeon General's department has requested that the men be sent to hospitals so that they may at once be able to confer with those discharged from the hospitals, and thus save time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the regulation now in existence.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Why can not the authorities at the hospitals be required to inform the soldiers of these benefits?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the orders issued on the 10th of December it is made the duty of those in charge of hospitals to inform from now on those disabled soldiers of their rights under the vocational bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Is it not true that the very purpose is to have these agents go to the hospitals, 142 in number, meet the soldiers at the hospitals and give them the benefit of this information, and does not that number—142 hospitals—very nearly answer the question of the gentleman as to the total number of agents that will be required?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct, and in addition I want to say that there are thousands of soldiers entitled to the benefits of this act who have been discharged from hospitals from the Army and the Navy, now occupying the status of civilians, and we desire to get in touch with them. In that connection I want to say that there were, according to recent figures, December 28, 1918, 9,317 men whose compensation under the war-risk insurance, has not yet been determined. It is to be remembered that the vocational board can not undertake to exercise its functions until the awards are made by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I understand from what the gentleman has stated that in all of these 142 hospitals, and elsewhere, orders have been issued that these soldiers shall be fully informed of the benefits of this act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Such orders now exist, but unfortunately for a long time they did not exist.

Mr. CANNON. So there is no necessity for 142 agents or three times 142 agents from civil life being sent out to perform the duty which would turn this charitable appropriation, devoted to another purpose, into an employment fund for people who desire to make a living that way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not agree with the gentleman. The vocational board is administered by districts—12 or 14 districts. They have a district agent with headquarters, and in some districts there would not be any Army hospital at all. The gentleman from Illinois overlooks this important feature, the real spirit and purpose of the vocational act, to wit: That it is the duty of the board to advise, confer, and to talk with these men as to their future trades, to encourage them in taking one of these courses for their future benefit. So we would eliminate that personal factor in the event this legislation is not enacted. That is one of the purposes of the agent.

Mr. CANNON. I am one with the gentleman in giving all the education that practically can be given to these soldiers who have been wounded, so that they may have something to do and learn to do it; but I am fearful when you take this nearly a million dollars and divert it to the employment of people in civil life that it will become not for the aid of the soldier but for the aid of the civilian who is not a soldier.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say that this is not the sole purpose. If you will read the report—and I am sorry I will not have time to go as fully into the matter as I would like—the purpose is to meet a situation of this sort: In many instances men are discharged from the hospitals without any means, without sometimes the opportunity to get home; they are crippled, an arm gone, or a leg gone, or two arms gone, and yet they are cured as far as the hospital is concerned. One purpose is that the fund may be used to give a small financial assistance to such penniless wounded victims.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Where is there any provision in the bill that any part of this sum shall be paid for the expenses of these agents? It says for the payment of expenses of disabled men.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will read on page 2, it says, "and for supplementing any or all the other items of appropriation made by said act."

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. In many cases when the men are discharged from the hospital penniless it is because they have not been able to get pay from the War Department, and also by delay of records they are not able to get compensation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what the reason is, and I do not care to go into that, for I do not think it is necessary in discussing the merits of this bill. But under the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury the gift fund provided for in section 7 in the original act could not be used for any of these humanitarian and necessary purposes that I have suggested. They said on account of the phraseology of the act these gifts should be limited to the purposes named in section 7 and could not be used for this other purpose.

The American Red Cross has come to the relief and has underwritten a credit of $100,000—put it into the gift fund; but under this ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, however anxious the board might be to take care of these wounded and crippled men, they can not do it unless we pass this legislation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield, and I will give him more time, if necessary?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what is the purpose, to its fullest extent, of the amendment of the committtee as carried on page 2, lines 7 to 9?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should be very glad to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it will be noted that the act as it passed the Senate, reading on line 3, provided that "the special fund for vocational education, authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act," which is mentioned in section 7 of the original act, "is hereby made available, in addition to the purposes therein described, for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper."

The House committee inserted an amendment to strike out the word "is" and insert the words "together with the items of appropriation made by said act," so that we coalesce these two items contained in section 8 of the original act, to which I referred in the beginning of my remarks. In other words, the purpose of the amendment is to make available for the use of the fund all of the $2,000,000 appropriated for the purposes named in this amended act as well as for the purpose named in the original act.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the maximum charge upon the Treasury for this purpose will be $2,000,000?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Two million dollars. It does not authorize the appropriation of a single additional dollar out of the Treasury of the United States, and I am very glad that the gentleman called my attention to that. It simply authorizes the expending of the aggregate sum of these two unused items for purposes I have suggested to the House. It does not make any additional charge on the Federal Treasury, but merely regulates the expenditure of the money carried in the original act.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the Comptroller of the Treasury has prohibited by his construction the use of this money for the purpose as indicated that comes by gift, and that $100,000 has come by gift.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is more than that, possibly.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman or his committee thought of legislating to reverse that ruling?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what the rest of the committee have thought, but, as far as I am concerned, I will say that I heartily approve of this gift fund for this great and noble purpose.

Mr. CANNON. Would it not be better to reverse the ruling by legislation than to cut it off?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly what we are proposing to do by this legislation—to reverse this ruling.

Mr. CANNON. But to pay it from the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. Accept gifts?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My friend from Illinois must have forgotten the provisions of section 7 in the original act authorizing the acceptance of gifts and donations. It provided that they should be accepted when made unconditionally and put into the Treasury as a special fund, to be known as a fund for the vocational training of disabled soldiers.

Mr. CANNON. And that was wiped out by the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Whatever money has been in there has not been wiped out, but he held that the board could not expend it except for the purpose of tuition.

Mr. CANNON. Is it the object of this proposed legislation to enable the board to expend it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is.

Mr. CANNON. But it also enables the board to expend the $2,000,000 for the same thing?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any necessity for spending more than the gifts at this time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are needing not only the $700,000 covered in this new legislation, left over out of the original act, but the $100,000 from the Red Cross, and they are needing infinitely larger sums to properly administer this law.

Mr. CANNON. Between this and the next fiscal year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he probably knows more about that subject than I.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As I understand the bill, it is to make available the existing gifts and future gifts, together with the $700,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And it carries no more burden to the Treasury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It simply consolidates the sum which is found to be not usable for other purposes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. And not needed for those purposes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And makes it available for purposes that are immediately and urgently needed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; that is a correct statement of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And specifies that in the act?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gift provision in this bill is to be stricken out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the gentleman is in error about that. If he will look at the part of the Senate bill stricken out he will see that refers to conditional gifts, and there was some objection in the Committee on Education to extending the gift proposition to those that were to be made for certain specific purposes.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to find anything in the bill that would authorize expenditure of any money except that which was appropriated in the original act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is not, and that which may be in this gift fund.

Mr. MANN. Where is that in the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The first section provides that the special fund for vocational education, authorized by the act, together with the items of appropriation made by said act, are hereby made available, in addition to the purpose therein prescribed for such other expenses as in the discretion of the board is deemed necessary and proper, and so forth.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Does not section 7 of the vocational act provide for gifts?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. And this act makes those gifts now applicable to the items specified in section 8?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is a correct statement, whereas if we do not pass this legislation those gift funds can only be used for purposes specified in the original act creating that fund, to wit, in the following language—to be used under the direction of said board in connection with appropriations hereby made to defray expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation—

And the board does not need the money for this purpose.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. But does include the items specified in section 8?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I occupied?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I desire to ask the gentleman if anything was developed in the hearing on this as to how much the number of these agents would be increased?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; that testimony did not come out.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can the gentleman state what the salary of these agents is?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know what it is. Mr. Speaker, I would like to incorporate as a part of my remarks, and I ask unanimous consent to do so, because I think it will be interesting information to the Members of the House, a statement by the Federal Board of Vocational Education, showing the number of soldiers under treatment, and so forth, up until December 28, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

[Federal Board for Vocational Education, miscellaneous 80, Jan. 11, 1919.]

MARKING PROGRESS IN REHABILITATION OF THE DISABLED.

Disabled men registered with the Federal board on December 28, 1918, numbered 12,684. These were at the time of their registration all of them prospective candidates for vocational training and placement by the board. In 49 cases compensation for disabilities had been denied by the War Risk Insurance Bureau on or before December 28, in 9,317 cases compensation had not been determined at that date, and in 3,318 cases compensation had been awarded. Definite action providing training can not be taken in individual cases prior to the award of compensation by the War Risk Insurance Bureau, although in such cases contacts with the men can be established and preliminary vocational surveys completed.

The 14 district offices of the Federal board had reported 2,183 cases classified as prospects for training, and district case boards had recommended 520 men for specific courses of training. Men reported pending placement numbered 6,474, and the number of men reported as placed in civil employment was 1,455. In the table below the distribution of these cases is shown by district vocational offices. District No. 5, embracing the States of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Tennessee, reported the largest number of registrations, 2,230. District No. 9 (Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri) reported 1,573 cases; district No. 2 (Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey), 1,420 cases; district No. 7 (Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky), 1,317 cases; district No. 8 (Michigan, Illinois, and Wisconsin), 1,142 cases; and other districts smaller numbers, as shown in the table.

Information regarding men discharged or to be discharged from the Army or Navy is obtained from various sources, including the War Risk Insurance Bureau, the Department of Labor, hospital, the Red Cross, the man himself, and friends or relatives of the man. Contacts with the men registered are established immediately by letter or by personal interview. Vocational surveys are then completed to determine the man's vocational aptitudes, preferences, disabilities, and capabilities, and upon the basis of all data collected specific recommendations are made for training or placement, as the case may require.

DIVERSITY OF TRAINING PROVIDED FOR OUR DISABLED MEN.

A tentative classification of the first 157 cases approved for training indicates the wide diversity of vocations for which our disabled men are already being trained. For these first 157 cases 63 distinct courses of training are reported, as shown in the following summary statement. If the tabulation had been extended to include all of the 520 cases recommended for training by the district offices, an even greater diversity of courses would be shown:

In 25 of the 157 cases some line of agricultural training—crop or stock farming, dairying, poultry raising, farm management—had been elected and approved after careful survey of the applicants' qualifications and preferences, and it would thus appear from the data already in hand that agriculture will attract a large proportion of the disabled men. Commercial courses had been approved in 19 cases, general business courses in 12 cases, and motor mechanics in 11 cases.

INSTITUTIONS PROVIDING TRAINING COURSES.

Evidence that our disabled men are being given worth-while training may be found in the character of the institutions in which they have been placed for training. The 157 first cases classified above were distributed for training to the institutions listed below. It should be noted, however, that in some instances men were sent for training directly into industrial establishments or were inducted directly into trades. In all such cases adequate provision has been made for instruction under proper guaranties and supervision.

List of institutions in which disabled men have been placed for training: Amherst College, Boston University Law School, Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Filene's Department Store, Tawley School of Engineering, Bryant & Stratton and Burdette Business Colleges, Soule Business College, Franklin Union College, Harvard Law School, New York School of Commerce, Columbia University, Colorado University, Pratt Institute, Lehigh University, Strayer's Business College, Maryland State Agricultural College, Howard University, David Rankin Trade School, Hampton Institute, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Virginia Polytechnic, George Washington University, Maryland University, North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College, Tuskegee Institute, Tennessee State Agricultural College, Clemson College, University of Tennessee, Tulane University, Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, Ohio State University, Baltimore Business College, Purdue University, Michigan State Agricultural College, Indiana State Normal College, University of Michigan, University of Illinois, Nebraska University, Dunmoody Institute, University of Nevada, University of California, University of Texas, American Institute for Banking.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have had no requests for time in opposition to this bill. I have had a request for five minutes from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], a member of the committee, and I yield him that time.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for his courtesy. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the unanimous consent of the membership of the committee. It is simply a bill to make available for purposes that are needed the funds already appropriated. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars were appropriated for the purposes of paying rent and to provide buildings. It was found, very fortunately indeed, that the States and colleges very largely provided those necessary buildings without additional cost, so that the $250,000 is not all needed. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars was provided for the payment of tuition. It was expected that tuition for the training of the soldiers would have to be paid for, but very fortunately, and to the great credit of the educational institutions of the country, they came almost unanimously to the board saying, "We will gladly give to the wounded soldiers their tuition free," so probably almost nothing will have to be paid for tuitions for the soldiers for their vocational rehabilitation. Besides this the gift fund provided for under the terms of the act was interpreted by the Comptroller of the Treasury to apply only for the purpose of tuition, the very thing that was not needed at all, so that fund was not available. Gentlemen, this is simply a bill for the purpose of carrying out the rehabilitation act, the great humanitarian and great patriotic act which we passed in the House here that gave to the disabled soldiers an opportunity to have provided for them an education particularly devoted to their individual requirements and adapted to their particular condition, so that they may become independent and self-supporting members of society. The operations of this act have been marvelously successful in Canada and in England and in France, and we are only doing our part in this great work for the benefit of our soldiers. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. I desire to ask the gentleman if he knows whether thus far the work has been entirely satisfactory?

Mr. TOWNER. It has, I think, but it has been mainly organization work so far, I will say to the gentleman. Of course, the real work of the rehabilitation of the soldier has just commenced.

Mr. FESS. That is largely due to the fact that primarily the work is done in the hospital, and we have not reached the other yet?

Mr. TOWNER. That is very true, and these agents referred to are not agents going about the country soliciting or anything of that kind. They are representatives of the board who are sent to the various hospitals, these soldiers' hospitals under the control of the Army, for the purpose of cooperating with the Surgeon General's assistants in preparing these soldiers for the educational work.

Mr. SNOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. SNOOK. So far as the act has been brought to the attention of the wounded soldiers of their right to have the benefits of it, has there been any difficulty in getting them to take advantage of that act?

Mr. TOWNER. We hardly have proceeded far enough, I will say to the gentleman, with that work to know. The work so far has not progressed far beyond organization, and the only thing we can say with reference to that is that it has been wonderfully successful in England and in Canada, our neighbor.

Mr. SNOOK. The main purpose of this is to bring to their attention the benefits that will accrue to them under this bill if they take advantage of it?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Alabama stated a moment ago that there had been thousands of soldiers discharged who had gone out of these hospitals that had not been notified of the benefits to be derived under this bill. Now, is it the purpose and object of the extension of this bill as amended to reach those soldiers as well as the ones who are still in the hospitals?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say that it is the thought by putting agents of the Rehabilitation Board in the hospitals, as the Surgeon General desires, it is expected it will not cost more than $5 per soldier to accomplish this necessary work of making the work of the Education Board immediately follow the work of the Surgeon General's office, whereas if these men have to go out and see these men and talk and induce them, as they have been compelled in large measure, it will cost $50 or $75 in each case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is after they have been discharged and gone out?

Mr. TOWNER. After they have been discharged.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Those that have been discharged will be furnished information and get the benefit of it?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes; and there will not be one single disabled soldier that will not have placed before him all the information necessary to assist him to take hold of this work.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am delighted to hear that. I want the soldiers to have that benefit.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. DONOVAN. Was not the reason that some men have been discharged from the hospitals and now are afield as to the benefits of the act because the War Department did not permit the dissemination of this information in the hospitals before December 10?

Mr. TOWNER. That is very true; and from the further fact that since that time the board has not had money enough in order to carry out and secure the necessary assistants.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is not one reason for the urgency of this bill the fact that a large number of men have been discharged from the hospitals and that their compensation status has not been determined, and this is to carry them over for subsistence and travel since that time?

Mr. TOWNER. That is true. As to all of this work, whatever the soldier may desire to do, who has been injured, wounded, or incapacitated in any way from following out his old vocation in whole or in part or in preparing for some new work, it is expected and provided that the board will assist him to do it.

Mr. SWITZER. Is the soldier actually receiving the benefits from this fund or is it used in organizations?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, they are now receiving the benefit of the fund. I do not know how many.

Mr. SWITZER. I understood it was largely used in organizations.

Mr. TOWNER. It has been necessarily so, so far. But the very provisions of this supplementary legislation is to carry out quickly and without delay the purpose of the rehabilitation act. It is to tide over a dangerous interim that may exist between his discharge as a soldier and his entrance again into civil life. It is to help him to understand so he will accept the benefits of the training for success in life which the Government gladly tenders him. This is the object and purpose of this legislation, and it has no other object nor purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize to the utmost with the effort to teach the maimed soldiers and others methods of earning their livelihood. I have been here long enough to watch the various and sometimes devious ways pursued by branches in the executive departments of the Government for getting hold of money. A good many departments think that the moment a sum of money is appropriated for a particular purpose, after investigation, under those departments, the money belongs to them. They think it is theirs. They will come before Congress and ask money to accomplish a special thing, and after consideration Congress grants them the money; and the moment it is appropriated these departments think they own the money. They object to having their activities circumscribed. They think they should be permitted to use the money as they please.

Now, this bureau has a right, I suppose—I am not very familiar with the legislation; I was not here when it was passed—to come before the Committee on Appropriations and ask to have reported in the sundry civil bill appropriations to carry out the purpose of the rehabilitation act. They are having hearings in the Committee on Appropriations now on the sundry civil bill. It is likely to become a law, if it becomes a law at this session, as soon as this bill becomes a law. But if they go before the Committee on Appropriations they have to specify what they want money for, and how much they need for a certain purpose, and be examined and cross-examined. They have to show the goods before they get the money. So what did they do? They find that in the original rehabilitation act there was a lot of money appropriated for which they had no use, and, thinking they own the money, they say, "Why should Congress tell us how we should use this money? That is none of your business up there. All you ought to tell us is that we can have a large sum, and we can spend it as we please." And having a sum in the neighborhood of three-quarters of a million dollars which they can not expend under the terms for which it was appropriated, and, thinking they own the money, they say, "Let us spend it as we want to." And that is what this bill says in effect.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. DONOVAN. I was going to ask the gentleman, from the fact that this is a new enterprise, so to speak, and, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama, when the committee or the vocational board was asked to budget it they said in good faith at that time they could not make a definite appropriation by guesswork, there would not be a justification for their now coming in and asking after having had first an experience of that kind?

Mr. MANN. Why, they have the right to come in before the Committee on Appropriations, like other branches of the executive departments, and tell what they want the money for and how much. But they are not willing to do it. They think it is easier to work through a bill which lets them use the money as they please, on the plea—and that is the plea made by this bill—that this is not appropriating new money, that this is just a readjustment of the powers concerning the use of the money already appropriated; and we seem to act upon the theory that when we appropriate money we lift it up in our hands and put it over in a certain place, and it is there by itself.

Why, every year we appropriate millions of dollars for purposes for which the money is not used, and necessarily, but it is not paid out. There is not a branch of the Government that does not, every once in a while, try to say, "The money is ours, because it was appropriated. Let us use it for something else. We do not need it for the purpose for which it was appropriated."

If they have got a just claim for money they can get it just as quickly and specify what it is for and tell what they want to use and how much they want to use, instead of trying to "work" Congress. That is what this is. It is trying to "work" Congress. I have never had any patience with the executive branches of the Government which seek to slide in, if they can not get an appropriation from one committee, and run to another committee; which seek to slide in, and if they can not get it on the basis of the facts, try to divert it from something else which they can not spend it for. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is an objection with which all of us have sympathy, and for that reason when this bill was first written—I mean the original rehabilitation bill—providing for an appropriation of $2,000,000 it was written in a lump sum, $2,000,000. It was suggested, however, in the committee that if the sum could be apportioned to the varied divisions to which it was to be applied it ought to be done, because the Members of Congress dislike to vote money in that lump-sum method. Dr. Crosser, who was before the committee, said that it would be impossible at that stage to estimate the particular amount that would be needed for each of the activities specified, and it would be only a mere guess, and for that reason he questioned the wisdom of dividing it. However, the Members on the part of the Senate thought it should be divided and the Members of the House agreed to that. This was agreed to in the joint meeting of the two committees of the House and the Senate.

At this time, after the lapse of these months, there is a better chance to know what activities need the money than when we wrote the bill; and while I appreciate fully what the gentleman from Illinois says, and while I have a lot of sympathy for that position, yet really I do not believe that the criticism can be applied with as much force to this particular case as the interpretation that he has placed upon it would indicate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have two minutes left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER] for time. I yield to the gentleman the time I have, two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am much obliged to the gentleman from Wisconsin for granting me all of his remaining time. I trust that the Members of the House will not refuse to suspend the rules and pass this very important bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has had something to say about the Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Speaker, when this crisis arose, of these crippled boys being discharged from the Army hospitals with their compensation status undetermined for weeks and sometimes for months at a time, making it impossible under the law for their regular civilian training to begin, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] introduced a bill similar to this bill and went before the Committee on Appropriations to urge its immediate consideration and report. This was at the very beginning of the session in December, and the Committee on Appropriations took no action whatever. Moreover, nothing has been done by that committee since, and as a result of that fact the Board for Vocational Education has not been able to use this money already appropriated in the original rehabilitation act for the purposes specified in this bill, and thousands and thousands of crippled soldiers have had no provision whatever made for them, and many of them have been found begging on the streets of our large cities.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the Committee on Appropriations, I do not think the gentleman ought to make the wild charge that nothing has been done. The subcommittee on the sundry civil appropriation bill last week gave a hearing to this board concerning their work, and I am certain that subcommittee is giving careful consideration to this appropriation.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to is for the next fiscal year, beginning the 1st of July next. Something ought to have been done during the first week of last December. The matter was so important and so urgent that the Committee on Appropriations owed it to the country and to the crippled and disabled soldiers to bring in some sort of a bill, even a special deficiency bill. The Committee on Appropriations did not do it, and hence the Committee on Education has brought in this bill, and this House ought to pass it under suspension of the rules here and now.

It is said that this bill does not provide or specify what the money is to be spent for. Mr. Speaker, it expressly specifies that it is for "the payment of necessary travel, lodging, subsistence, and other expenses of disabled men while under investigation by the board to determine their eligibility for training under the act"—that is, during the time their compensation status is being determined by the War Risk Insurance Bureau—"and for the purchase of supplies, equipment, and clothing for disabled men when ready to enter employment, and the traveling expenses of such men to place of employment." In other words, it is to cover the gap between the time that these crippled soldiers are discharged by the military authorities from the hospital and the time their compensation is determined by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and they can go into actual training. It seems to me if Members of this House desire to prevent these soldier boys from being resentful against their Government for not giving them the opportunities which this Congress has provided, they will pass this bill, and pass it speedily. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. Those in favor of suspending the rules and passing this bill will say "aye"; those opposed will answer "no."

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended, and the bill is passed.

NEW TRIALS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 68) to amend section 269 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 269 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 269. All of the said courts shall have power to grant new trials, in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law. On the hearing of any appeal, certiorari, writ of error, or motion for a new trial, in any case, civil or criminal, the court shall give judgment after an examination of the entire record before the court, without regard to technical errors, defects, or exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties."

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS WITH THE STATE OF MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2715) to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of Montana in connection with Muddy Creek Reservoir site, Sun River project, and Nelson Reservoir site, Milk River project, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the Member having this matter in charge to give a little fuller explanation than is contained in the report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in this bill in any way whatever, but it proposes to authorize an exchange of land between the Government of the United States and the State of Montana in order to carry out the purposes of the Government in one of its reclamation projects, and the Secretary of the Interior, when this matter was up in July, 1917, stated that the Legislature of Montana would meet in 1919. I do not know whether that legislature has met and adjourned or not, but he stated that the State would endeavor to keep anybody off the land belonging to the State until the State legislature had met and had had an opportunity to pass an enabling act authorizing a transfer of the land. There seems to be no question but that it is desirable on the part of the Government of the United States to have the land transferred. The only question is whether the State of Montana will agree to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe it is customary in these bills providing for the exchange of land to insert a provision that the land exchanged shall be of substantially the same value.

Mr. MANN. That is customary in exchanges with private individuals or corporations; but here the Government of the United States is seeking to get land owned by the State of Montana to use it for a reclamation purpose. I suppose the land will be of about equal value, but I think it is not customary to specify that in the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not specified in this bill?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Though it does state, not exceeding the amount of land included in said object.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. They may take land of a different character, forest land, which might be of much greater value than the land received from the State.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any danger of that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for the exchange? That is what I am trying to ascertain. The report from the Acting Secretary of State as usual does not set forth the necessity.

Mr. MANN. In reporting the bill there was probably a slight error in not including the letter, which I have, which was sent to the chairman of the Public Lands Committee in the Senate, which is included in the Senate report. I presume in reporting it to the House somebody inadvertently left that letter out. The Government of the United States needs the land owned by the State of Montana in connection with one of its reclamation projects.

Mr. WALSH. That is sufficient. I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have this bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon receipt of proper deeds from the State Board of Land Commissioners of the State of Montana, executed under authority of its legislative assembly, reconveying to the United States of America title to the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter section 2, north half of the northeast quarter and southeast quarter of the northeast quarter section 3, township 22 north, range 1 west, Montana principal meridian; northeast quarter of the northeast quarter, south half of the northeast quarter, and southeast quarter section 20, east half of the northeast quarter, and southeast quarter section 21, southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter, and southwest quarter of the southeast quarter section 27, northeast quarter, northwest quarter, north half of the southwest quarter, and north half of the southeast quarter section 28, north half of the southwest quarter section 29, southeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 30, north half of the northeast quarter, and north half of the northwest quarter section 32, north half of the northeast quarter, and northeast quarter of the northwest quarter section 33, east half of the northeast quarter, south half of the northwest quarter, east half of the southwest quarter, and west half of the southeast quarter section 34, township 23 north, range 1 west, Montana principal meridian, for the Muddy Creek Reservoir site, Sun River project; and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 35, township 32 north, range 32 east, north half of the southwest quarter section 4, township 31 north, range 32 east, and all of section 36, township 32 north, range 31 east, Montana principal meridian, for the Nelson Reservoir site, Milk River project; the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patents to said State for such vacant, surveyed, unreserved, unoccupied, nonmineral public lands as may be selected by said State within its boundaries, not exceeding the amount of land included in said deeds, and said land when so reconveyed shall not be subject to settlement, location, entry, or selection under the public-land laws, but shall be reserved for the use of the United States Reclamation Service for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior may restore such lands as he may determine are not needed for said reservoir sites.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Miss RANKIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BLACKFEET RESERVATION IN MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4404) repealing that portion of the Indian appropriation act of March 1, 1907 (34 Stat. L., pp. 1015 and 1035), which relates to the disposal of the surplus unallotted lands within the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the provision contained in this bill is carried in the Indian appropriation bill. I do not think it is necessary to take any action on the bill to-day. I do not think it ought to be stricken from the calendar until after the Indian appropriation bill has become a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the gentleman ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; Mr. Speaker, I ask that it go to the foot of the calendar. There is an error in the statement on the calendar that it was reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It was reported from the Indian Committee. I ask that it go to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman how it is in the Indian appropriation bill? The Senate passed the bill reserving the mineral rights for the tribe, I judge. The House committee reported the bill striking the provision out. How did it appear in the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. When the Indian bill was prepared I was sick.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I think I can inform the gentleman. It went into the Indian appropriation bill as it is in this bill as amended. The mineral rights go to each allottee.

Mr. MANN. That is once when the Indian Affairs Committee put something over on the House. The House has been endeavoring to protect these rights for a long time and not let the white man steal it from the Indians.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. This does not give it to the white men.

Mr. MANN. Pretty nearly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the citation on the calendar that the bill came from the Public Lands Committee ought to be changed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, BISMARCK, N. DAK.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5058) to authorize the counties of Morton and Burleigh, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Bismarck, N. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Morton and Burleigh, in the State of North Dakota, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation near the city of Bismarck, Burleigh County, N. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS—MONTANA.

The next bill of the Calender for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 935) for the relief of settlers on certain railroad lands in Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I think some statement should be made by the gentleman having charge of this matter as to whether these settlers are entitled to this relief.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill was considered by the Committee on Public Lands. I did not have charge of the bill. As I understand the land was formerly an Indian reservation and was opened for settlement. It was later found that some of the land was in the grant of the Northern Pacific Railway. This provides for land in lieu of that.

Mr. WALSH. Several thousand acres of land?

Miss RANKIN. There are 64 settlers involved.

Mr. WALSH. The Secretary of the Interior seems to be doubtful as to whether the settlers have such claims as would warrant him in recommending enactment of this legislation. The railroad company on investigation found that valuable improvements have been placed on the land. It looks to me that where it involves such a large tract of land with comparatively few people as if it was doubtful propriety in enacting this legislation.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. The matter has been looked into and the State legislature has memorialized Congress for the passage of the act. It does not involve a great tract of land; it involves a number of interests, I think 50 or so. The people went in there in good faith believing that they were going to get the land and put on improvements. In 1898 a law was passed that wherever a settler was on railroad land the railroad company would get out and take land somewhere else.

Mr. WALSH. Who would get out?

Mr. EVANS. The railroad company. That does not apply to this case.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. There was a question at one time as to whether the railroad company owned the land.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. At the time the settlers went on the land there was a question as to whether this was railroad land, the alternate sections within these reservations.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The first settlers went on the land with a very good reason to believe that they had a right to settle on the land.

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It was finally held that the lands belonged to the railroad company, and, of course, that left the settlers without legal rights. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]: The railroad company is authorized to make an exchange in this case. Of course, these settlers could have gone on the lands which the railroad company will now take, so it does not seem to be very material from anyone's standpoint if the exchange is made. For instance, any land that the railroad company can now get in exchange for the land the settlers have the settlers could have taken in the first instance. The settlers preferred to take this particular land. The assumption is, and it is reasonable, that whatever lands the railroad company can get are at least no better than the lands which the settlers have, and the probabilities are that, as a matter of value, the railroad company can not get any land that is as valuable as the land which the settlers have taken. Naturally they are not particularly desirous of making the exchange. Occasionally a condition of this kind arises in the western country, where there is some question as to the rights of the railroad companies to the lands within certain portions of what is finally determined to be the limit of their grants, and settlers go on lands under a misapprehension.

Mr. WALSH. Will this land which the railroad company takes be contiguous to that which it owns elsewhere?

Mr. MONDELL. They could take it anywhere in the State.

Mr. WALSH. That is just it. I do not think we ought to approve the taking by the railroad of land of equal value or similar character elsewhere in the State. What will the railroad company do with this land if it takes a tract of 15,000 acres miles away from a railroad?

Mr. MONDELL. That only reason why the railroad company can afford to agree to a settlement of this kind is that they can take those lieu rights and locate them where some one may want a tract of land, sell the land, and in that way they may get $8 or $10 an acre.

Mr. WALSH. Can not the railroad sell these lands to these settlers?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, they could; but the settlers would have to pay the railroad company for the lands, and, of course, the settlers can not afford to pay the railroad company for lands they have earned as homestead settlers.

Mr. WALSH. The railroad company can eject these settlers if nothing is done?

Mr. MONDELL. It can.

Mr. WALSH. And they will be without other land to settle on?

Mr. MONDELL. They would lose their improvements. They would have to move and go to some distant place, and would lose all that they have.

Mr. WALSH. They would not lose very much, probably. They would be here with a bill to give them land somewhere else, or to reimburse them for their improvements.

Mr. MANN. They might come here with a bill, but they would not have much show to get reimbursement.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me remind the gentleman of what we have done in other cases where a conflict arose. There was the case of the Wisconsin Railroad, where a considerable number of settlers went on land, and the Supreme Court held, finally, that the land belonged to the Wisconsin Central Railroad. We gave those settlers the right to take other land, or to let the railroad company take other land, an alternative provision, so that settlement could be made.

This is a wise settlement to make so far as the Government is concerned; that is, let the railroad company take other land.

Mr. MANN. It is wise for the Government and best for the settlers.

Mr. WALSH. And for the railroad. I do not know; I think we ought——

Mr. MANN. It is a concession on the part of the railroad to people who live along their lines.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will stop to consider, there is not an acre of land that the railroads can get in Montana that any settler can not take as a homestead and get it for nothing. There is not an acre of land that will be subject to location by the railroad that can not be taken up in a 320 or a 640 acre tract under homestead settlement.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose, in view of the legislation we are sometimes called upon to consider, that that will continue to be here until the end of time——

Mr. MONDELL. It should be so, because that is the way to settle the land. This is just a question as to whether certain homesteaders are to be compelled to leave the homes they have built and turn them over to the railroad company and go out elsewhere and take other lands unimproved, or whether the railroad company is to be allowed to go and take those unimproved lands. Does the gentleman know of any good reason why as reasonable a thing as that should not be done?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I know the gentleman is an expert on these land matters, and I am several degrees below a novice, but I think we ought to quit some time giving land to railroads out in this western country. We have given it to them here before. These settlers have got on the land by mistake or through not knowing that it belongs to the railroad, and now we are saying to the railroad, "You let the settler stay on this land and we will let you take land somewhere else," and that would be best for the settler, best for the State, and best for the railroad, even though they lost from $2 to $4 per acre on the land they get in lieu of the land escaped, but I think we ought to show some indication that legislation like this should have a narrow escape when it is submitted here, and I think the escape has been sufficiently narrow, so that I will not object.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not think that is what he wants to do because there are many of these cases. It is not the railroad that is asking for the legislation, it is the settler. The railroad would like to have it defeated, because that gives an excuse for grabbing the improvements made by the settler. A great deal has been said about railroad companies giving up one piece of land and taking another. That question arises every once in a while; but, in the first place, when much of this land was settled, people could not always state where the lines were—they did not know.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, we do not know; and it is rather significant, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that the Secretary of the Interior, under whose administration these land problems come, seem to be doubtful as to whether the settlers have such claims as would warrant, as I understand, this legislation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, it is a question of policy after all. The Secretary does not have much to do with it.

Mr. WALSH. It is a question affecting his jurisdiction and his department, and he seeks to convey the impression that he does not favor this means of extricating these gentlemen from the difficulty in which they find themselves.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me remind the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Secretary of the Interior is guided by those in his office. Sometimes letters that come here, signed by the Secretary, so liberal in the expression of their views that I do not find I can follow them. Here is a case where, from the viewpoint of anyone who knows, the plan proposed is fair. Any man acquainted with the public land in the West knows how this sort of thing occurs and how essential it is to remedy it by legislation. The fact that some official in the department has taken some curious view should not affect our judgment with regard to them. I certainly have no interest in this situation except to have justice done or something like justice done. These people under the law would be required to give up their homes and give up the lands on which they have lived for years. Naturally the railroad company would prefer to have them do that if they viewed it wholly from the viewpoint of the company's finances, but the company will agree to this plan, and I think we should protect the settlers in their homes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the adjustment of the grants to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., if any of the lands within the indemnity limits of said grants through that portion of the former reservation for the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfoot, and River Crow Indians lying south of the Missouri River in the State of Montana be found in possession of an actual bona fide qualified settler under the homestead laws of the United States who has made substantial improvements thereon and such land has been adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior to inure to the Northern Pacific Railway Co. under the grants made to its predecessor in interest, the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., the Northern Pacific Railway Co., upon request of the Secretary of the Interior, may file a relinquishment of said lands in favor of the settler and shall then be entitled to select an equal quantity of other lands in lieu thereof from any of the surveyed public lands within the State of Montana, not mineral and not otherwise appropriated at the date of selection, to which it shall receive title the same as though originally granted: Provided, however, That lands withdrawn or classified as coal lands may be selected by said company, and as to such lands it shall receive a restricted patent as provided by the act of June 22, 1910.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENT TO LINCOLN-DOUGLASS SANATORIUM, COLORADO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11368) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association, a corporation, of Denver, Colo., for a certain-described tract of land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the gentleman acquainted with the character of the land that is purposed to be transferred to this private sanatorium?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I beg to state to the gentleman that I am well acquainted with the character of the land. It is sandy land along a ditch which supplies a reservoir with water, and it has been lying open for entry for a number of years, but has not been taken because of the worthless character of the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, this is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for the following tract of land, to wit: The northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 1 and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 2, in township 3 north, range 61 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Colorado.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 2, insert: "upon the payment of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: And provided further, That this grant shall be subject to all prior, valid existing rights under the land laws of the United States, and that if the grantee shall fail to use the land for sanatorium purposes or shall devote the same to other uses the title thereto shall revert to the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TIMBERLAKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WATER SUPPLY, CORVALLIS, DALLAS, AND OREGON CITY, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12770) to reserve as part of the Oregon and Siuslaw National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. v. The United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I believe this bill was considered once before, about a month ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. And at that time objection was made?

Mr. HAWLEY. At that time it was transferred to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, it was half objected to, then. Why can not the cities that are sought to be benefited by the transfer of the land to the forest reserve take over the responsibility of preserving their own water supply?

Mr. HAWLEY. These three towns have entered upon public improvements, including sewers and water systems and paving, and have issued bonds to such an extent that they are not prepared at this time to sell bonds sufficient to take over the lands absolutely essential to the protection of their water supply. An act was recently passed by Congress transferring a large quantity of Oregon and California grant lands to the Oregon National Forest, for the protection of the water supply of the city of Portland, and this bill follows that precedent.

Mr. STAFFORD. These tracts of land are 11 and 8 miles, respectively, from the nearest boundaries of the forest reserve?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not all of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. A large portion of them are.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not a large portion. About 2,000 acres are the distances that the gentleman mentions, but the other land, about 5,000 acres or more, will go into the Oregon national forest as a compact part of that forest.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any instance where Congress has passed a special act providing for the transfer of certain public lands as a part of a national forest which is 11 miles separated from the nearest boundary of that forest?

Mr. HAWLEY. As to one of these tracts, the one for the city of Corvallis, which is I think at farthest distance from the national forest, the Forest Service has made a favorable report, and they say they can administer it. But this particular tract will be cared for by the city. It is now cared for by the city to prevent fires, and they will take care of it under the supervision of the Forest Service if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. What assurance has the Government, if we allow this act to pass, that the municipal authorities will patrol this separated tract of land?

Mr. HAWLEY. I asked that question specifically of members of the city council and the city water committee, and they assured me that if these lands were transferred to the national forest, they would provide protection. The school of forestry of the Oregon Agricultural College will use it as a training station for the students of that school. It is on the east side of Mount Chintimini. If it is burned, it would destroy the only available water supply for the college, where 2,000 students attend annually; and it would also prevent the city from getting an adequate supply of fresh, pure, clean water for its citizens.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker I understand that this bill will protect the water supply of these municipalities, and that it is an obligation that ought to be undertaken by the municipalities.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I wish to ask the gentleman from Oregon how many acres there are?

Mr. HAWLEY. About 7,000.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. And the Government has got to provide protection for that area?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; in part.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is there any taxation involved here?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; there are back taxes—back taxes accrued prior to the time the Government took control of the land, payment of which was provided in the legislation for the disposition of the grant.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much?

Mr. HAWLEY. That amount I have not been able to ascertain, as the lands are parts of a large area.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I recall that there was a bill up a little while ago in which there was something like $700,000 paid for the lands, and I understood there were more taxes to be paid then than the original value of the land.

Mr. HAWLEY. No. Even if the Government pays for the land and pays the back taxes, it will be the beneficiary by several million dollars by the sale of the Oregon & California Railroad land grant.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should we impose this obligation on the National Government to protect the water supply of a municipality?

Mr. HAWLEY. If this is not done and the land is sold to private holders and cut over, the lands will become valueless for purposes of protecting the water supplies of these cities.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the lands were valuable, we might be justified in making them an integral part of the forest reserves, but I do not think the State, or the municipality, if they have a college there, ought to ask us to buy lands for the protection of their water supply.

Mr. HAWLEY. In the case of the two cities that the gentleman has called attention to, where the lands are separated from the other forest lands, the intention is to acquire these lands, as I understand, when the cities are financially able, because they can not afford to allow them under any circumstances, if they can help it, to pass under private control.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the State or the city should pay the back taxes before that is done, and therefore I will object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon that the bill go to the foot of the calendar?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Has the gentleman come to any conclusion as to when he will let us get up the conference report on the oil and gas bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us finish the military bill to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand a rule is to be brought in by the Committee on Rules making in order legislation on the military appropriation bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not say about that. It has been before the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]?

There was no objection.

BIRD RESERVATIONS IN CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10612) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, good reasons ought to be given before this bill is allowed to pass. I understand that since these bird reservations were established there has been a very large increase in the bird population on the Pacific coast and elsewhere. Now, are we to take away gradually the bird reservations in order for some one to try to cultivate land that is hardly tillable at the best?

Mr. RAKER. The office of the biological survey having charge of this matter in the Department of the Interior, and the officers in the General Land Office have had this matter up, and I want to say to the gentleman, from personal observation and knowledge of the country, that if the provisions of this bill are carried into effect, and the fractional sections bordering on the lake are reserved, it will do more to protect the birds than anything that has been done in that reservation. It is conceded by the authorities that it will have that effect.

Mr. MANN. How will it have that effect?

Mr. RAKER. The tules on that land are a breeding ground for coyotes and wild varmints. If this bill becomes a law the land will be cultivated within a year, and the wild animals that now prey upon the birds will be destroyed. The fractional sections bordering on the lake and the lake itself will be protected so as to give these migrating birds opportunity to alight and nest there, whereas the wild animals which now destroy them will be exterminated.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman is not familiar with bird life at all. The gentleman's position is that if they cultivate close to the lake and destroy the coyotes, that will make the birds more apt to go there and settle near where the human abodes are built.

Mr. RAKER. I am speaking of the birds that nest there.

Mr. MANN. I can remember when I was a boy seeing the ponds and lakes on my father's farm covered with ducks as thick as they could sit on the water. The coyotes have been destroyed, and so have the birds. There are no ducks there now, and not many other birds except human birds.

Mr. FESS. Civilization got rid of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I do not know that I shall object hereafter. I do not pretend to be as well posted about this bill as I should like to be. It was reported in my absence.

Mr. RAKER. I do not want to take the time of the House, but if I can have five minutes——

Mr. MANN. I am very strongly in favor of keeping the reservations, where birds can multiply and safely feed. I believe this is in the interest of the whole country.

Mr. RAKER. I can explain that it will be an advantage to the birds to have this land thrown open for settlement, with the fractional sections around the lake reserved.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has already explained that, but the explanation does not sound very reasonable. For the present I shall have to object.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADDITION TO YELLOWSTONE PARK, WYO.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 13350, to add certain lands to the Yellowstone National Park.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman as to this provision that all bona fide claimants and entrymen shall have the right to graze upon lands, reasonably adjacent to the lands which are owned by them, such number of live stock as they have been accustomed to so graze in the past?

Mr. MONDELL. There are a few settlers in the extreme southern portion of the area that is to be added to the park who have small flocks and herds, and the provision is made that the stock which they own and maintain on those farms can be grazed under proper regulations in adjacent areas.

Mr. STAFFORD. It goes further than that; they are not willing to leave it to the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, but it is mandatory; they say "on the same terms that they now enjoy."

Mr. MONDELL. Under regulations to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. It says:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to grant grazing permits and authorize the grazing of live stock on the lands hereby added to the Yellowstone National Park, to the extent that live stock have heretofore grazed upon these lands under permits issued by the Forest Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why does the gentleman stop there?

Mr. MONDELL. Because I want to explain that situation.

Mr. STAFFORD. The following clause is the objectionable one, "and at fees not to exceed those charged by the Forest Service on adjacent areas."

Mr. MONDELL. I did not suppose that gentlemen had any objection to that. The situation is this: There is some stock that have been grazed on these lands as part of the forest reserve. Only a limited part of the area has been used for stock grazing, and the forestry people and the park people say there is no reason why that stock should not be grazed there, as it has been grazed for some time. Naturally they would want to know what they are to pay, and the fees are to be those that have been paid in the past. They have been reasonable in the past and there is no reason why they should be increased.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the phraseology of the proviso that right could never be taken away by Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am alluding to the prior proviso:

Provided, That under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior all bona fide claimants or entrymen shall have the right to graze, upon lands reasonably adjacent to the lands claimed or owned by them, such number of live stock as they have been accustomed to so graze in the past, or as may be reasonably necessary to the use and utilization of their lands, and to secure timber for use on and for the improvement of their lands.

Mr. MONDELL. There are a few settlers in the extreme southern portion of this area who are there with their little farms of 160 acres to 320 acres who have some stock. That stock has to be grazed on adjacent land, and the provision is that as long as they hold their land they shall have reasonable opportunity to graze that small number of stock.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it within the gentleman's present knowledge that the stock on these lands is in limited quantities?

Mr. MONDELL. All small farms and a limited amount of stock.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation on the gentleman's statement.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what necessity there is to add any more land to the area of Yellowstone Park?

Mr. MONDELL. For many years it has been believed that the Yellowstone should be extended to the south in order to have natural rather than the artificial boundaries. It takes in no land now used for grazing purposes except in a limited way. Nearly all the lands added to the park are now in a State game reserve, and have been for years.

Mr. CURRY of California. Would the Secretary of the Interior under this act have the power to take away any rights of these settlers who have 160 or 320 acres there?

Mr. MONDELL. He would have no right to take away the rights they have to the land or the right to graze their stock on adjacent lands.

Mr. CURRY of California. He could make the grazing tax prohibitive.

Mr. MONDELL. No; because we have provided that the rates shall not be above charges now.

Mr. CURRY of California. Inasmuch as the gentleman introduced the bill, and as the thing is in his State, I shall not object; but I think we have all the parks and forest reserves we need now in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. This simply rounds out the Yellowstone and gives it natural rather than artificial boundaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That portions of the south and east boundary lines of the Yellowstone National Park, in the State of Wyoming, are hereby changed as follows:

Beginning at a point on the present south boundary line where it is intersected by the Idaho-Wyoming State line; thence south along the Idaho-Wyoming State line to its intersection with the Ashton and Jackson Lake Road in what will be, when surveyed, township 47 north, range 118 west of the sixth principal meridian; thence east along the south side of the said Ashton and Jackson Lake Road until it rises to the hydrographic divide immediately north of Boone Creek, as shown on the Geological Survey Shoshone quadrangle map; thence from the point said road descends from the said divide, east following the said hydrographic divide immediately north of Boone Creek to the hydrographic divide between Falls River, Boone Creek, and Berry Creek; thence southerly along the said hydrographic divide to Surrey Peak, elevation 9,200 feet; thence southerly along the hydrographic divide, said divide following the summit of the Teton Mountains, between Boone, Conant, and Berry Creeks, Birch and Owl Creeks, North Fork Pierre River and Webb Canyon, Badger Creek and Moran Canyon, Leigh Creek and Leigh Canyon, and Teton Canyon and Glacier Creek to a peak, elevation 11,400 feet, on the said hydrographic divide, between the headwaters of Teton Canyon and Taggart Creek and a branch of Death Canyon waters, which enter said Death Canyon about one and one-half miles northwest of Phelps Lake; thence following easterly along the main hydrographic divide south of Taggart Creek and Taggart Lake to its intersection with the unsurveyed section line between, what will be when surveyed sections 10 and 15, township 43 north, range 116 west; thence east along the said section line and continuing east along the section line between sections 11 and 14 of said township and range to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 11, said township and range; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 2, said township and range; thence east to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 35 in unsurveyed township 44 north, range 116 west; thence north to the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 35; thence west to the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 35; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 35; thence east to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 26; thence north to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 26; thence east to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25; thence east to the southeast corner of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25; thence north to the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25; thence east to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 25; thence north to the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 13; thence west to the northwest corner of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 13; thence north to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12; thence east to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 12; thence east to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 12; thence north to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 12; thence east to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 12; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 12; thence east to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 1; all in unsurveyed township 44 north, range 116 west; thence east along the section lines between sections 6 and 7, 5 and 8, 4 and 9, and 3 and 10 to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 3, all in township 44 north, range 115 west; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 3, said township and range; thence east along the township line to the southeast corner of section 35, township 45 north, range 115 west; thence north to the northeast corner of said section 35; thence east to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 25, said township and range; thence north to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of said section 25; thence east to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 19, township 45 north, range 114 west; thence north to the southeast corner of lot 10 of said section 19; thence west along the south line of lot 10 to the shore line of Jackson Lake; thence north and east along the shore line of Jackson Lake to its outlet into the Snake River; thence easterly along the south bank of the Snake River to its intersection with the Buffalo Fork; thence from the said intersection of the Snake River and Buffalo Fork, easterly along the south bank of the Buffalo Fork to the junction with a tributary of said Buffalo Fork approximately in unsurveyed section 6 of partially surveyed township 45 north, range 109 west; thence easterly following up the main hydrographic divide between said tributary and Buffalo Fork to United States Geological Survey bench mark, elevation 10,599 feet; thence northeasterly, continuing along the divide, passing over Buffalo Plateau to the Continental Divide; thence northeasterly, following the Continental Divide to the hydrographic divide formed by the Absaroka Range between the headwaters of Deer Creek, Buffalo Fork, and Yellowstone River; thence northeasterly, continuing along the said hydrographic divide between Thorofare and Bruin Creeks and Deer, Red, Yellow, Tall, and Cabin Creeks, headwaters of Shoshone River, to Kingfisher Peak, elevation 11,100 feet; thence northwesterly along the hydrographic divide between Butte and Pass Creeks and Deer and Ishawooa Creeks, passing over Ishawooa Pass, elevation 9,870 feet, to Ishawooa Cone, elevation 11,840 feet; thence northwesterly along the hydrographic divide between Open, Mountain, and Dike Creeks, and Rampart, Fishhawk, Eyrie, and Eagle Creeks, passing over Overlook Mountain, elevation 11,800 feet; Chaos Mountain, elevation 11,500 feet; and Pinnacle Mountain, elevation 11,400 feet, to a point on the present east boundary line of the Yellowstone National Park, in the State of Wyoming, which is about three-fourths mile south of the boundary monument, marked 6 north, and all the lands lying between the present existing south and east boundary lines and the boundary line as herein described, all of which lands are in the State of Wyoming, are hereby added to and made a part of the Yellowstone National Park.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of section 2475, Revised Statutes, United States, and the act of May 7, 1894, entitled "An act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes"; the act of June 28, 1916, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to protect the birds and animals in Yellowstone National Park and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes,' approved May 7, 1894"; and the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a national-park service, and for other purposes"; and all acts supplementary to and amendatory of said acts are made applicable to and extended over the lands hereby added to the park.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right of way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land: Provided, That under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, all bona fide claimants or entrymen shall have the right to graze, upon lands reasonably adjacent to the lands claimed or owned by them, such number of live stock as they have been accustomed to so graze in the past, or as may be reasonably necessary to the use and utilization of their lands, and to secure timber for use on and for the improvement of their lands: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall have authority, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to grant grazing permits and authorize the grazing of live stock on the lands hereby added to the Yellowstone National Park, to the extent that live stock have heretofore grazed upon these lands under permits issued by the Forest Service, and at fees not to exceed those charged by the Forest Service on adjacent areas.

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall be held to abridge the rights acquired under the reclamation law to the use of Jackson Lake as a reservoir under said law or the taking and use by the Reclamation Service of timber, stone, or other materials needed for the operation and maintenance of the Jackson Lake Reservoir under rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MINING OF METALLIFEROUS MINERALS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. WALSH. I will withhold it for a moment, but I am going to object to the bill. This is a bill that was endeavored to be passed at the last unanimous-consent day under suspension of the rules, and I do not think anything can be heard now to overcome the arguments made against it at that time.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman may remember what the vote was, but I should like to have this bill transferred to the foot of the calendar for the purpose of comparing it carefully with the conference report upon the oil-leasing bill, so as to determine whether it conforms to that legislation, and if we have time to do that, I think I may convince the gentleman that the bill may be properly amended so that it will be satisfactory to him. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be transferred to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL SANITARIUMS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, it was 11 o'clock when we met this morning, but in looking up the RECORD of Saturday I noticed that we were to meet at 12 o'clock, but I did not notice the fact that it was to be on Sunday. There is a bill on the calendar, H. R. 249, which was stricken from the calendar——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman ought not to misstate the RECORD. The RECORD said that we would meet at 12 o'clock on Sunday.

Mr. RAKER. I say it said at 12 o'clock and I thought it meant this morning. I was dictating letters at the time and I looked at the matter hurriedly. Of course it referred to yesterday, but I thought it meant to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. RAKER. My request is that this bill remain on the calendar and retain its place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the bill?

Mr. RAKER. It is the bill H. R. 249, to authorize the Secretary having jurisdiction of the same to set aside certain public lands to be used as national sanitariums by fraternal or benevolent organizations and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it the gentleman's request that the bill remain on the calendar to go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. RAKER. I suppose that will have to be the request, yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that the order has already been made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SALARY OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY, LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1590) providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshal and district attorney for the western district and for the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to make a statement?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will withhold the objection for a moment out of courtesy, although I intend to object.

Mr. WATKINS. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection. This is a Senate bill. It went to the House committee, and the House committee made careful examination. The Attorney General made a favorable report to the Senate committee and to the House committee, and the facts are that the work down there done by the officials now is from three to four times the amount they had to do at the time the salary was fixed in 1896, over 20 years ago.

The population has doubled, and all the facts go to show that the work done in this district now, to which this bill refers, exceeds the amount of work which is done in the other districts of the country in which the salary is equal to or greater than the salary fixed in this bill. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the bill in question has not had any consideration from the committee of the House having jurisdiction of the subject, and I make the objection.

Mr. WATKINS. The Committee on the Judiciary considered it, to which committee the Speaker properly referred the bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission that this bill may be sent to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CRAMTON. It does not matter, and I will not object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER BETWEEN NEBRASKA AND IOWA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13393) to extend the time for constructing the bridge across the Missouri River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved April 22, 1912, to be built across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near South Sioux City, in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, is hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of the approval hereof.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

That the act approved April 22, 1912, authorizing the city of South Sioux City, in the county of Dakota and State of Nebraska, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Missouri River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near South Sioux City, in the county of Dakota, in the State of Nebraska, be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to revive and reenact the act entitled 'An act to authorize the city of South Sioux City, in the State of Nebraska, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa,' approved April 22, 1912."

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALLEGHENY RIVER NEAR MILLVALE BOROUGH, PA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13648) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Millvale borough, in the County of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Allegheny River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the borough of Millvale, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is an error in the printing of the calendar. Calendar No. 278 is intended to be the bill H. R. 13647, which is a bridge bill, and it is printed as 13649, which is also Calendar No. 279. I ask that the bill H. R. 13647 be considered as Unanimous Consent Calendar No. 278.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is, with the reservation of the objection to the bill when considered?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13647) granting consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near McKees Rocks Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report from the Acting Secretary of War states that this bill is identical in its provision with H. R. 13429, returned to the committee with report on December 22, 1918.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I think that bill expired by limitation.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the bill referred to is a bill that has been reported in this session of Congress. I have not had time to examine to see whether that bill has been acted upon by the House or whether it has been reported favorably by the committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. There has been no report or action taken on any of the bills. There have been four bills introduced by the several Members representing Allegheny County and there is a duplication of bills. There was a bill introduced by Mr. PORTER, Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania, and some by myself, and those we have all straightened out, and this is a bill for a bridge at McKees Rocks, across the Ohio River on the north side of Pittsburgh, and it does not conflict with any other bill, and, of course, if it does conflict, it will not be pressed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand, the other bill, identical in purport, has not been reported from the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. It has not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is true. We had a question as to what bill ought to be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near McKees Rocks Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, PITTSBURGH, PA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13649) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River, at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, in the county of Allegheny, and Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 4414 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14920) to amend section 4414, Revised Statutes of the United States, to classify and provide salaries for clerks in the Steamboat-Inspection Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withhold it at the request of the gentleman.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that while this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], I am very much interested in this legislation. It carries an increase for the clerks of the Steamboat-Inspection Service of $6,820, which is applied in 13 cities. The men who are the beneficiaries under this bill are expert stenographers in the offices of the inspectors of steamboats in various parts of the country. I have here before me a transcript made by a stenographer of a trial held here in the city of Washington, a verbatim report, of a steamboat captain as to whether or not his license should be revoked, which stenographer receives in the office of Inspector General of Steamboats only $900 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the existing law the maximum salary is $1,500. According to the estimate submitted this year by the Secretary of Commerce for this service, he estimated that thirteen should receive $1,500, seventeen $1,400, and a number of additional ones at $1,000. No request whatsoever was made by him to increase the salaries of those receiving below $1,500 to the maximum salary. The committee increased the total appropriation of $109,000 by $6,000, making a total of $115,000. Now, if there is an inequality of payment of salary as indicated by the gentleman from Maryland and just instanced by him, it can be corrected by the Secretary of Commerce providing for such increase under the present arrangement, by allotting him an increase of salary commensurate with his work, up to $1,500.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the trouble. This $1,500, under the existing law, is the maximum pay of a clerk in the office of the local inspector, and that pay should be increased, and that is what we undertake to do. For instance, in New York, that great shipping point, the clerk who acts as chief clerk receives the miserable sum of $1,500 a year. In these other ports—San Francisco, Seattle, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, Boston, Providence, Detroit, Buffalo, Cleveland, New Orleans—they all receive the maximum pay of $1,500 a year. It is impossible to keep the men in the service at that rate of pay. The Committee on Appropriations can not allow a larger sum, and it would have been folly for the Secretary of Commerce to go to the Committee on Appropriations and ask for pay of the clerks in the offices of the local inspectors at those places named at the sums carried in this bill or any other sum in excess of $1,500 a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. I grant that; but he did not come and ask for an increase of any salary of those receiving less than $1,500 in his estimates of this year, which he was privileged to do. Now, all these men will receive, I assume, in addition to the $1,500, the $240 increase that was voted very generously by the House to all the employees in the Government service.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If they should, they would not even then receive the pay to which they are entitled for the service rendered. Now, if the gentleman would suggest an amendment, if this bill passes, by which they should not receive the increases provided for in other bills, there might be some merit in the contention; but it seems to me to expect to keep competent men in this service at the rate of pay from $900 to $1,500 a year when these local clerks must practically in every instance be expert stenographers and capable of going into court and reporting the proceedings, is a thing not to be thought of. They are going out of the service because they can not afford to remain in this service at their present rates of pay.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that the chief clerk in the New York office has been in that office since 1898, and his salary was increased only in 1906 to $1,500?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; and he is an expert stenographer. He could readily go to work and leave that office and obtain higher pay. In the city of New York a man should certainly have more than $1,500 who is doing that responsible work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Why, we pay a sweeper in the docks in New York more than that.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are free to go elsewhere and improve their condition if they are dissatisfied with the pay they receive. I am against this bill because the salaries provided are disproportionately large as compared with the salaries carried for men in other parts of the Government service.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The reason for that is that there is a limitation of $1,500 fixed on these salaries.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Secretary has not requested an increase of the appropriation for that purpose. I object.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURNETT). The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be placed, without prejudice, at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York raises the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I hope the gentleman from New York will not raise the point of no quorum. I regard this bill as of great merit, but I would not make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Does the gentleman from New York insist upon his point of no quorum?

Mr. FOSTER. Will not the gentleman from New York withdraw his point?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum is withdrawn. The Clerk will read the next bill.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2653) to revive, with amendments, an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Medical Society of the District of Columbia."

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURNETT). Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. This is to revive a medical society in the District of Columbia that the doctors desire to have revived. It was many years ago when it was first incorporated. It carries with it nothing except incorporation; no other privilege or right.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the District Code can not these gentlemen incorporate here in the District?

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is possibly true, but here is the situation: There are a lot of doctors who practiced here many years ago, some of whom are now out of practice and some are practicing a little, and there was a feeling among them that they wanted to revive the charter and have a reunion, and they wanted to do it under the old incorporation. That is as I understand the situation.

Mr. MANN. It will not be under the old incorporation.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; it revives the old charter.

Mr. MANN. The title revives the old charter, but where does the bill do that?

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that it did.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; somebody drew the title and thought that the title was legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. They were very well satisfied to get it through in this way.

Mr. MANN. It is a new charter. It is not to revive the old charter.

Mr. FOSTER. I have talked with a number of these doctors, some of whom have been here for many, many years, and they told me they wanted to hold a reunion, I think the one hundredth anniversary, and desired to renew the old charter, and that is all there is to this.

Mr. MANN. I am in the position of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They say they know of no reason why the bill should not be enacted, but nobody yet, except my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], has offered any reason why it should be enacted.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the only reason I can offer the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Usually it is better to have affirmative legislation. I do not see why they can not incorporate under the code of the District of Columbia. We incorporate societies by act of Congress where the people do not live in the District.

Mr. FOSTER. I had this put on the Unanimous Consent Calendar after talking with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and with a number of these physicians who have been up to see both the gentleman from Kentucky and myself. That is all there is in it as far as I know.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill on a former occasion was brought up on District of Columbia day, discussed here for a considerable length of time, and defeated.

Mr. FOSTER. Not this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; this identical bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Not this bill, because this bill has only recently been reported.

Mr. MANN. This bill was not reported until January 4, 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was a bill of the same purport.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think I am not mistaken. I think I can confirm it by the RECORD.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Has the gentleman sufficient information to refer to the old charter to see whether it does what it says it does? The bill might be made to say that the act of incorporation of a certain date is hereby revived. I am not making any objection, but it seems to me that might meet the objection which has been made.

Mr. FOSTER. These men seem to be satisfied with this bill, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] reported it, and there was no objection to it in the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

CACHE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4103) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what assurance have we that the men whose land is sought to be transferred to the Government in exchange for their land will accept the other lieu lands?

Mr. WELLING. I have here the written assurance of the gentlemen who are seeking to obtain this exchange, that the land is of substantially the same value and that they desire the exchange. It is all mountain land, and the lands that are sought to be consolidated into the Cache National Forest are all within the exterior limits of the present forest area. The Agricultural Department are anxious to have the exchange made in order to assist in the administration of the forest area, and the people are perfectly willing to accept grazing land of similar character and value outside of the forest.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, then, there are no improvements on the land now owned by these gentlemen. The lands are being used for grazing purposes?

Mr. WELLING. Absolutely, and there are no improvements on the land that they seek in exchange for the land in the forest.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill provides that the land taken in exchange shall be approximately equal in value.

Mr. WELLING. I submit that that is as near a description as one could give. I am entirely familiar with both parcels of land. I should say that the land within the forest area is really more valuable for grazing purposes than the other land, because it is on a mountain range that is better for grazing purposes, there being more water, and therefore more grass and better grazing facilities.

The reason these farmers are willing to accept the exchange is that they own dry farm lands in the new region that has been opened up next to the mountains where they hope to obtain the lands. They consolidate their own land as well as benefit the Forestry Service.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was curious to ascertain the real motive of these various persons to seek an exchange for something that is no greater in value. The gentleman has furnished the information.

Mr. MANN. The Forestry Service wants the exchange.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but I could not understand why the present owners should be desirous of giving up land in the forest reserve and taking other lands of approximately the same value. The gentleman from Utah has furnished the reason, which is to obtain land nearer the dry-farming area.

Mr. MANN. They get better facilities.

Mr. WELLING. The exchange is mutually agreeable to the Forestry Service and the farmers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to accept from the persons named below, title to the following-described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national-forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor:

C. Balling: The southwest quarter of section 15; the west half of section 22, all in township 14 north, range 4 east, Salt Lake meridian.

Ferdinand Zollinger, jr.: The south half of the north half and the south half of section 4; the south half of the north half and the south half of section 5; the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter of section 6; all of section 9; the north half of the northwest quarter of section 10; the north half of the northwest quarter of section 17, all in township 11 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

Conrad Alder: The south half of the northwest quarter, the southwest quarter, the south half of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of section 10; the east half of the east half of section 15; the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 17, all in township 11 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

Robert Murdock: All of sections 18 and 19, township 14 north, range 4 east, Salt Lake meridian.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is also hereby authorized to issue to the persons named below in lieu thereof patents to the following-described areas or to such parts thereof as may be found approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed:

C. Balling: Lots 1 and 2 and the northeast quarter of section 21; the west half of the northwest quarter of section 22; and the southeast quarter of section 28, all in township 13 north, range 19 west, Salt Lake meridian.

Ferdinand Zollinger, jr.: The southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 8; the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, the south half of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 9; the west half of the northeast quarter, the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of section 17, all in township 13 north, range 17 west; the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 9; the north half of section 10; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the west half of the southeast quarter, the east half of the southwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of section 11; the east half, the east half of the west half, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 12, all in township 13 north, range 18 west, Salt Lake meridian.

Conrad Alder: The south half of the southwest quarter of section 10, the west half of the northwest quarter, and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 24, all in township 4 north, range 5 east; the south half of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 26, township 5 north, range 5 east; the north half of the northwest quarter, the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, the west half of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 34, township 5 north, range 5 east, Salt Lake meridian.

SEC. 3. That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become part of the Cache National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk calls attention to an error on line 18, page 3, where the word "eighteen" is misspelled.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that ought to be corrected; it is a clerical error, and the enrolling clerk will probably spell it correctly. If it is amended it would send it back to the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). Objection is heard. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WELLING, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSOLIDATION OF FOREST LAND IN THE CACHE NATIONAL FOREST, UTAH.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2088) to consolidate certain forest lands within the Cache National Forest, Utah, and to add certain lands thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to accept from the persons named below title to the following-described lands, either in whole or in part, upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and approximately equal in value to the lands to be given in exchange therefor:

Isaac P. Stewart: The southwest quarter of the southwest quarter and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21; the south half of the northeast quarter and the west half of section 28; all of sections 29, 30, and 31; the southeast quarter and the west half of section 33, all in township 11 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

James E. Hansen: All of section 19, township 11 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

William H. Stewart: All of section 5, township 10 north, range 2 east, Salt Lake meridian.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is also hereby authorized to issue to the persons named below in lieu thereof patents to the following-described areas or to such parts thereof as may be found approximately equal in value to the lands conveyed:

Isaac P. Stewart: Lots 3 and 4, the northwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of section 1; the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 12; lot 4, section 30, all in township 13 north, range 18 west, Salt Lake meridian; the east half of section 11; the west half and the southeast quarter of section 15; the south half of section 27; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of section 33; all of section 34, all in township 13 north, range 19 west, Salt Lake meridian.

James E. Hansen: Lots 1, 2, and 3 in section 1; the north half of the southeast quarter, section 12, township 14 north, range 5 west; lots 1, 2, 3, and 4 in section 6, the north half of the southwest quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter, and the northeast quarter in section 7, township 14 north, range 4 west, Salt Lake meridian.

William H. Stewart: The southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 23, the south half of the northwest quarter and the southwest quarter of section 24, the west half of the northwest quarter and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 25, the east half of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of section 26, all in township 13 north, range 18 west, Salt Lake meridian.

SEC. 3. That the lands conveyed to the Government shall thereupon become part of the Cache National Forest and subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WELLING, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4244) for the relief of entrymen within the Castle Peak irrigation project in Utah.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, do I understand that these entrymen on these lands in the reclamation project will only have the same rights that entrymen generally would have under any irrigation project?

Mr. MAYS. They would have to make arrangements for water.

Mr. STAFFORD. They could not get any additional privileges more than they have under the general law.

Mr. MAYS. None whatever.

Mr. STAFFORD. This merely protects their rights until the project is completed.

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAYS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS IN ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was S. J. Res. 198, to suspend the legal requirements of assessment work on mining claims in Alaska for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919, and extending to that Territory the provisions of public resolution No. 10, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved July 17, 1917, and public resolution No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved October 5, 1917, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am somewhat acquainted with the purpose of this remedial legislation. I recognize the need of passing some such resolution as this so far as the work of prior years is concerned, but I can not see the need for having it also extend to the year 1919.

Mr. FOSTER. The representation made before our committee was that the conditions were such in Alaska that it was a question whether people would get back there or not to do this work, and for that reason they were permitted to apply it to Alaska for one additional year. This representation was made by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] very forcibly before the Committee on Mines and Mining. It was done at his earnest solicitation on account of conditions obtaining up there at this time as he knows them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I take it that if we adopt this resolution extending the privilege to the year 1919 it will not be taken as a precedent to apply throughout the entire United States?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no. We have a bill to extend it generally in this country, to which I have not been at all favorable.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish the action taken in this case to be taken as a precedent and used as an argument for the passage of other legislation pertaining to the United States generally.

Mr. FOSTER. So far as I am concerned, I made no objection to this, but I am not agreeable to the other now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while we are at it, there is a Senate joint resolution 156, two bills below on the Calendar. Does that apply to Alaska also?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I think it would apply to Alaska. That applies generally to suspending the mining claims wherever the mining claims are located.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of public resolution No. 10, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved July 17, 1917, and the provisions of public resolution No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved October 5, 1917, and amendments thereto, be, and they are hereby, extended to the Territory of Alaska. The laws requiring assessment work to be made upon mining claims in the Territory of Alaska for the years 1917, 1918, and 1919 are hereby suspended for such period; and no forfeiture or relocation of any mining claim or mining location in said Territory shall be permitted or adjudged for failure to do or have done the annual assessment work thereon for either of said years; and no mining claim or location therein shall be held to be forfeited or subject to relocation for any failure to have done the annual assessment work thereon where the owner or anyone for him complied with the provisions of public resolution No. 10, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved July 17, 1917, or public resolution No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved October 5, 1917, and amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I misunderstood the statement, with the confusion going on in the hall. Senate joint resolution 156 follows this. Is there any objection to that resolution? Of course, it is a little late, so far as this is concerned.

Mr. FOSTER. We could not tell that until we get to it. Let us pass this one first.

Mr. RAKER. I understood that the chairman is in favor of Senate joint resolution 156.

Mr. FOSTER. I was very strongly in favor of it when it was reported.

Mr. RAKER. There is some misunderstanding, for when it was referred to a moment ago——

Mr. FOSTER. This was reported before the war closed, and conditions have changed since that time.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say now that the question of the assessment of mining claims this year is exceedingly important, and many of those miners, prospectors, are pleading with all the strength they can that this relief be extended for the year 1919.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us get through with this, and then we can go on to the other. That can be taken up then under the regular rules of the House. Let us pass this first.

Mr. RAKER. Sure, but I thought if there was any question——

Mr. FOSTER. I can not tell what the House is going to do. I am a very poor guesser, for I thought a little while ago that they would pass a bill that I was interested in, but they did not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. RAKER. My time has not yet expired, has it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No.

Mr. RAKER. Of course, we will not prevent or delay the other, because that ought to be passed.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman, if he has any qualms about it, that I intend to object to Senate joint resolution 156.

Mr. RAKER. There was a misunderstanding before because all of these reports went out to people——

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose there are some different conditions in the country from what there were then?

Mr. RAKER. No; conditions are worse now than then in the mining districts where this legislation was originally intended to apply to give them relief in 1917 and 1918.

Mr. FOSTER. The bill was passed originally, as the gentleman will remember, during the war in 1917, with the understanding that labor was scarce and that the labor might be employed to better advantage during the war, and as they should be expected to do $100 worth of work in some useful occupation for the winning of the war. Now, of course that was a condition under which we passed that bill, and the gentleman knows about the conditions out there now very much better than I do, and we supposed from what we had been hearing throughout the United States that there was not the scarcity of labor now.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call attention to this, and in regard to the question of unemployed labor, there is some question over the United States in regard to it, and undoubtedly in many places there is a lot of unemployed labor, but these men who have their mining claims——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES BY MINERS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1849) permitting miners of the age of 18 years or over to make homestead entry of the public lands of the United States.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be retained on the calendar and go to the foot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 156) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the continuation of the war in which the United States is now engaged and until midnight of December 31 of the year following that in which such war is concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration at the present time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, there seems to have been a general understanding among the miners of the West, so far as I have been advised, that this bill unquestionably would be enacted. Where they got that information from I am not in a position to say, because I do not know. It passed the Senate; it was on the calendar, and, under the conditions existing in the West, the bill ought to pass. The material that the men have to purchase is so high and the work they have to do is such that it is really an excessive burden, and they were in great hopes that this bill might be passed at this session of Congress. I understand that the Committee on Mines and Mining unanimously reported the bill after a hearing.

Mr. LOBECK. And the facts are, the labor is very scarce in the mining country out there where mining goes on.

Mr. RAKER. There is a good deal in that, particularly in gold mining, because that is what this applies to.

Mr. LOBECK. Well, gold and silver and other material that is found in the Rockies and the western mountains in this country.

Mr. RAKER. I repeat, even with the accusation of being unnecessary——

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman speak louder?

Mr. RAKER. There is a little confusion, and I do not wish to take up the time of the House——

Mr. WALSH. The silvery tones of the gentleman will overcome that.

Mr. RAKER. We have had a great deal of unanimity here to-day, and I desire to say that this bill is vital for the mining districts.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. And for other districts besides. The mining districts in my State involve a great many hundreds of claims like this. I simply raised the question on the other bill so as to call the matter up, that there would be no question that this bill would be enacted into law. No one will be injured, the Government will not be injured, but you will injure a great many of these men who have been doing all they can to assist in the winning of this war.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If the gentleman will permit, I was very much interested in the last bill which passed, which related to Alaska. And in looking up matters and things in connection with it I discovered that in the civil-rights bill passed and approved March 8, 1918, there is a clause which seems to me to cover the bill of the gentleman from California. I do not object to the bill at all. I quite approve of it as a general proposition, but I was not sure at the time but what this clause of the civil-rights bill covered the bill from Alaska.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Let me read this clause, if you will:

SEC. 501. That no right to any public lands initiated or acquired prior to entering military service by any person under the homestead laws, the desert-land laws, the mining-land laws, or any other laws of the United States, shall be forfeited or prejudiced by reason of his absence from such land, or of his failure to perform any work or make any improvements thereon, or to do any other act required by any such law during the period of such service.

Mr. RAKER. I will say to the gentleman that that applies to those who entered the service. His bill came before the Committee on Public Lands, and I am in favor of it, because it ought to be the law. It came before the House, but some remarks were made that there was a question about the other bill, and I can not understand it, and I wanted to take the opportunity to be heard without taking much of the time of the House to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. Is there objection?

The STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. There is no time. I want to be heard. Now, I trust the House will give me an opportunity to speak a few moments more on this bill, which is of vital importance to my district as well as the mining districts of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time?

Mr. RAKER. I want a few more minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Five minutes? I will reserve my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must ask unanimous consent if he desires to do it.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is reserving his right to object. Now, the five-minute rule does not apply to explaining a matter if the party reserves his right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it ought to apply.

Mr. RAKER. It did not apply to-day. If it applies to me to-night, you should enforce the rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. The rule invariably is to extend only five minutes under reservation of objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California have five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. The rule has never been in force, and it is not considered enforceable and if you enforce it now when it does not apply, when a man reserves his right to object, then let the other rules apply from now on to-night. In proceeding I would like to answer the questions on this mining bill, and I want to devote my remarks to it and that alone, but before I do I would like to know.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair is slightly in error. In the Committee of the Whole it has become the practice now to enforce the five-minute rule on a reservation of objection. But we are in the House and the five-minute rule does not apply in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are in the House on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MANN. We are all working by unanimous consent, and anybody can demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; and the Chair thought it ought to be followed, to be entirely frank with the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair was going to rule, whether right or wrong.

Mr. RAKER. What was the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is whether there is objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that the gentleman from California proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. A parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair hold that when a Member of the House reserves the right to object that that Member only has five minutes in which to explain the bill? If that is the rule——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the rule. There is no precedent upon it. There is no rule upon it. The Chair thinks the same rule ought to apply that applies in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RAKER. I want to say this to the Chair: I hope this rule will not be applied to me to-night, when it has not been applied in this House at any time since I have been here for eight years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California, of course, understands that the Chair is not applying that rule in any way personally to him.

Mr. RAKER. I understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that that is the rule which obtains in the Committee of the Whole, and it is constantly enforced, and ought to be enforced in the House on the Unanimous Consent Calendar when the reservation of an objection is made.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, it never has been enforced in the House, but the House can protect itself by demanding the regular order at any time.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Has not the Chair, as a Member of the House, the right to stop debate at any time by exercising his right to demand the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman means the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has no rights whatever.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I misunderstood the Chair; I meant the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understand that on the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] seven or eight minutes ago unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to speak for five minutes. That time has expired. There are a lot of other Members here who have bills that they are waiting for, and, in common fairness, the business ought to be expedited, so that we can all get along and get some chance.

Mr. RAKER. I trust there will be no personal criticism when I occupy the floor of the House, as other Members do, with proper and legitimate business; and there is no need of attempting to criticize to the effect that the rest do not get their opportunity, because they do. I have not taken away any opportunity from anybody.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that nobody else gets as much opportunity as the gentleman does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has ruled on the proposition. Whether rightly or wrongly, it will be determined later. There was a request on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that the gentleman from California proceed for five minutes; and the gentleman from California will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, speaking specifically to this bill, it is but a reenactment of resolutions that have already passed. I am directing my remarks specifically to the gentleman reserving the right to object, and hope that he will not finally object to this resolution.

Mr. WALSH. But he has objected.

Mr. RAKER. No. He has reserved the right to object, as I understand.

Mr. WALSH. No. He objected, and the gentleman got five minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the gentleman will change his mind again.

Mr. RAKER. I am sure that the gentleman from Wisconsin is fair and tries to get at legislation in such a way as to give proper results, so as to give those who are entitled to protection the proper protection under the law that they should have, and when matters are called to his attention he, as all others, does not persist in an objection, although he has made one, as it has occurred to-day several times. Now, there can be no injustice done to the Government. There can be no disadvantage of the Government. The Government can not be the loser by the extension or suspension of the time, and that is all it means in this work for the year 1919.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. GANDY. I want to say that in the district I have the honor to represent we have quite a large section of mining country, and this assessment proposition is serious to a lot of men this year. It is not serious to the big mining corporations or to people, as we say, who are well fixed in life, but it is serious to the little men, the prospectors, who have gone the limit in the purchase of liberty bonds, and war savings stamps, and Red Cross contributions, and everything of that kind, who find themselves to-day just on the eve of another liberty loan campaign with their finances exhausted. They are really unable to go ahead on their land and continue the development of it in assessment work. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. What prevents them during the remainder of the calendar year 1919 from performing another $100 worth of work to take care of their rights under their claims? Good weather is coming.

Mr. RAKER. In many instances these men are now away from their mining claims. They are in the Government service at other places.

Mr. STAFFORD. They will have 10 months in which to perform the modicum of work of $100.

Mr. RAKER. No; this is for this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. The year 1919, and they will have 10 months yet.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] has but stated what is the condition in every other mining district. This affects the prospectors, it affects the men who have mining claims, 90 per cent of them, and they are the men who ought to have relief. It is not doing a wrong act to anybody, but is simply saying that during the year 1919 they will not have to expend $100 on their claims, but that before they get title after 1919 they must have expended, as the law directs, the full amount of $500 on their claims before they can obtain patents.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman's argument is well founded, why not relieve them altogether until 1947, as long as they are in the Government service?

Mr. RAKER. They are not asking for that.

Mr. WALSH. I know they are not; but the argument the gentleman makes would apply to such a claimant.

Mr. RAKER. I am only making the same argument that applied to the bill that just passed.

Mr. WALSH. They have got six months after the treaty of peace. The gentleman is carrying it until December 31, 1920, and that seems to be unreasonable.

Mr. RAKER. No; under the law which we passed it expired on December 31, 1918. We are simply asking that you extend it until the treaty of peace has been signed.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; the bill says until December 31 of the year following that in which the war was concluded. That is December 31, 1920.

Mr. RAKER. It covers the year 1919.

Mr. WALSH. It covers the year 1920.

Mr. RAKER. If that is all the gentleman wants, we will amend it so as to cover this year—1919.

Mr. WALSH. The present law carries it six months after the conclusion of the treaty of peace.

Mr. RAKER. No; the present law ended on the 31st day of December, 1918. It does not include this year.

Mr. FOSTER. For general mining claims it expired December 31, 1918. What the gentleman has in mind probably is the law referring to soldiers who are in the service. That extends six months beyond the time of the close of the war.

Mr. GANDY. It has simply to do with the assessment work this year. That is what we are interested in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Something may occur between now and the close of the session. I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar and go to the foot of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, let me inquire as to the status of these bills that are objected to to-day and then sent to the foot of the calendar. In the event that we succeed in going through the calendar today, will we start in again on those that have been sent to the foot?

Mr. RAKER. Not to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not to-day.

Mr. MANN. We certainly will not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that this bill go to the foot of the calendar?

There was no objection.

PATENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8763) to amend the act entitled "An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens," approved August 17, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, more than a year ago when this bill was brought up for consideration I objected to it. The war was then on, and the war is now over. What reason can be advanced why this bill should be given consideration at the present time, when communication has been reestablished in all countries?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely mistaken about the change in conditions from the time when he objected to the bill to the present time. Within the last week I have had a letter from the Commissioner of Patents urging the necessity of the passage of this bill. Unless it is passed inventors of other countries will have an advantage over American inventors.

All we are trying to do with this is to put the belligerent countries in the same position as the enemy countries so far as the issue of patents.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain where the inventors of other countries have an advantage over those of America if this bill is not passed?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Because the patent laws are reciprocal, and foreign countries have passed this kind of a reciprocal law, allowing additional time to file and complete patents and claims. If this country does not adopt it, other countries having passed laws which permit the reciprocal extension and filing of claims, the inventors of other countries will have an opportunity to do so, while similar chances will not be given to the inventors in this country. I have within the last day or two received a letter from the patent attorneys in Washington in which this statement is made. It says:

Until a bill of this character becomes law United States manufacturers desiring to obtain patent protection in a foreign country are at a disadvantage as compared with citizens of the allied, neutral, or even enemy countries, since nearly all countries have granted extensions, but these extensions apply only to "citizens of countries granting reciprocal benefits."

Suppose, for instance, a citizen of the United States desires to ship to Norway the product manufactured by him in this country, or desires to install a plant in Norway. His first act naturally is to apply for patent protection in that country; but the ordinary period for taking such action (which is based on the filing date of his United States patent) may have already expired, and he can not claim before the courts the benefit of the extension which Norway grants to citizens of other countries, because the United States has failed to pass a law granting reciprocal benefits to subjects of Norway.

Mr. STAFFORD. From the reading of the letter the subjects of Norway would not have reciprocal advantages over those of the United States.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. They would if dealing with other countries.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand we passed a remedial measure extending the privilege to inventors by permitting them an extension of nine months beyond the period required by law in case they were filed before January 1, 1918.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. We did not pass that law. We passed it for enemy countries, but not for neutral or allied countries. We have dealt fairly with the enemies, but not with our friends. Section 7 follows the identical provision in the espionage bill or the enemy trading act in regard to enemy countries.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me call the attention of the gentleman who reported the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Patents, to the act of August 17, 1916, and see whether he is correct or I am correct in the statement that I just made. The gentleman states that this act only applied to the subjects of enemy countries:

That any applicant for letters patent or registration of any trademark print or label being within the provisions of this act, if unable on account of the existing and continuing state of war to file any application or pay any official fee, or take any required action within the period now limited by law, shall be granted an extension of nine months beyond the expiration of said period.

I shall not take the time of the House to read sections 2 and 3 of that act of August 17, 1916, applying to foreign-born subjects.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. That is up to a certain date. Here is a statement from the Commissioner of Patents upon that very point:

After the outbreak of the European war nearly every country in Europe passed laws extending the period of priority. In some instances they were extended for limited periods, in others they were extended until after the war was over, but in nearly every instance a foreigner was held entitled to such an extension only if his country granted reciprocal privileges. For instance, the French decree reads as follows:

"ART. 5. The provisions of the decree of August 14, 1914, suspending the time limits in the matter of patents and of designs and models from and after August 1, shall be enjoyed by subjects and citizens of foreign countries only in so far as such countries have accorded or may hereafter accord, by way of reciprocity, equivalent privileges to the citizens of France and of the French protectorates."

So this is to reach a condition which that law did not reach.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to extend the privilege to all those whose rights arose since August 1, 1914—that is, if they did not avail themselves of the privileges under the enabling act or the remedial act of August 17, 1916.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. It has been impossible for them to file them.

Mr. STAFFORD. All this amounts to is an extension of time in which the inventors can obtain patents.

Mr. MANN. May I ask a question? Under existing law a citizen of an allied country has a right to file an application for a patent here within one year from the time he files it at home?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is there to interfere with filing claims here?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. It is claimed that it was impossible for representatives of inventors to travel from one country to another, the mail has been delayed, and for many reasons it has been practically impossible for them to complete their claims.

Mr. MANN. I know. I suppose they always claim that, and they will claim they could not do it within nine months, but we know that there has been constant mail service and more or less traveling across the water. What is to prevent it unless the Government itself has prevented it, and this Government has not prevented it?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Let me say to the gentleman that other countries have considered it desirable to pass similar laws to this. I started to read the enactment of France, which is almost identical with the provisions of this act. This is from the French decree:

The provisions of the decree of August 14, 1914, suspending the time limits in the matter of patents and of designs and models from and after August 1 shall be enjoyed by subjects and citizens of foreign countries only in so far as such countries have accorded or may hereafter accord by way of reciprocity equivalent privileges to the citizens of France and of the French protectorates.

Mr. MANN. What has there been to prevent an American citizen from filing an application for patent in France?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. The Patent Office has strongly recommended this on the ground that it was impossible, at least it was not done, and that these other countries have seen fit to pass laws of a similar nature, and the commissioner feels that we should act similarly. He regards it as absolutely necessary to protect our own inventors who have been unable, according to his statements, to complete their claims abroad.

Mr. MANN. I did not know how much there is in that. He seems to be very much exercised because there are 100 applications for patents here which can not be granted under existing law made by citizens of foreign countries.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. It is claimed that the advantage will be to Americans, rather than to foreigners. Of course, Americans are barred from getting additional time in foreign countries as long as they fail to grant the additional time here, because the laws are reciprocal.

Mr. MANN. If somebody will give us an illustration why an American citizen has not been able to file application for patent abroad within a year, after he has filed one at home, very well, but I can not understand why.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I have only the statement of the Commissioner of Patents and the Interior Department that that is the fact, and this legislation has already passed the Senate, and I have had many urgent requests——

Mr. MANN. I remember when the original bill passed the House. I think I objected to it at first; I know I did for a while, and held it up. I did not think very much of that, and the Commissioner of Patents and the others all assured us that if that were done everything would be lovely and the goose would hang high. Now, without giving any reason or any facts, he wants to extend the time for nine months, and when that is up he will want to extend it longer.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. No; I do not imagine there will be any further requests for extension. I believe this is a measure that is necessary on account of the difficulties of communication. It takes two weeks now to get a cable across from here to Paris.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it does not take two weeks. It does not take more than two hours to get a communication——

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Word was sent to me yesterday that it took two weeks.

Mr. MANN. That may be in some cases. Plenty of stuff is coming from over there.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I know it is.

Mr. MANN. And plenty of stuff is going that way. The cables are in the control of the Postmaster General.

Mr. CRAMTON. It takes 10 days to get a letter from the House Office Building to the Red Cross in Washington. That is my experience.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this is nothing to me.

Mr. MANN. We understand that.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I am acting for the Department of the Interior, and I am satisfied they would not be so urgent about this and so anxious to pass it if they were not satisfied it was highly desirable to do it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I suspect there are many applications for patents for things that have been invented because of the war, growing out of the war, where people have not yet made their applications and where they want to make them hereafter. Many things would never have been invented at all if it had not been for the war, but they are not willing to take their chances. They want special favors, and I think we ought to have some information before we extend a monopoly, because that is what a patent is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER, BUFFALO, N. Y.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13485) granting the consent of Congress to Oliver Cabana, jr., Myron S. Hall, E. G. Connette, and William F. MacGlashan to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Oliver Cabana, jr., Myron S. Hall, E. G. Connette, and William F. MacGlashan, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Niagara River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, within or near the city limits of Buffalo, in the county of Erie, in the State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That, subject to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War may permit the persons herein named to construct a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of the bridge herein authorized, in accordance with the foregoing act approved March 23, 1906, so far as the same may be applicable.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge or tunnels is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, let me say this is really an extension of an act passed in 1916. The act expired some time in September, and this bill is in exactly the same form as the law which was passed in 1916 after the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had gone to Buffalo and looked over the situation carefully and had returned and had a hearing and reported the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is this bridge intended to be built?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. At or near Buffalo, wherever the approval is given by the engineers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is my memory in fault that in the last Congress we passed a bill providing for the construction of a bridge across Niagara River at or near Buffalo?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. That is the bill which I referred to, back in 1916.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have not we passed a bill since then?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. No; we have no vehicle bridge across the Niagara River at Buffalo. The purpose of this bill is to build a bridge across the Niagara River so as to have closer relation to Canada, and the public bodies of Buffalo, the chamber of commerce and other civic bodies, have been urging the building of such a bridge.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I will.

Mr. MANN. Are these men of financial standing?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I will say to the gentleman the first man, Mr. Cabana, is the head of the Liberty Bank of Buffalo. Mr. Hall, the second man, is the president of the Buffalo Trust Co. Mr. Connette is president of the International Railway Co., which operates all the street cars in Buffalo and on the suburban lines. Mr. MacGlashan is the president of the Beaver Board Co., which has plants all over this and other countries. Mr. Bradley is head of one of the biggest manufacturing plants in Buffalo. Mr. Hurt, I do not know so much about, but these men are all responsible.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman mentioned last is not included in the list of incorporators.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. The gentleman has the wrong bill. I introduced another bill.

Mr. MANN. We have the bill as reported and those names are not in here.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I was reading from the Senate bill. The bill is on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. This is not a mere speculative proposition?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Absolutely not. These men do not want to build a bridge——

Mr. MANN. I went to Buffalo with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I think over 20 years ago, and they were going to build a bridge the very next day.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Well, the same situation prevails now. We want to get a bridge, and have been trying to induce somebody to build it, and these men are big enough so that they can be trusted, and the people are sure they will not abuse the permit.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to give everybody a right, if it is not a mere stock-jobbing proposition and is all right. This is not such a proposition?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. This is not. These are leading men of the city.

Mr. CRAMTON. And these gentlemen have no interest adverse to the building of the bridge?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I suppose the gentleman from New York will take the Senate bill from the Speaker's table and ask that it be considered in lieu of the House bill?

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. I ask that the Senate bill be now considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5534) granting the consent of Congress to Oliver Cabana, jr., Myron S. Hall, E. G. Connette, William F. MacGlashan, John H. Bradley, and M. A. Hurt to construct a bridge across Niagara River within or near the city limits of Buffalo, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Oliver Cabana, jr., Myron S. Hall, E. G. Connette, William F. MacGlashan, John H. Bradley, and M. A. Hurt, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Niagara River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, within or near the city limits of Buffalo, in the county of Erie, in the State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That, subject to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War may permit the persons herein named to construct a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of the bridge herein authorized, in accordance with the foregoing act approved March 23, 1906, so far as the same may be applicable.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge or tunnels is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. MANN, the bill H. R. 13485, of similar tenor, was laid on the table.

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13482) creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's victory memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this bill provides for the creation of a very large commission for administering the small monument.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a large monument.

Mr. STAFFORD. A large monument located on a small island to commemorate a great event. Will the gentleman advise the committee as to the necessity of allowing the expenses of this large commission to be paid out of the fees that are charged for admission to these grounds?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will tell the gentleman as briefly as possible. All I know about the bill is just what I learned when some distinguished gentlemen appeared before the committee and asked for its favorable report.

In March, 1911, the Congress made an appropriation of $250,000 to help build the monument on Lake Erie, having in view the double purpose of commemorating the Perry victory and also, although the logic of it I did not quite follow, I must confess, the celebration of the conclusion of 100 years of peace with Great Britain, because following the Perry victory the treaty was made by which armed ships of war were taken off the Lakes, and there have been none there since. The nine States referred to in the report that I wrote, to wit, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Michigan, Kentucky, Illinois, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, and Ohio, made contributions, and the bill provides that after, in the course of nature, many of these commissioners who have been interested in the gathering of funds and looking after the construction of the monument shall have passed over, there will be three commissioners appointed by the President, and only three, from each of the States.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the necessity of having representatives from each of the States?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I can not tell. I did not see any necessity for it myself. I favored a commission of three or, at most, five men. But the gentlemen who urged it said the people of the States wanted it, and the governors of the States wanted it, and I saw no good reason why it should not be done.

Mr. MANN. The monument was put up that way.

Mr. STAFFORD. The State of Illinois contributed, and the State of Wisconsin contributed, and other States contributed, and each State appointed commissioners to supervise the construction. Was it intended that those commissioners should hold office for life?

Mr. MANN. After all, a good many of the commissioners are dead now, or some of them are, that constructed this monument. This bill only provides we shall appoint commissioners to begin with, and as vacancies occur they shall not be filled.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the bill also provides that their expenses shall be paid out of these fees that are to be charged for seeing this monument?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The thought occurred to me—and I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether that was considered by the committee—that this monument should be placed exclusively under the jurisdiction of the park authorities of the National Government. I do not see justification for Congress sanctioning and recognizing the fee system—charging people a fee to see a great monument to commemorate a great victory—so as to defray the expenses of a commission, and also, it is true, for its maintenance.

Mr. MANN. Congress came in as a second horse here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If Congress had paid all the expense and wanted to administer this park exclusively, what the gentleman from Wisconsin says might have some application; but people go there from Cleveland and Detroit and Toledo and other places, and they do not object to paying the small fee that is charged, and it will keep up and partially pay the expenses. Few people, comparatively, go to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are excursions running out from Toledo and Detroit and Cleveland during the summer, and the place is patronized by thousands of people. I believe, as in the case of national parks, this park should be open to the public without charge.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. Here are a lot of citizens who have put up this monument without asking aid directly from the Government. The Government, it is true, did contribute a little in the end, on the theory of the commemoration of 100 years of peace. But let us do something without requiring the Government to pay all the expenses of running it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here are five Members from Wisconsin, gentlemen who went down there, I suppose, at the expense of the State of Wisconsin and had a nice junket at the expense of the funds provided by the State. Now, it is intended that their expenses in the future shall be paid out of these fees.

Mr. MANN. That, of course, means that there will not be much pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. The expense should be paid by Congress. Reserving further the right to object, Mr. Speaker, would it not be agreeable to the gentleman from Texas to allow this board to consist only of three Members on the part of the United States?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would be breaking faith with the committee if I consented to any such thing as that.

I want to say to the gentleman that with reference to charging fees, that custom prevails throughout Europe, and I think it is a very wise one, because people who go traveling and who want to see these monuments and places of interest ought to be willing to pay for that privilege.

Mr. STAFFORD. The persons who visit this monument are usually persons who can not afford to pay. They are mostly excursionists.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I may say that they are people who can afford to go, because otherwise they would not go. They enjoy it, and there is no reason why they should not pay a trifling fee, instead of assessing it against the taxpayers. It must be paid by somebody.

Mr. STAFFORD. To-day we created a national park, the Mount Desert public monument, which is patronized mostly by the wealthy. Here is the Put in Bay Monument, patronized mostly by the day excursionists from Cleveland and Toledo and Detroit. They take advantage of the excursion rate to go down to Put in Bay. You are going to charge a fee to those people, and you are going to charge it with the sanction of the Government of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. They will appreciate it all the more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13482) creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's Victory Memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes.

Whereas there has been erected by the Perry's Victory Centennial Commission, composed of members appointed pursuant to law, a great memorial monument on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, at a cost of approximately $1,000,000, perpetually memorializing the victory of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry in the Battle of Lake Erie, and Gen. William Henry Harrison's northwestern campaign in the War of 1812, and commemorating the century of peace which has ensued between Great Britain and the United States since the termination of that conflict by the signing of the treaty of Ghent; and

Whereas the Federal Government and the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, New York, Rhode Island, Kentucky, and Massachusetts have severally contributed to the payment of such cost; and

Whereas the legal title to the land constituting the site whereon said memorial has been erected is vested in the United States solely, in perpetual trust, for the use, occupancy, and enjoyment of said memorial and other memorial public uses and purposes not inconsistent with said memorial; and

Whereas said memorial is now self-sustaining and will so continue as to the maintenance thereof, if due provision is made for its care and protection: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That a Perry's Victory Memorial Commission is hereby created, consisting of Nelson A. Miles, Charles H. Davis, and J. Warren Keifer, commissioners of the United States; George H. Worthington, Webster P. Huntington, S. M. Johannsen, Eli Winkler, and Horace Holbrook, commissioners from the State of Ohio; A. E. Sisson, Milton W. Shreve, Edwin H. Vare, T. C. Jones, and George W. Neff, commissioners from the State of Pennsylvania; Arthur P. Loomis, John C. Lodge, Roy S. Barnhart, and E. K. Warren, commissioners from the State of Michigan; William H. Thompson, Chesley R. Perry, James Pugh, Richard S. Folsom, Nelson W. Lampert, Adam Weckler, William Porter Adams, Willis J. Wells, W. H. McIntosh, and H. S. Beckemeyer, commissioners from the State of Illinois; Frederick M. Symonds, John M. Whitehead, A. W. Sanborn, C. B. Perry, S. W. Randolph, Louis Bohmrich, and Sol P. Huntington, commissioners from the State of Wisconsin; William J. Conners, George D. Emerson, John F. Malone, Edward D. Jackson, Simon L. Adler, Martin H. Glynn, William F. Rafferty, William L. Ormrod, Charles H. Wiltsie, and Jacob Shifferdecker, commissioners from the State of New York; John P. Sanborn, Louis N. Arnold, Sumner Mowry, Henry Davis, and Harry Cutler, commissioners from the State of Rhode Island; and Henry Watterson, Andrew Cowan, Samuel M. Wilson, R. W. Nelson, and Mackenzie R. Todd, commissioners from the State of Kentucky, who shall serve without compensation save necessary expenses.

As vacancies occur in the commission on the part of the several States, they shall remain unfilled until only three commissioners from each State remain; thereafter the commissioners from each State shall be three.

When a vacancy shall occur in the commission on the part of the United States it shall be filled by the President of the United States, and when such vacancy shall occur on the part of any State the same shall be filled by the President of the United States on the recommendation of the governor of such State.

SEC. 2. That said commission, upon the said memorial and the site thereof being turned over to it, shall forthwith have full possession and control thereof with power to maintain, improve, protect, and preserve the same from injury thereto so far as its revenues will permit, and with power to appoint all necessary officers, agents, and employees, and to fix their compensation; also to have such other powers as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes and objects and to fulfill the duties of the commission. It shall not contract any debt or obligation payable otherwise than from the net revenues derived from its operation and management of said site and memorial or that may be derived by it from other sources.

SEC. 3. That the title to said memorial and site hitherto conveyed to the United States by the State of Ohio is hereby accepted by the United States for the uses, purposes, and trusts therein and by this act provided.

SEC. 4. That the said commission is authorized and empowered to receive donations and bequests, to improve said site, and to erect thereon, when sufficient funds are available for such purposes, other structures of a general public character, but the same shall harmonize with the memorial, and such structures when erected shall become subject wholly to said commission, and the title to the same shall vest as does the title to said site and memorial and be subject to the same uses, possession, trust, control, and management.

SEC. 5. That said commission, through its president and treasurer, shall make, in writing, a report to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States on the first Monday in December of each year, in which shall be stated the condition of the said site and memorial as to preservation and all receipts and disbursements of money pertaining thereto.

SEC. 6. That the officers of the commission shall be a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer, and such other officers, agents, and employees as it may deem necessary.

The commission shall have power to adopt rules and by-laws for its government and to provide the methods of voting and the number of votes each State having more than three commissioners shall cast at its meeting.

SEC. 7. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF TITLE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title to S. 5038, which was passed under suspension of the rules, may be corrected by the Clerk to conform to the text of the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman indicated to the clerk how it is to be changed?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not, but I will do so.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 3217) providing for an increase of authorization for the Federal building at Steubenville, in the State of Ohio.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the author of the bill as to the need of such a large addition as $150,000, which is by $30,000 more than the amount that was originally appropriated for this building. I understand that it is occasioned by the Federal court holding a term there and for accommodations for the court.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. The report is quite full, and explains that specifically, better than I can. The estimate of $150,000 increase was made by the department uninfluenced, and it is made on a low basis of expense for construction, prewar basis.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice that the letter of the United States district judge printed in the report gives the impression that the establishment of this fine, ornate public building will rather develop Federal litigation, and he cites the case of Dayton as having resulted in the development of such litigation by reason of the establishment of a Government building there. What kind of a judge have you out there, if I may inquire, who will make a recommendation of that purport?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. I think my friend does not understand that letter.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read the letter. Perhaps I am in error, and if I am I certainly do not wish to do this district judge an injustice. He says:

I sincerely hope that Steubenville may get its Federal building soon. There will be no court of any consequence there until that result is accomplished. It was so at Dayton. After the building was dedicated and a place thus furnished for a deputy clerk the business immediately developed, and year before last there were 56 cases that came into the court at Dayton alone.

That language may not have justified the statement I made, but I thought I was within bounds in claiming that this judge is inclined to desire ornate and luxurious quarters.

Mr. GORDON. So as to increase litigation.

Mr. STAFFORD. As the gentleman from Ohio suggests, to increase litigation.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Dayton is close to Cincinnati, and when there was no place in Dayton to hold the court, naturally the business was all transacted in Cincinnati. After they got a building in Dayton, then the business was transacted there, just as it will be in Steubenville. That was what the judge meant.

Mr. GORDON. All the business in that territory will be transacted there?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Yes. At the present time every case that can be taken to Columbus is taken there. That is what the judge means.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has a very unique way of expressing his intention, if that is his real purpose.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. That is his real purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. He knows how to use the English language so as to carry an impression just the opposite to that which he wishes to convey.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. The State has been divided into Federal districts and the courts fixed there ever since 1915. The judge has been holding court just where he could find a place.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have any plans been drawn for the construction of this building?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. They are simply awaiting the action of Congress. This bill has been passed twice, but by some means or other it got into a committee and stayed there, and failed in the last Congress simply because of getting into a committee pigeonhole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has it passed this House before?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. It has passed this House and also passed the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the bill was passed before, I do not wish to go further in scrutinizing the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. I object.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Will not the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SISSON. I object.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT OF OKLAHOMA.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the Senate joint resolution 208, providing that one term of the United States District Court for the Eastern Judicial District of Oklahoma shall be held annually at Hugo, Okla.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the possible justification for the compelling a district judge to go from Muskogee 256 miles to try possibly one jury case a year?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This court site is necessary on account of the large volume of Federal court business adjacent to the vicinity. On account of Indian land titles, enforcement of prohibition, and other causes the United States courts have extensive jurisdiction in eastern Oklahoma, and most of the restricted Choctaw Indians reside in that section.

The city of Hugo is located some 15 or 20 miles north of Red River, which is the Texas line, and some 80 or 90 miles west of the Arkansas line. Many people having business with this court have to travel right through Hugo and on to McAlester, more than 125 miles distant, which means much needless expense and time that might be avoided with a term of court at Hugo.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I am asking for information. Are not nearly all of these Indian land titles tried in equity without a jury?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No; a great many are tried by a jury.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. What proportion are law cases, do you know?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I can not tell the gentleman offhand.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. I had a general impression that only a few were law cases.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. A great many require jury trials, and many find their way to the Supreme Court of the United States eventually because they involve Federal questions.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. There is no sense in asking a judge to hold court 250 miles from home to try equity cases.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It would be more expensive to the Government to have the parties and witnesses travel 250 miles to McAlester or Ardmore, going and returning, after they reach Hugo. A great part of this business will come from east of Hugo—probably 40 per cent—and at present they have to travel through Hugo and on to McAlester or Ardmore.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. The gentleman understands that there is no sense at all in the committee's report as to the liquor cases, because Oklahoma is a dry State.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is true; it is a dry State; and that part of the country has been dry for some time. There may be a few stills running at intervals up in the mountains; and the prohibitionists are strong for the bill as well as others.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. If that is a fact, I will object to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I hope the gentleman will not object. This is badly needed, and I ask the gentleman to reserve his objection.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. If the gentleman can give me any good reason why a judge should travel 500 miles at his own expense to try one law case a year, I will.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am sure I did not make myself clear, else the gentleman from Indiana would not have insisted, for I am sure he has no desire to inflict any such inconvenience on the people of my section as present conditions impose.

The business of the Federal court in eastern Oklahoma is enormous. It is a much broader jurisdiction than that common to many other States. We have more than 100,000 Indian allottees in that section, and they have allotted from 110 to 320 acres of land each. Practically every land suit involving title to these lands in any manner may find its way into this Federal court. In addition to this the enforcement of liquor laws, internal-revenue laws, and many other cases keep the dockets congested, and I am sure if my friend understood the hardships imposed on the citizenship of southeast Oklahoma by present conditions he would not object to this bill. The bill means a great deal to many of my constituents. This will in all likelihood be the last opportunity for unanimous-consent consideration during this Congress, and I hope the gentleman will summon all his powers of forbearance and let this much needed resolution have consideration.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. What percentage of pleas of guilty are entered in the criminal cases?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows we Congressmen are kept on the job here so constantly that it is impossible for us to keep track of law business, or any other business for that matter, back in our home States. I am unable to give that information, but I presume about the same per cent as in other States having similar cases. I doubt if many States in the Union have as large dockets as that in eastern Oklahoma; that is, from the standpoint of cases actually filed and tried.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Where does the court sit except at Muskogee?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Muskogee, Vinita, Tulsa, and McAlester, in the northern part of the State, and at Ardmore, in the southern part of the State.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. How far is Ardmore from this place?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is 101 miles from Hugo, but I think most cases from this part of the district go to McAlester. This necessitates 50 miles travel west over the Frisco to Durant, a change of cars, and then 75 or 80 miles north on the Katy to McAlester. But many of these litigants must travel 50 to 100 miles before reaching Hugo on their way to McAlester, thereby requiring four or five hundred miles travel in one trip to court.

This Federal court has about the same volume of Indian business as the ordinary State circuit has of all business. There are more restricted Choctaw Indians residing convenient to Hugo than to any other city of like size in Oklahoma. It is not fair to force them into the Federal court and then keep the court 200 miles away from them. They are demanding that this court be made more convenient, and they have a right to more considerate treatment. If the United States court did not have such wide jurisdiction, if the court cases involved only the small amount of business usual with Federal courts, then the emergency would not be so urgent; but we should not expect people to travel all this distance and take all this time from their business in attendance on court which is nothing more nor less in many cases than the Nation's business.

The committee has amended this bill so as to relieve the Government of any expense for quarters. Therefore its passage will involve no expense to the Government.

If I am only able to make clear conditions as they actually exist, if I could only make my friend understand the pressing necessity for the establishment of a court in this vicinity, I am sure he would not object to consideration of this important resolution.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman very much.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That one term of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma shall be held each year on the second Monday in May at Hugo, in said State and district, and all acts and parts of acts not in accordance herewith are hereby modified in accordance with the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, at the end of line 8, add the following:
"Provided, That suitable quarters for holding said court shall be furnished without expense to the Government."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER of Oklahama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL BUILDING AT STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to No. 291 on the calendar, being H. R. 3217, respecting the Federal building at Steubenville, Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 291. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withhold that request until the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] returns.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. I do not think I will. I would rather make a demand for a quorum. I will modify my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SISSON. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is that the House return to the consideration of the bill H. R. 3217.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for permission to move to suspend the rules at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose now.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. But I asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the request.

Mr. SISSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and that settles the matter.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. May I move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman to make that motion now.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] to withhold for a moment his objection to the consideration of this request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SISSON. How is that?

Mr. AUSTIN. May I crave the indulgence of the gentleman from Mississippi to withhold his objection to unanimous consent for a moment?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, I will withhold it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that my friend from Mississippi will not prevent the consideration of this measure at this hour. This is the last and only opportunity to pass this bill. It is strongly recommended by the Treasury officials, and the gentleman from Ohio [Gen. HOLLINGSWORTH], who has served so long and faithfully here, retires on the 4th of March. He has had this proposition very close to his heart and the merits of the bill so appealed to us that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds made an exception of the bill. We did that because it has not only merit but we thought that we would extend this favor to the retiring Member from Ohio. He and the gentleman from Ohio now in front of me [Gen. SHERWOOD] and the gentleman from California [Maj. OSBORNE], are the only Members serving in the lower House of the American Congress who fought to preserve the Union we love so well, and if this request was coming from the gentleman from North Carolina [Maj. STEDMAN] or the gentleman from Louisiana [Gen. ESTOPINAL], who served equally well in the Confederate Army, I would stand here and if necessary appeal to my Republican colleagues not to obstruct the passage of a measure in which they were interested.

I appeal to my big-hearted and generous friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and I hope my appeal does not fall upon deaf ears.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the House the reason which prompted me to make this objection. There are now pending in the Committee on Appropriations requests for public buildings. I can not tell how many are there asking to be made special bills. I felt that matters of this kind ought to be dealt with just alike.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH arose.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman just will not interrupt I will state what I am going to be prompted to do. [Applause.] My purpose in objecting was that all these matters might be dealt with in exactly the same manner, but I am going to heed the appeal made by my friend from Tennessee [applause] and withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I assume probably the suggestion I made that my colleague from Louisiana [Gen. ESTOPINAL] would not object might have had something to do with the persuasive manner in which Representative AUSTIN of Tennessee has made his appeal—without reference to me—and that Mr. SISSON of Mississippi has withdrawn his objection. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3217) providing for an increase of authorization for the Federal building at Steubenville, in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase or otherwise, such additional lands or rights contiguous to the building site now owned by the United States in Steubenville, in the State of Ohio, as may be necessary for the erection and completion on the lands thus owned and acquired of a suitable building, with fireproof vaults therein, for the use and accommodation of the United States court and post office, at an additional cost not to exceed $150,000, in addition to amounts heretofore authorized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. How large a place is Steubenville?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. By the census of 1910 it is shown as having a population of 22,000 plus. That is in 1910, but my guess would be, and I am pretty familiar with it, that it is around 30,000. Of course this is only a guess. It is an up-to-date progressive city.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand an appropriation of $30,000 has already been authorized for a building there. Is that the fact?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. There was an appropriation in the Sixty-first Congress for the erection of a post office.

Mr. BLANTON. That $30,000 is still available?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Thirty-five thousand dollars of that was used for purchase of a site.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is $120,000 authorized in addition to this $150,000?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. There is $85,000 unexpended. Thirty thousand dollars of the original authorization went to complete the site, and after that the report shows $10,000 more are needed. After purchase of site, this rearranging of the Federal districts in the State took place. That was under my predecessor. I was a Member of Congress when the post-office building was provided for. Then, in the whirligig of Ohio politics, another came in, and he introduced the court bill, but he did not provide for any building. He sat here with me just a while ago, and is favorable to this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a building there, though?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Oh, no; there is not anything. If you will look at the report you will see that they are paying $3,000 for a post office there now as rental, as the report shows.

Mr. BLANTON. The point I am getting at is this: There is an appropriation available outside of this proposed $150,000, Is there or is there not an appropriation available?

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Why, certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Of how much?

Mr. STAFFORD. Eighty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. I offer the following amendment: Strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this being by unanimous consent no amendment can be offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Blanton offers the following amendment: Line 11, strike out "$150,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in a town of only 22,000 inhabitants, and where there is already authorized an appropriation of $85,000, and where there has been already purchased a site available for this building, to be used jointly as a post office and a court, I can not for the life of me at this time and under the conditions which confront us see why there should be expended this $150,000 additional. I believe if the same kind of judgment was used in constructing public buildings by the Government as is used in constructing private buildings that we could get a better building out of half of the money that we appropriate at each session of Congress. And I think that with the $85,000 already provided for and $100,000 additional there should be built in this little town in Ohio a suitable building, commensurate with the needs of that country, both for a post office and court. I know of a number of court buildings that have every kind of facility, every kind of convenience, even for a Federal judge to hold court in, that have cost less than $185,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman represents a district that is fast coming to the front as an oil-producing district.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. It will no doubt be necessary for the gentleman to come in with bills, using the same method as the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH].

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. I do not want the gentleman to take all my time.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am not taking all your time.

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I want to make an observation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not yield to the gentleman any further. For one of the largest oil fields in the United States to-day, at Ranger, Tex., a little town which about a year ago had 800 people, and now has 25,000 people, a field which flows to-day 55,000 barrels of oil per day, I have asked for a very modest sum for a post-office building, and if that money is expended properly there will be a post-office building adequate for the needs of the people for years to come.

Mr. ELSTON. Do you mean the building or the site?

Mr. BLANTON. For a building. I can take $5,000 in my portion of the country and build a better building than the Government can construct with $10,000. I want to see the time come when the Government can get as much for its money as a private citizen can. I think $150,000 additional is entirely too much, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. EAGLE and Mr. BURNETT rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to take all the time on this amendment, we will quit now.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to have five minutes to reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CUSTODIAN SERVICE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 344) for the regulation of salaries in the custodian service of the Treasury Department.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for an increase of salaries for a large number of people in the custodian force. There are some discrepancies in the salaries fixed in the bill. For instance, on page 2, line 23, the salary of the chief engineer is fixed at $2,500, whereas the assistant chief engineer is to receive the same salary. You grant him the maximum salary of $2,500. There ought to be some leeway, some difference, between the salary paid the chief engineer and that of the assistant engineer. You should not grant the assistant engineer the maximum salary which is paid to the chief engineer.

Mr. LOBECK. I wish to state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that in preparing the bill H. R. 344, the bill now under consideration, the committee went over it carefully with the officials of the Treasury Department, and we thought the bill as prepared fixed salaries in an equitable manner.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think in the case instanced it must have been an oversight, because in most instances you grade the salaries. Would the gentleman have any objection to inserting in lieu of "$2,500" the salary of "$1,200 to $2,000" for the assistant chief engineer. That would be in harmony with the general plan. On page 2, line 23, you provide for a chief engineer at $2,500, and in the next line you provide the salary of the assistant chief engineer also at $2,500. Certainly a less salary should be paid to the assistant engineer than the maximum salary paid to the chief engineer.

Mr. LOBECK. I think myself that is an error. I will be glad to accept a proper amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the gentleman's attention also to section 3, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to vary from the schedule of salaries set forth in the preceding sections. What is the necessity of allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to override the action of Congress and pay these employees any salary he chooses?

Mr. LOBECK. Well, it has been the custom heretofore, for all time; the Secretary of the Treasury has been authorized to fix these salaries according to the location of the buildings throughout the country. There are certain portions of the country now where there is not the same amount in the day's work; that is, the length of work is not as much as it is in other parts of the country, and during certain periods of the year they do not need the service all the time. So, in the first place, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH] introduced a bill in the Sixty-fourth Congress. We had that up for consideration in our committee several times, and reported back a bill in substance like this which is now before the House, H. R. No. 344. We found out, upon consideration, that in the larger cities, those that have a population of 100,000 or more, it was necessary to pay a larger wage than in cities of from 25,000 up to 100,000, and still less in cities of less than 25,000.

If the gentleman from Wisconsin will consult the hearings—I do not know whether he has a copy; if not, I will give one to him—he will find out that it was thought wise by the committee of the Treasury Department to divide the buildings into three classes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not objecting to the classification, but I do not think we should grant to the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited authority to pay any salary to these officials that he sees fit. We are making a liberal provision for these respective employees of the Government. Their salaries should be increased. They should have been increased a long time ago.

Mr. LOBECK. Surely.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I think that section 3 should be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. LOBECK. The Secretary of the Treasury has had to pay these salaries out of lump sums appropriated by Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what we want to overcome. I am sorry to say that the Committee on Appropriations are at fault. For several years I have attempted, in committee and on the floor, to have the lump-sum appropriations for the custodian force of the country increased, but without success. Now, the salaries provided in this bill are not inordinately high. Let us prescribe them, and allow the men to receive these salaries.

Mr. LOBECK. The salaries which are here provided.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman willing to have section 3 stricken out? I think it is fair that the employees should receive the salaries prescribed in this bill.

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOBECK. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant chief engineer, $2,500 per annum.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out "$2,500" in line 24, page 2, and insert "$1,200 to $2,000."

Mr. LOBECK. I accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 24, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,200 to $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer-electrician (second class), $1,200 per annum.
Engineer-electrician (third class), $1,200 per annum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what is the object in having an engineer-electrician (second class) and an engineer-electrician (third class), whose salary is the same?

Mr. LOBECK. The work is the same in both classes of building.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill, as has been explained, divides the cities into three classes according to population, and salaries paid to these engineer-electricians are the same in both classes because the work is the same in both classes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to vary from the schedule of salaries hereinabove set forth in such cases where, in his judgment, a strict adherence thereto would militate against procuring the services of suitable and efficient employees or would result in the payment of a larger compensation than is warranted by local conditions, character of employment, etc.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, just a word. As was stated in the colloquy with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK], this section would give the Secretary of the Treasury the privilege of reducing or increasing the amounts carried in this bill. It might result in the same low salaries remaining in effect that are now being paid to the custodian force, because the total appropriation carried in the sundry civil bill might not be adequate to give these salaries. If section 3 is stricken out, the men will receive the increase of salaries, and if the appropriation is inadequate that will be a warrant for a deficiency appropriation to pay the salaries which this bill prescribes.

Mr. LOBECK. Does the gentleman mean that if this section stays in the bill the Secretary of the Treasury could reduce the salaries below the figures fixed here?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is one of the provisions of this paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 1, line 8. Section 3 has been stricken out, and the words in line 8 are "except as set forth in section 3 hereof." I move that those words be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to section 1, line 8. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "schedule," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOBECK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13915) granting the consent of Congress to Wenatchee-Beebe Orchard Co. to construct a bridge across the Columbia River at or within 4 miles northerly from the town of Chelan Falls, in the State of Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 5316, a similar bill on the House Calendar, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Wenatchee-Beebe Orchard Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maine, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point within 4 miles northerly from the town of Chelan Falls, in the county of Chelan, in the State of Washington, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DILLON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The bill H. R. 13915 was laid on the table.

SALARIES OF CLERKS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3079) to fix the salaries for clerks in the United States district courts and to provide for their official expenses, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1918, all clerks of United States district courts shall be appointed by the judge for the district, or the senior judge if there be more than one judge in the district, subject to the approval of the senior circuit judge for the circuit in which the district is situated, and all fees and emoluments authorized by law to be paid to the clerks of the United States district courts, except the clerks of the district courts of Alaska, shall be charged as heretofore and shall be collected, as far as possible, and paid into the Treasury of the United States in such manner and at such times as hereinafter provided; and such clerks shall be paid, in lieu of the fees and emoluments now allowed by law, an annual salary as hereinafter provided: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to require or authorize fees to be charged or collected from the United States.

SEC. 2. That the clerk of the United States district court for each of the judicial districts of the United States, except the clerks of the district courts of Alaska, shall be paid, in lieu of the fees, salaries, and per cent now allowed by law, an annual salary to be fixed by the Attorney General at not less than $2,500 nor more than $5,000, based in each instance upon the amount of business transacted by the court and the fees and the emoluments received by the clerks in the four years last preceding.

SEC. 3. That when any clerk of a district court is necessarily absent from his official residence on any official business he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only and his necessary and actual expenses for lodging and subsistence, the latter not to exceed $4 per day.

SEC. 4. That when, in the opinion of the Attorney General, the public interest requires it he may, on the recommendation of the clerk of a district court, which recommendation shall state facts (as distinguished from conclusions) showing necessity for the same, allow such clerk to employ necessary deputies and clerical assistants, upon compensation to be fixed by the Attorney General from time to time and paid as hereinafter provided.

When any such deputy or clerical assistant is necessarily absent from the place of his regular employment on official business he shall be allowed his actual traveling expenses only and his necessary and actual expenses for lodging and subsistence, the latter not to exceed $3 per day.

SEC. 5. That the necessary office expenses of the clerks of the district courts of the United States shall be allowed when authorized by the Attorney General.

SEC. 6. That the salaries of the clerks, deputy clerks, and clerical assistants to the clerks of the district courts shall be paid monthly by the marshals of the respective districts.

SEC. 7. That the expense accounts of clerks of the United States district courts, when made out and verified, and the expense accounts of their deputy clerks and clerical assistants, when made out and certified as correct by the clerk of such court, covering the necessary expenses incurred by such clerk, deputy clerk, or clerical assistants when necessarily absent from the place of regular employment on official business, shall be paid by the marshal, who shall include them in his accounts with the United States.

SEC. 8. That the necessary office expenses of the clerk of the United States district court, as allowed and authorized by the Attorney General, shall be paid by the marshal and included in his accounts with the United States.

SEC. 9. That the clerk of every district court, except the clerks of the district courts of Alaska, shall account quarterly for all the fees and emoluments earned during the quarter last preceding such accounting, except where the person requiring the services is relieved by law from prepayment of fees and costs, and for all fees and emoluments received within the quarter which had been earned prior thereto. Such accounting shall be in writing and shall be made to the Attorney General, in such form as he may prescribe, on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, or within 20 days thereafter, and shall include all moneys received in connection with the admission of attorneys to practice in the court, all that portion retained by the clerk of moneys received for services in naturalization proceedings in whatever capacity rendered, and all other amounts received for services in any way connected with the clerk's office. Such accounts shall be made in duplicate and be verified by the oath of the officer making them. The Attorney General shall cause each such return or account to be carefully examined by the proper officer of the Department of Justice and shall approve the same as he may deem just and proper, and shall transmit it with his approval to the Auditor for the State and Other Departments, by whom an account shall be stated against the officer rendering such return or account. Immediately upon receipt of notice from the auditor, or within 10 days thereafter, the clerk shall deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States the amount so stated against him.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, on page 3, line 9, I find that the limit of expenses for the deputy clerk when it is necessary for him to travel in the performance of a public duty is only $3 a day, while when the clerk himself travels it is $4 a day. I can see no difference. I do not know why one should be allowed $4 and the other only $3.

Mr. SIEGEL. The clerk himself must travel a greater distance for the purpose of covering the entire field, while the deputy clerk travels only over part of the circuit. That was considered in the Senate. The Attorney General recommends that it be fixed in that way.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When one official travels he is at as much expense as the other. If it will not embarrass the bill, this being a Senate bill, I should offer an amendment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman not to offer an amendment for this reason: The clerks and the Attorney General and everyone else asks for the passage of this bill as it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. On page 1 there is a provision that the clerks shall be appointed by the judge for the district, or the senior judge, if there be more than one judge of the district. Has the gentleman examined the bill that we passed some time ago increasing the pay of Federal judges and making other provisions with reference to the appointment of additional judges?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman know, from his examination and consideration of this, in connection with the Department of Justice, who would appoint the district clerks in those cases—whether the old judge or the judge coming in, if one does come in under the provisions of that law?

Mr. SIEGEL. My understanding of the opinion of those favoring this bill is that the old judge would make the appointment.

Mr. DYER. Is the gentleman positive about that or is he guessing at it?

Mr. SIEGEL. I am not guessing at it. That is what I have been told. Take New York, with its four judges. The appointment has to be made subject to the senior judge.

Mr. DYER. One provision of that bill is that the President may appoint an additional judge where he finds the present judge, because of physical or mental disabilities, unable to perform the duties of the office. My understanding of that bill was that the new judge appointed would be the senior judge in effect.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. He would appoint the clerk, would he not?

Mr. MANN. I think that is correct.

Mr. DYER. That was my understanding, and I think the gentleman from New York is wrong.

Mr. SIEGEL. My understanding was the other way, but it would not make any difference, because where there is more than one district judge the appointment would have to receive the approval of the senior circuit judge.

Mr. DYER. The new judge in that case would make the appointment, subject to the approval of the senior circuit judge.

Mr. MANN. I think so, under that bill.

Mr. DYER. It makes no difference, but I just wanted to get the information.

Mr. SIEGEL. I differ on that point.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the necessity of a deputy clerk traveling over the district?

Mr. SIEGEL. The necessity is this: Let us take a district like New York, for example, where there are eight criminal cases proceeding at the present time. The chief clerk is expected to remain there and the deputy clerk would have to go about in the district if it was decided to hold court somewhere else outside of Manhattan Borough.

Mr. BLANTON. The way business is transacted in the State of Texas, there are six places where one district judge holds court, and at each of those places there is a resident deputy clerk.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not true in Oklahoma.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SIEGEL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. SIEGEL, a similar House bill—8426—was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD on the custodian bill, just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MAKING GULFPORT, MISS., A PORT OF ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5999) for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement be, and are hereby, extended to the port of Gulfport, Miss.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12589) to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are we to understand that the purpose of this bill is to increase the acreage that may be obtained by homesteaders from 320 to 640 acres?

Mr. GANDY. Not in the least.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report is not very clear in that respect.

Mr. GANDY. Down to the proviso this follows the same language as present section 4. There are quite a few cases where men have taken noncontiguous additional entries under the half-section act. Folks who have that kind of an entry, who are residing on the land, should not be barred from taking such acreage adjoining them as will give them a total of 640 acres. They are barred if their noncontiguous additional is more than 20 miles from their original, notwithstanding they are living on the noncontiguous additional.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, was it intended when that original act was passed that we would only grant this privilege to take this land within immediate territory? At the suggestion of my then colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. LENROOT, it was placed at 10 miles, and later it was extended to 20 miles. Now, is it intended to have no limit?

Mr. GANDY. Let me say to the gentleman at the time that bill was passed we did not have a provision for the noncontiguous additional under the half-section act. That has been passed since the section act was passed. The intention of Mr. LENROOT, who, during the consideration of the section bill, offered the amendment on the 20-mile limitation to my amendment providing for noncontiguous additional entries was that the said additional should be within that distance of the place where the homesteader resides. This amendment simply permits a homesteader who is residing on the noncontiguous additional under the half-section act to fill his section adjoining it. It does not permit him to go any place else.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, it permits him to take more than 640 acres——

Mr. GANDY. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Besides the original entry.

Mr. GANDY. No; the original, the noncontiguous additional under the half-section act, and then this additional under the section act must not exceed 640 acres, subject to all being designated under the section act. Thus if the original is not of the kind and character contemplated by the section act he could not take anything under this, but if the original and noncontiguous additional on which he is living and which he is cultivating are of that kind of land, then there is no reason why, if there is any adjoining vacant public land, he should not be permitted to file on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask the gentleman to have this bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. GANDY. I hope the gentleman will permit this bill to go to passage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, this merely grants to some persons who have large holdings at the present additional holdings and takes land from others who would like to locate on it.

Mr. GANDY. This is to take care of a condition that has arisen since section 7 was added to the half-section act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2910) providing for an additional judge for the northern district of California.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection for a moment.

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve it for a moment, but I intend to object.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not do that because there is a very serious condition in the northern district of California. That district is the second in the United States in point of number of cases on the calendar and tried. It is the first in the Union in the collection of fines. It pays its own expenses. There are now some 700 criminal cases waiting for trial and not a dead case in the lot. There are 3,500 civil cases between civilians to which the Government of the United States is not a party, but cases that have to be tried under the United States laws and in a United States court.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Why have they not transferred a judge from some other district?

Mr. KAHN. I was going to say that they have had two judges there for 401 days within the last year and a half, and yet they can not seem to catch up with the calendar.

Mr. GORDON. Are they gaining any on it?

Mr. KAHN. No. They are not gaining, because about as many cases as they are able to try are filed, so that the calendar keeps right up. They have made no dent in it at all. It is a very serious condition. There are about a million inhabitants right around the bay of San Francisco; and then the court also holds a session in Sacramento, where there is a pretty good-sized calendar.

Mr. GORDON. That must be an awfully lawless community.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, well; it is not worse than Cleveland. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, if it is still in order, I hope the gentleman will let the bill remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has already been stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent to have it remain on the calendar and go to the foot of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that it may remain on the calendar and go to the foot of the same. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CONTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL BANKS TO UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the Senate joint resolution 179, authorizing national banks to subscribe to the United War Work Campaign.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts give ear to the gentleman from Texas? Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but I intend to object, I will say to my distinguished friend from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. If the gentleman's mind is made up without any opportunity for an exchange of views, I will not ask for the time.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve the objection if the gentleman desires to extend his views, and will listen to them very gladly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman insist, after the gentleman from Texas has spoken, in pursuing his inquiry?

Mr. WALSH. Not having made an inquiry, there is no reason for me to pursue it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman insist in the enlargement of his language of the situation?

Mr. WALSH. I will reserve the objection. As I said, I will be very glad to hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I have no interest in this bill any different from what may be had by any other gentleman of the Congress. The Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate unanimously reported Senate joint resolution No. 179, and the Senate of the United States unanimously passed it. The Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives unanimously have passed this resolution and have asked that report be made on it to that effect, and it has been; and it has been placed on the calendar.

Mr. GORDON. What does the bill provide for?

Mr. EAGLE. I was going to state that next. It will follow in due course.

While the war was at its height, along in October, the President of the United States, at the solicitation of seven great American charitable organizations that desired to turn their activities to helpful purposes in the war, directed the designation of "The United War Work Campaign." These seven associations were the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish Welfare Board, the War Camp Community Service, the American Library Association, and the Salvation Army.

They started out to raise a total of $170,500,000, every cent of which was to be devoted to helping in a material way and in a moral way and in other ways, if possible, the soldiers of the American Army and the sailors of the American Navy. Most of that money has been raised. All that has been raised is being turned over to an incorporation entitled "The United War Work Campaign (Inc.)." Its officers are persons of the highest standing, even as its incorporators are; and so every branch of religion whose devotees live in this country, and every branch of charitable inclination in this land, desiring to do what the women and the men call "war work," have united their activities and their solicitations for the funds necessary to enable them to perform those activities.

For instance, in this aggregation $100,000,000, or 58.65 per cent, is the amount which the Young Men's Christian Association is to raise; the Young Women's Christian Association is to raise $15,000,000, or 8.80 per cent; the Knights of Columbus, $30,000,000, or 17.60 per cent; the Jewish Welfare Board, $3,500,000, or 2.05 per cent; the War Camp Community Service, $15,000,000, or 8.80 per cent; the American Library Association, $3,500,000, or 2.05 per cent; and the Salvation Army, $3,500,000, or 2.05 per cent.

I am almost done, and I appreciate the courtesy of the House and of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] for permitting me to make this statement. I want in conclusion to say only this: The 7,500 or 7,600 national banking associations are each and all by statute prohibited from making any contributions toward this cause, as they were prohibited from contributing to the Red Cross until a few months ago, when the Congress amended the banking law so as to allow contributions to be made by national banks to the funds of the Red Cross. Now, a further amendment is proposed to allow national banks to subscribe to this fund by this joint resolution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGLE. Yes; and I may say that this resolution expressly limits the time within which such subscriptions can be made to the termination of the war, which, of course, as we know, will be on the declaration of peace.

Now, one word more, and then I shall have said what it seems to me is proper to be said in this connection, and that is that the National Bankers' Association, in convention assembled, unanimously adopted a resolution, which they sent to our committee, asking that this legislation be passed. And, lastly, I want to add that the national banks have subscribed a total of some $6,000,000, contingent upon the possible passage of this resolution. The Senate has passed it unanimously. If consent is given for its present consideration, I believe it will pass almost unanimously in the House.

Mr. FESS. Some of us, and among us perhaps our friend from Texas, voted against singling out one of these activities, because it did not include the others. This is to include all the united war-work activities?

Mr. EAGLE. It is; and it is the giving of an opportunity to each and all persons so inclined to give that made it possible for the work that has been done in this common cause to be performed, thus eliminating entirely any sectarian, any religious, any denominational, or any other undesirable qualification. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was opposed to this policy, as instanced by opposing the bill to give the banks authority to contribute to the Red Cross; and certainly I am opposed to extending that authority and broadening the authority given to these banks, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDMENT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, if this had come up in the regular order I should have made a point of order against the amendment recommended by the committee, because it is subject to a point of order. I am opposed absolutely and clear through to section 4 of this bill permitting branch banking.

I do not know what other gentlemen may think about other features of the bill, but as far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to consider the bill, if gentlemen still agree that section 4 of the House amendment be stricken out.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that section 4 be stricken out.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that ordinarily when the committee of which I happen to be chairman reports a bill, I endeavor to keep in the bill all the sections which the committee have reported; but there are some sections of this bill that are of extreme importance; and because of the importance of those sections and the great necessity of getting action on this bill, I am perfectly willing to have section 4 stricken out if that will secure consideration for the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the bill is of such importance that some explanation should be made of the various purposes of the bill before it passes the objection stage.

Mr. PHELAN. I am perfectly willing to make any explanation that is necessary.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to put my request that section 4 be stricken out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks it would be in order until consent is given for the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the bill has not been reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been reported by title.

Mr. SISSON. By title, but not read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman demands it, the bill will be read.

Mr. MANN. Is it proposed to read the Senate bill or the House amendment?

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Senate bill be dispensed with and that the Clerk read the House bill only.

Mr. MANN. The House amendment?

Mr. PHELAN. The Senate bill as amended by the House committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House amendment be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That that part of the first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: "After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, all the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that one-half of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank," be amended to read as follows:

"After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that the whole of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank, and that thereafter 10 per cent of such net earnings shall be paid into the surplus."

SEC. 2. That that part of section 10 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: "The members of said board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency, shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank," be amended as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointed members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed."

SEC. 3. That section 11 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act of September 7, 1916, be further amended by striking out the whole of subsection (m) and by substituting therefor a subsection to read as follows:

"(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members, the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to permit Federal reserve banks to discount for any member bank notes of any one borrower in excess of the amount permitted by section 9 and section 13 of this act: Provided, however, That all such notes discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such section shall be secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States."

SEC. 4. That section 25 of the Federal reserve act be amended by adding thereto a provision to read as follows:

"That any national bank located in a city or incorporated town of more than 100,000 inhabitans and possessing a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more, may, under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, establish branches, not to exceed 10 in number, within the corporate limits of the city or town in which it is located. But no such branch shall be established in any State in which neither State banks nor trust companies may lawfully establish branches, nor shall the number of branches which a member bank may establish exceed the number of branches which the laws of the State in which said bank is situated permit a State bank or trust company to establish within the corporate limits of said city or town."

SEC. 5. That section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended to read as follows:

"That in order to furnish suitable notes for circulation the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantity of circulating notes in blank, or bearing engraved signatures of officers as herein provided, of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall express upon their face that they are secured by United States bond deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, by the written or engraved signature of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury; and shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the written or engraved signatures of the president or vice president and cashier; and shall bear such devices and such other statements and shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulation, direct."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let the chairman of the committee, Mr. PHELAN, explain the purposes of sections 1 and 2.

Mr. PHELAN. I will be very glad to explain the whole bill if the gentleman desires to have it explained now.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the practice when we are considering bills by unanimous consent, particularly a bill of this importance.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, section 1 of this bill provides for a different application from that prevailing under present law of the earnings of the Federal reserve banks, above the dividend requirements. Under the present law, after the dividends have been paid, all the net earnings are paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that one-half of these net earnings are put into a surplus fund until that surplus fund reaches 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank.

Under the proposed amendment the net earnings above dividend requirements are to be paid over to the surplus Federal reserve bank until it equals 100 per cent of the subscribed capital; that is, twice the paid-in capital, and thereafter annually 10 per cent of the net earnings above dividend requirements shall be paid into the surplus. There are three general purposes. In the first place, the building up of the surplus will make the Federal reserve banks even stronger than they are to-day. I think there is nobody—at any rate, nobody in this country—who questions the strength of these Federal reserve banks; but the war has made many changes. There are now in circulation a great many more Federal reserve notes than there were before the war broke out, or than were contemplated when the act went into effect. The banks have extended more credits than they would have extended if it had not been for the war, and anything we can do to add to the resources of the banks and to strengthen the banks, makes them better able to meet any necessary demands or expansion coming hereafter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any way by which the Federal reserve banks can curtail the credit and asset currency they have floated during the war period?

Mr. PHELAN. They can do it whenever it is desirable to do it—whenever the commercial or governmental needs are such that they can do it without interfering with such needs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman believe that the tremendous expansion of credit that has been going on during the war should be curtailed?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not know that it should be. I hope that conditions will permit it to be done. I think we are in a position where it is being done. I think within a short time there has been a curtailment of 400,000,000 Federal reserve notes.

Now to continue: The second reason, looking at it from a domestic standpoint, for this amendment is this: In 10 of the 12 Federal reserve districts the banks have already purchased sites for buildings; in two reserve cities they have not done it. In rented quarters they have found it extremely difficult to get the proper accommodations for their business. They find it difficult, for example, in rented quarters to get proper vault accommodation. With this great growth it is essential to get permanent and adequate quarters. It is undesirable as a banking proposition to have to invest too great a proportion of their capital and surplus in fixed investments, such as real estate and buildings. If we give them additional surplus, it will enable them to invest the money for these much-needed facilities without using too great percentage of the capital and surplus.

In the third place, this amendment is important because of the effect it will have on foreign countries with whom the people of this country in the near future will be carrying on a very extensive foreign trade. The people in foreign countries, when they look at a bank in any country to judge of its strength, look primarily at its capital and surplus. When they look at the banks in this country, individual Federal reserve banks, that is the first item to which they give their attention. We know how the Federal Reserve System was established. We know the firm foundation underneath the whole system, but the foreigner can not have that explained to him.

And especially he will have difficulty in understanding it when traders from other countries will be pointing out how much stronger their banks are than ours. If we build up a good surplus in the banks we will increase the apparent strength as well as the real strength. To create the proper impression in foreign countries in which we plan to develop trade of great magnitude we ought to make a showing of capital and surplus which will give some indication of the unquestionable soundness and strength which actually exists in our Federal reserve banks.

For example, the Federal reserve bank in New York has a capital and surplus of something over $20,000,000, while the Bank of England has a surplus of $97,000,000, France $44,000,000, Italy $53,000,000, and so on down through the various foreign banks.

The Federal reserve bank possesses an abundance of strength and power and resources far beyond what its capital and surplus would indicate. When it is so easy to add to its surplus by the adoption of this amendment, we certainly ought to do it and thus give it in every respect the appearance of power with which it is actually endowed.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I want to remind him that a large per cent of these loans and this extension has come about because the banks are financing the Government. These loans are largely secured by United States securities. I can say to the gentleman that I know from very reliable authority that the Federal banks have notified the member banks some time ago and cautioned them frequently to curtail loans as far as possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House the amount per capita of the issue of Federal reserve notes?

Mr. HAYES. I can not; but it is very large.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have heard that it was $35 per capita, more than twice the amount that was out at the close of the Civil War. That is pure asset currency, and accounts for the tremendous inflation and high prices that obtain.

Mr. PHELAN. Oh, no.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman deny that high prices have not resulted from it?

Mr. PHELAN. Not from the Federal reserve banks. It has come about by war itself, and the Federal Reserve System has taken care of war conditions. Let me point out that a considerable number of reserve notes have been issued in this war by an amendment to the Federal reserve act passed by Congress many months ago permitting the Federal banks to exchange Federal reserve notes for gold, in order that they might accumulate the gold floating around through the country.

Because of that act and because of their issue of Federal reserve notes, they have accumulated a very large sum of gold, which has been of great advantage during the war, and, of course, will be of great advantage to the business, commerce, and agriculture of the country in the great work of reconstruction.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, we all realize that we authorized the Federal Reserve Board to increase the amount of the Federal reserve notes as a war emergency. The predecessor of the gentleman acting as chairman, now the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, advocated the issue of asset currency as a war-emergency proposition, and it may have been necessary, but I thought some method would be devised whereby we would go to normal conditions and do away with the inflation from which we are now suffering.

Mr. PHELAN. I have no recollection of any act that passed to enable notes to be issued for war purposes. We did pass an act to permit Federal reserve bank notes to be issued to take care of the situation in a dependency of a foreign country, but all Federal reserve notes that have been issued have been issued under authorization of law enacted long before we went into war.

Mr. STAFFORD. I remember distinctly the former chairman stating that the legislation then under consideration would not have had his support if it were not for the war conditions.

Mr. PHELAN. That was the so-called silver coinage bill, which permitted an issue of Federal reserve bank notes, but that had absolutely nothing to do with local or domestic conditions. It had to do simply and solely with a foreign country, or rather with the dependency of one of our cobelligerents, to take care of a critical situation there. We passed that, and when we passed it, all we did was to furnish Federal reserve bank notes in place of silver certificates, the security of which—that is the silver was melted before the Federal reserve bank notes were put out; hence any Federal reserve bank notes that were put out, as suggested by the gentleman, were put out to replace silver certificates that had been outstanding at the time we passed the legislation.

Mr. HAYES. Let me suggest here that all this asset currency, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] calls it, has behind it more than 40 per cent of gold.

Mr. PHELAN. Oh, it has behind it to-day over 50 per cent of gold.

Mr. PLATT. More than 50 per cent.

Mr. SLOAN. Fifty-one per cent the Treasurer told us to-day, which prompts me to ask the gentleman as to whether or not the reserve system——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for a moment. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the reserve system will be sufficiently strong to serve the purpose of our present foreign commerce and our prospective foreign commerce during the next two or three years, or will it need assistance from some other Federal agency.

Mr. PHELAN. I think it is fully strong enough to take care of every demand made upon it, either domestic or foreign.

Mr. SLOAN. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PHELAN. I have the utmost confidence that is so, and I will say in that connection that it has already borne burdens that nobody ever realized or anticipated could have been heaped upon it. The Federal Reserve System has done more than anybody could anticipate, and without the Federal Reserve System it is a question how, if at all, the Government could have financed the world war.

Mr. SLOAN. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that, representing the position, because I have taken that position in committee meetings, where a different position was taken by a great many members, and I insisted that the Federal system be given an opportunity to finance the country, and especially arrange for its foreign commerce now and during the next three years.

Mr. PHELAN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that section 4 of the House amendment be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that section 4 of the House amendment be stricken from the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, in view of that, I ask unanimous consent that the title be changed.

Mr. MANN. We have not yet come to the question of the title. Let me ask the gentleman a question. This is a Senate bill, and as it passed the Senate the title reads:

To amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act—

And so forth.

That indicates when the bill was introduced in the Senate it included an amendment to section 10 of the Federal reserve act, and as that is not in the bill as it comes before the House from the Senate, it indicates to me that the Senate struck out the amendment to section 10. Now, the House committee proposes to amend section 10, which was stricken out in the Senate. I have no objection, as far as I am concerned, but the Senate having stricken out, and as these are the last days of the session and the only purpose of section 10 is to take care of one man in the United States who is amply able to take care of himself, does not the gentleman think it would be wiser policy to pass the Senate bill without that amendment instead of passing the House amendment? If he does the former, that ends it. If the gentleman really wants to kill his bill, he should persist in passing the House amendment, because there is an even chance it will not become a law.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to kill the bill, of course, as the gentleman knows. I may be mistaken, but my recollection is that the Senate committee had reported the bill without section 10, as finally reported. I may be mistaken on that.

Mr. MANN. The title covered section 10.

Mr. PHELAN. I noticed that when the bill came over, but I will say for the sake of the RECORD that the committee did not put in section 2 for the sake of one man. It is true that the names of two men were brought to the attention of the committee, but the committee looked far beyond any one or two men and saw the trouble that might arise from the severe restrictions we had put upon members of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman I am perfectly willing to take care of Paul Warburg; I think he is one of the ablest men the Federal Reserve Board had or is likely to have for a long time to come, but if I were in charge of the bill at this stage of the session of Congress, certainly I would try to pass the bill. I do not care what the gentleman does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the bill was only read for information. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Section 4 was stricken out by unanimous consent. Without objection, the Clerk will renumber the following sections.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. I move to amend the title——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not need to amend the title.

Mr. PHELAN. Section 25 ought not to be in there, and we have stricken out section 4.

Mr. MANN. The Senate title is all right.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. PHELAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CERTAIN CREDITS TO DISBURSING CLERK, BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 214, authorizing and directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow credit to the disbursing clerk of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in certain cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for such reasonable time as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not extending beyond the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of the disbursing clerk of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for all payments of insurance installments heretofore or hereafter made under the provisions of Article IV of the war-risk insurance act in advance of the verification of the deduction on the pay rolls, or of the payment otherwise, of all premiums.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] had charge of this joint resolution reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He stayed here until quite a late hour, and he had a very imperative engagement, and I would suggest——

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I think the joint resolution is perfectly plain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SUGGESTIONS FROM COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 202, requesting the Commission of Fine Arts to submit to the Congress certain suggestions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be placed at the foot of the calendar.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. I ask that the resolution go to the foot of the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I shall certainly object, as this is the last chance.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTATION OF WORKS OF ART.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12981) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refuse to permit the exportation of any work of art purporting to be a gift made by an individual or organization to a foreign nation or municipality unless by consent of the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

COMMISSION TO STANDARDIZE SCREW THREADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15495) to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] state briefly what the amendments are?

Mr. TILSON. The amendments are, in the first place, to authorize the continuance on the screw-thread commission of two Army officers who are not Regular Army officers. As my friend knows, these officers may now at any time cease to be officers, or be placed on the reserve list on inactive duty. The other, and the only other, amendment is in the last section, extending the life of the commission for one year. It originally passed the House at one year, but was cut to two months in the Senate and then fixed at six months in the conference. This puts it at a year and a half from the date of the original appointment of the commission; that is, extends the life of the commission one year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not very enthusiastic about this measure. I recognize that it has accomplished quite a good deal of good in the last few months. I was opposed to it when it passed before. I will not object.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. EAGLE. I want to congratulate the gentleman for having risen later in the evening, when the spirit of amity and good fellowship had arisen in the breast of my friend from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act providing for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, approved July 18, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it will read:

"That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the Commission for the Standardization of Screw Threads, hereinafter referred to as the commission, which shall be composed of nine commissioners, one of whom shall be the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who shall be chairman of the commission; two commissioned officers of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; two commissioned officers of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and four to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, two of whom shall be chosen from nominations made by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and two from nominations made by the Society of Automotive Engineers: Provided, That the two commissioned officers of the Army who may be serving as commissioners at the time of the approval of this act may continue to act as commissioners during the life of the commission.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to ascertain and establish standards for screw threads, which shall be submitted to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce for their acceptance and approval. Such standards, when thus accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments, and, so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate such standards for use by the public and cause the same to be published as a public document.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall serve without compensation, but nothing herein shall be held to affect the pay of the commissioners appointed from the Army and Navy or of the Director of the Bureau of Standards.

SEC. 5. That the commission may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business.

SEC. 6. That the commission shall cease and terminate at the end of one year and six months from the date of its original appointment.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend, page 1, line 12, by striking out the words "commissioned officers" and inserting the one word "representative." And on lines 1 and 2, on page 2, strike out "commissioned officers" and insert the word "representatives."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILSON: Page 1, line 12, strike out the words "commissioned officers" and insert the word "representatives."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILSON: Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "commissioned officers" and insert the word "representatives."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILSON: Page 2, line 7, after the word "Engineers," strike out the rest of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TILSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is now more than an hour later than we had planned to run, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman insist on the point?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman let me pass a bridge bill? It will take but a minute. There is no objection to it in the world.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will withhold, we can get through, I think, in 15 minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I am asking for this because my county is interested in it.

Mr. MANN. I would be willing to pass almost any of these bills, but we would not get through, anyway, and we can meet again at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have a number of bills on the calendar from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and one of them is one of the most important bills that has been pending before Congress for a long time.

Mr. BURNETT. We all appreciate the magnanimity of the gentleman from Illinois in regard to the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day.

Mr. MANN. If it had not been for me, the House would have quit at 4 o'clock this afternoon on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I am willing to stay here a long time without anything to eat to help gentlemen get through their bills, but I am going to my dinner now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 18, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a proposed draft of a bill to prohibit the unauthorized use of the word "navy" or "naval" by any person, association, organization, agency, or corporation, and for other purposes (H. Doc. No. 1806); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill for the relief of Lieut. D. A. Neumann, Pay Corps, United States Naval Reserve Force (H. Doc. No. 1807); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the president of the Civil Service Commission submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required for traveling expenses for the fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1810); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required for expenses of executing writs of lunacy, fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1811); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting item of tentative legislation to enable the Secretary of War to acquire and operate the Cape Cod Canal (H. Doc. No. 1812); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required for the relief of Eskimos and other natives of Alaska suffering from influenza and the effects thereof (H. Doc. No. 1813); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Public Printer submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Superintendent of Documents for general expenses and distribution of documents for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1814); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a tentative draft of legislation for inclusion in the general deficiency appropriation bill (H. Doc. No. 1815); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 352) granting pensions to certain members of the former Life-Saving Service, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1079), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4023) amending an act entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to sell to the city of Los Angeles, Cal., certain public lands in California; and granting rights in, over, and through the Sierra Forest Reserve, the Santa Barbara Forest Reserve, and the San Gabriel Timberland Reserve, Cal., to the city of Los Angeles, Cal.," approved June 30, 1906, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1080), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15993) providing for cooperation between the United States and State Governments in the rural settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to promote the reclamation of lands, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1081), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 570) requesting the President to communicate to the House certain information regarding the War Trade Board, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1082), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 18, 1919.

(Legislative day of Thursday, February 13, 1919.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment and call the roll.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment of the committee is, on page 18, line 15, relative to the Red, Black, Ouachita, and other rivers in Arkansas and Louisiana, for maintenance. After the word "maintenance" the committee proposes to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$35,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it be in order to suggest the absence of a quorum?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order. This is the state of the record: The yeas and nays were called for and seconded. The call of the yeas and nays disclosed the absence of a quorum, and a recess was taken. There can be no intervening business until that roll call is completed. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARDWICK (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). I was requested to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] is detained at home by illness. He has a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. This announcement will stand for the day.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and let my vote stand.

Mr. PENROSE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. As he is absent, I will refrain from voting. Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have been paired for some time with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], but I saw him on the floor yesterday. So I know that he has returned to town. I therefore think I have a right to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING. Has the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with that Senator. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is necessarily absent, and I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CALDER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MOSES. Has the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. MOSES. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], with whom I have a pair, has not voted, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair, and my pair, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], I note, is absent. I make a transfer of that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], on account of illness. This announcement will stand for the day. He is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] are detained on committee work.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 21, as follows:

FEDERAL HIGHWAY AID.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to introduce a bill for printing in the RECORD and reference to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Its object is Federal highway aid and construction. It is not because I expect to bring it up or that it will receive any consideration at this session of Congress, but it illustrates in general the principles upon which I believe Federal highway activities should be based, and I introduce it at this time in order that it may receive that criticism and attention on the part of those people and organizations throughout the country who are interested in highway construction that will enable us at the next session of Congress to act intelligently upon the matter. Our Government has entered the good-roads field, and it will not retire therefrom. It is my desire to assist in directing the Federal activities along lines at once scientific and practical. I believe that the National Government should construct a national system of roads through the States connecting all the Commonwealths, and then should maintain these roads, and the States should construct and maintain all the other roads within their boundaries. The powers of the two governments should be as separate and distinct as possible. I present this bill for general consideration.

The bill (S. 5626) to create a Federal highway commission, to establish a national highway system, to promote efficiency and economical highway transportation, and to amend an act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created a Federal highway commission, and to provide a connected system of main highways adequate to sustain the demands of interstate commerce, to provide adequate post roads for the transportation of the United States mails and parcel post, and to provide for the common defense and promote the general welfare of the people of the United States there is hereby authorized to be established, constructed, and maintained a system of highways, hereinafter referred to as the national highway system, to comprise not less than two main trunk-line roads in each State, and joining the national highway system in the adjacent States and countries. The term "commission" used in this act shall mean the Federal highway commission, hereinafter referred to as commission; a highway, within the meaning of this act, shall be deemed to include the necessary bridges, drainage structures, signs, guardrails, protective structures, and housing.

SEC. 2. That the commission shall consist of five members.

SEC. 3. That the commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; not more than three commissioners shall be of the same political party, and shall be chosen from different geographical sections of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the commissioners first appointed shall continue in office for the terms of three, four, five, six, and seven years, respectively, from the date of their appointment; the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for the term of seven years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed and have similar qualifications.

SEC. 5. That the commissioners shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum, payable in the same manner as the judges of the courts of the United States.

SEC. 6. That the commission shall choose a chairman from its own membership. It shall be the duties of the members of the commission to devote the entire statutory time required of other governmental officials to their work.

SEC. 7. That the commission shall appoint a secretary who shall keep a journal of proceedings, minutes of each meeting, record all proceedings, make true copies of all notices to be published, and shall perform such other duties as the commission may designate and require.

SEC. 8. That it shall further have authority and power to employ, at a fixed compensation, a chief engineer, engineers, special experts, attorneys, and clerks as it may from time to time find necessary for the performance of its duties. All other employees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service, and shall enter the service under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the commission and by the Civil Service Commission.

SEC. 9. That the commission shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

SEC. 10. That a vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission, and three members of such remaining commissioners shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 11. That the commission shall select from time to time, subject to such changes as it may deem advisable under the provisions of this act, the highways to be comprised in the National Highway System and shall determine the order in which such highway shall be constructed, reconstructed, and improved. In determining the highways to be comprised in the National Highway System the commission shall request the State highway departments to recommend the routes to be followed in their respective States. The National Highway System shall not include any highway in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 5,000 or more, except that portion of any such highway along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart.

SEC. 12. That the commission shall determine the types of construction and reconstruction and the character of improvement, repair, and maintenance of all highways included in the National Highway System, and shall direct, supervise, and control the making of the surveys, the preparation of the plans, specifications, and estimates, and the construction, reconstruction, improvement, repair, maintenance, and administration of such highways, or may arrange with the State highway departments in their respective States to make the necessary surveys and plans and to pay therefor. Only such durable types and adequate widths of surface shall be adopted for any highway as will effectively meet the traffic conditions thereon and the probable future traffic needs.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the commission from time to time and without charge therefor, for use in the construction and maintenance of national highways, such vehicles, motor vehicles, road machinery, and equipment as may be suitable for the use of the commission; and the commission is hereby authorized to use the same, in its discretion, in the construction and maintenance of national highways, and to pay the necessary expenses thereof out of the appropriation made under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 14. That no money shall be expended in any State under this act until its legislature shall have assented to the provisions of this act, except that until the final adjournment of the first regular session of the legislature held after the passage of this act the assent of the governor shall be sufficient. In consideration of the benefits to be derived by the State from the construction, reconstruction, improvements, repair, and maintenance of the highways comprised in the National Highways System, and as a condition precedent to the construction of any such highways in any State a right of way therefor, not less than 60 feet in width, except at such points where existing buildings or structures are of such value that the cost of their removal would in the opinion of the commission be excessive, shall be furnished to the United States without expense to it by, for, or on behalf of such State or any civil subdivision thereof. Any land of the United States may be appropriated as rights of way for the highways herein provided for, and the consent of the United States is hereby given to any railroad or canal company to convey to the United States for such highways any part of its right of way acquired by grant from the United States. The highways comprised in the National Highways System shall be constructed, reconstructed, improved, repaired, maintained, and administered entirely at the expense of the United States, except State police powers, but the State or its civil subdivision shall maintain any such highway prior to the construction, reconstruction, or improvement thereof under this act.

SEC. 15. That the commission is authorized to prescribe and promulgate such regulations governing the use of highways comprised in the national highway system as the commission may find necessary and reasonable in order to preserve and protect such highways and to facilitate and insure the safety of travel and traffic thereon. Whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure or destroy any part of a highway embraced in the national highway system or property or material owned or controlled by the United States in connection with such highway, or shall use any such highway or part thereof without complying with the regulations prescribed and promulgated by the commission hereunder, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Nothing in this act shall affect the jurisdiction of the State, either civil or criminal, over persons and property upon such highways, except so far as the regulation of the use thereof are concerned; that is to say, the State wherein any such highway is situated shall not, by reason of establishment thereof, lose its jurisdiction, nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens, or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State.

SEC. 16. That it shall be the further duty of the commission to encourage the proper use of all highways and to stimulate the interests of the States, communities, and rural districts in the most efficient and economical transportation over all highways in the United States, to ascertain by experiment and collect all data on new developments in highway transportation, construction, and maintenance, and to publish the same for the benefit of the people at large.

SEC. 17. That it shall be the further duty of the commission to take over and perform all duties, powers, functions, and other obligations of all Federal agencies having jurisdiction and control of highway and experimental road work and all Federal agencies of educational and investigative character relating to highway transportation. Said departments or agencies shall be so coordinated and consolidated as to be made most effective: Provided, however, That agencies dealing with all highways under the control of the United States Army or Navy in military or naval reservations, or are used solely for military or naval purposes, shall not be so taken over, but shall remain under the jurisdiction and control of said agency.

SEC. 18. That, in addition to the authority conferred by the preceding sections, the commission is authorized to make all rules and regulations necessary for the efficient execution of this act. The commission may let to contract or perform in any other manner which it may deem proper any work under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 19. That, for the purpose of carrying out the foregoing sections of this act, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50,000,000, which shall become available July 1, 1919, and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and $100,000,000 for each of the three succeeding fiscal years; in all, $425,000,000, which shall be available until expended. Out of such appropriation there shall be available to the commission for each fiscal year, and until expended, such amounts as they may determine to be necessary for the payment of such administrative expenses, including such rent, printing and publications, the purchase of such supplies and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, and the fixing of compensation therefor, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as may be deemed necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act. The amounts so made available to the commission may also be used for the erection and maintenance of buildings outside the District of Columbia and for the operation of housing and subsistence facilities and commissary stores, including the purchase and sale of commodities for the benefit of employees and others engaged upon work under this act, the receipts from such operations and sales to be credited to and become part of appropriation made by this section and to be available for expenditure in the same manner as the remainder of such appropriation. The commission is authorized to purchase, lease, rent, operate, and maintain such motor and other transportation facilities as it may deem necessary in performance of its duties under this act. The commission is authorized and empowered to issue permits, licenses, and franchises for openings in and the use of any portion of the right of way comprised in the national highway system, and may require such payment from the beneficiaries thereof, and in such manner as may seem equitable; and the receipts therefrom shall be credited to the appropriations made by this act, to be expendable in the same manner.

That the commission, after making the deductions authorized by this section, shall apportion the remainder of the appropriation for each fiscal year among the several States in the following manner: One-third in the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States as shown by the latest Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the highway mileage of each State bears to the total mileage of all the States as shown by the official bulletin issued by the Secretary of Agriculture for the year 1914: Provided, That if any State desires to immediately improve any section of the national highway within the State, which has been designated by the commission, the commission may enter into an agreement with the State highway department of such a State to finance the construction or reconstruction of said highway or section thereof: Provided, however, That the amount so advanced shall not exceed the amount apportioned to said State for construction or reconstruction, and the commission shall authorize the repayment to the State highway department of the amount annually set aside for construction or reconstruction until the full amount so advanced has been repaid.

SEC. 20. That the commission is authorized to enter into arrangements with any public or private agency for purchase, easements, construction, installation, operation, and maintenance of any facilities which it may consider necessary in the use of the National Highway System, and to pay such part of the cost thereof out of the appropriations under this act as it may deem equitable.

SEC. 21. That in order to increase the effectiveness of an act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, said act is hereby amended by enactment of the following provisions:

Section 2 of the act hereinbefore referred to is amended by striking out the word "may" and substituting therefore the word "can."

Paragraph 2 of section 6 of the aforesaid act is hereby amended by striking out the words "nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span."

SEC. 22. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act as herein amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in addition to amounts set forth in said act, $25,000,000, which shall become available for expenditure July 1, 1919, and the sum of $25,000,000, which shall become available for expenditure July 1, 1920, which sums shall be expended along with and in the same manner and under the same provisions as directed in the aforesaid act and as herein amended.

SEC. 23. That not later than the first Monday in December of each year the commission shall make a report to Congress showing the operations and expenditures, under the foregoing provisions of this act, for the preceding fiscal year.

SEC. 24. That this act shall be in force from and after the date of its passage.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. GAY. I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending right of suffrage to women, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 224) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Woman Suffrage, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"SEC. 2. The several States shall have the exclusive right to enact appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of this article."

FINDINGS OF COURTS-MARTIAL.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I introduce a joint resolution in relation to court-martial proceedings, and I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 225) providing for a review of the findings of the courts-martial convened during the war with Germany was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to constitute, appoint, and convene in the Judge Advocate General's Department as many reviewing boards, composed of five commissioned officers each, as he may deem necessary to do the work speedily, the duties of which boards shall be to reexamine and review the records of conviction in every court-martial case arising during the present war. The said court-martial records shall be assembled by and be under the direction of the Judge Advocate General and distributed to said boards in such manner as he may deem best, and said boards shall examine into all questions, both of law and of facts, and, in addition, they shall examine any new or additional facts which any defendant may bring before them by way of affidavits, to the end that said reviewing boards may hear and determine each case anew on the law and the facts of the record, together with such additional facts as may be adduced, and decide the cases as speedily as possible, according to the equity and justice thereof. In reaching their conclusions, the boards shall take into consideration the punishment already inflicted in each and every case, but they shall not consider the findings and judgments of the courts-martial as binding upon them, inasmuch as the war is over and it may not now be necessary to continue many punishments which were absolutely necessary to be inflicted in order to preserve proper military discipline during a state of war; and it shall be their duty, whenever the justice of the case may require it, to change, reverse, alter, mitigate, set aside, annul, or confirm the findings of any court-martial convened during the present war. Such boards shall have the power and it shall be their duty in proper cases to set aside and hold for naught orders of dishonorable discharges inflicted as punishment in court-martial cases, and to enter orders granting honorable discharges, which orders shall be filed of record in the proper department containing the record of such discharged soldiers. Each board shall act by majority vote, and each board shall select its own chairman without regard to the rank of the officer. In the selection of such boards no officer shall be appointed thereon who has taken part in any court-martial trial or who has reviewed any court-martial record arising since the beginning of the present war. The President is authorized to appoint such additional officers as he may deem to be necessary to serve on said boards, with the rank of major judge advocates. When an opinion shall be reached, the same shall be immediately forwarded to the President by the Judge Advocate General, with the recommendation of such board. If the President approves the finding of the board, the same shall be final; but he is further authorized and empowered to enter any order or judgment in any case, whether of mitigation or annulment, in whole or in part, of any court-martial proceeding or finding or of any finding of such boards, or he may parole or pardon, to the end that even and exact justice shall be done in each case.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 456), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to the Senate copies of the reports made by Government Agents Bloomer and Trowbridge, with all affidavits accompanying same, upon the land investigation at Scobey and Helena, Mont., in 1915, filed with the Commissioner of the Land Office, Hon. Clay Tallman.

MAYOR HANSON'S STATEMENT.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement from Ole Hanson, mayor of the city of Seattle, a city recently menaced by a far-reaching insurrection. This is so apt an announcement at this time and is so thoroughly American in its tenor and purposes that I think it should be inserted in the RECORD.

Mayor Hanson is a naturalized citizen, but his Americanism is of that stalwart kind that one would wish to see exhibited much more than it is in the native American of the present day. He is a full red-blooded patriot, and I think he deserves the thanks of the American people for the prompt and vigorous manner in which he handled that situation and quelled that insurrection.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Two years ago 15,000 workmen were employed in the industries of Seattle. There are now 65,000. The unions have admitted to their ranks under the stress of war conditions every Bolshevik and I. W. W. who desired to join. These men have secured control of many labor organizations. The conservative members have shown their yellow streak by allowing the foes of organized government to run their unions and their affairs.

"When the shipyard strike was called the men went out unwillingly in most instances, although there is a feeling that the lower paid men were not getting sufficient wage when figured on the present cost of living.

"Then the radicals, having read of the revolution in Petrograd, tried to duplicate the initial steps of the same here. They wanted to run our light plant and all industries, believing that we would surrender because of economic pressure and suffering of our people. They had forgotten the lesson Germany acquired when they tried the policy of ruthlessness.

"The city government told them to go to hell—that all things would run as long as there was a government and made no concession to the revolutionists. They closed down the newspaper plants through fear of injury of the employees of newspapers.

"Business, always cowardly, hunted its hole for a little time until I announced that all people would be protected to the last man and that we had 1,500 men armed with rifles to kill on sight anyone that caused disorder.

"On Friday I notified the strike committee that at 8 o'clock Saturday morning everything would operate. Everything is activity in Seattle this morning. Every municipal car is running. Our light plant has never shut down one minute. Neither has our water plant. Gathered in Seattle are Joe Ettor, of Lawrence, Mass., fame; Mucky McDonald, and men of his stripe from all over the Union.

"Gathered here are hundreds and thousands of Russian Bolsheviki who have arrived here during the last two years. These scoundrels want to take possession of our American Government and try to duplicate the anarchy of Russia.

"The seat of government is the city hall. We swore in 1,000 extra police and hold in reserve citizens armed with rifles and shotguns. I gave orders to shoot on sight any disturber of the peace. They know from the experience they had at the riot a few weeks ago that we meant business and, believe me, we did.

"I wanted a showdown. If there is a majority of these fellows in the United States I don't want to live here. They told me the troops were disloyal and would not help us. I told them that was a lie, but even if it was so, we would fight them until we were dead before we even allowed them to turn out one 8-candlepower light.

"Chief of Police Warren is a real man who loves his country. We decided that we would not call in the Federal troops. If they are called in to quell disorder some one else must call them. We won't be here. The great body of union men saw the light. To-day they are bitterly resenting their false leadership and will overthrow their officers in many unions.

"This is a test of unionism or I. W. W.ism. If anyone owes higher allegiance to any organization than they do to this country, they are traitors and should be treated as such. That is all there is to it. This is a time for union men to stand up and be counted. This is a time when every American must forget all other allegiances and stand by the Government.

"The unions of the Nation are on trial. They are either American Federation of Labor loyalists or Bolshevik traitors.

"This morning the strike is broken. Business is resuming. Strikers are returning to work. Our city no longer lies prostrate. Ninety per cent of Seattle stands firm for Americanism. The other 10 per cent will be driven from this community."

REVERENCE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT AND AMERICANISM.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I assume that Washington's Farewell Address will be read on Saturday. I hope it will be, anyway.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to give notice that upon the conclusion of the reading of it I shall submit some remarks to the Senate upon my ideas as to the need of more reverence in high places for law enforcement in America and real, genuine Americanism as a defense or partial defense, at any rate, against Bolshevism.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to give notice that, with the consent of the Senate, as soon as I can get the floor to-morrow I will address the Senate on the subject of the proposed constitution of a league of nations.

REVENUE ACT OF 1918 (S. DOC. NO. 391).

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a public document a letter prepared at my request by Joseph S. McCoy, the Actuary of the Treasury Department and the expert who was in attendance upon the Committee on Finance during the preparation of the new war-revenue measure. The letter is a clear and succinct analysis of that measure. It enumerates the important provisions of the old law which have been eliminated and enumerates the most important provisions which have been introduced into the new law. It will be of invaluable assistance to taxpayers, to lawyers, to bankers, and others concerned. I therefore ask that it be printed as a public document, and I also request that the statement made by me be printed as a part of the document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 390).

Mr. BANKHEAD. I submit the conference report on House bill 13308, the Post Office appropriation bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 36, 39, 40, 41, and 49.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 37, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, and 73; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "That hereafter all days, other than the holidays enumerated in the act of July 28, 1916, making appropriations for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, set aside by the President of the United States as holidays to be observed by the other departments of the Government throughout the United States shall be construed as applicable to the Postal Service in the same manner and to the same extent as the executive departments"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane mail service between such points, including service to and between points in Alaska, as he may determine. The Postmaster General in expending this appropriation shall purchase, as far as practicable, such available and suitable equipment and supplies for the aeroplane mail service as may be owned by or under construction for the War Department or the Navy Department when no longer required because of the cessation of war activities, and it shall be his duty to first ascertain if such articles of the character described may be secured from the War Department or the Navy Department before purchasing such equipment or supplies elsewhere. If such equipment or supplies, other than emergency supplies, are purchased elsewhere than from the War Department or the Navy Department, the Postmaster General shall report such action to Congress, together with the reasons for such purchases. All articles purchased from either of said departments shall be paid for at a reasonable price considering wear and tear and general condition. Said departments are authorized to sell such equipment and supplies to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized, and directed to deliver immediately to the Postmaster General, as he may request, and as hereinbefore provided, such aeroplane machines, supplies, equipment, and parts as may be serviceable and available for the aeroplane mail service, the same to be out of any equipment that the War Department or the Navy Department has on hand or under construction, the War Department and the Navy Department appropriations to be credited with the equipment turned over to the Post Office Department: And provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for aeroplane mail service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage, and rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes on which triweekly service is performed shall receive $12 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage: Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1920 the pay of carriers who furnish and maintain their own motor vehicles and who serve routes not less than 50 miles in length may be fixed at not exceeding $2,250 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senate restore the word "herein," at the end of line 15, on page 28, and add the following: "Provided further, That no assistant postmaster or supervisory official at offices of the first class shall receive a less salary than $100 per annum in excess of the sixth-grade salary provided for clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service, nor shall an assistant postmaster at any office of the second class be paid a less salary than that paid the highest-salaried clerk or letter carrier employed in such office: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangement with the Post Office Department, or to employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation: And provided further, That the increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent and 15 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the increased compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section. So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term 'rural post roads,' as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road a major portion of which is now used or can be used or forms a connecting link not to exceed 10 miles in length of any road or roads now or hereafter used for the transportation of the United States mails, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart: Provided, That section 6 of said act be further amended so that the limitation of payments not to exceed $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make, be, and the same is, increased to $20,000 per mile.

"SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act, as herein amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums: The sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and available immediately; the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; said additional sums to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That where the constitution of any State prohibits the same from engaging upon internal improvements, or from contracting public debts for extraordinary purposes in an amount sufficient to meet the monetary requirements of the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, or restricts annual tax levies for the purpose of constructing and improving roads and bridges, and where a constitutional alteration or amendment to overcome either or all of such prohibitions must be submitted to a referendum at a general election, the sum to which such State is entitled under the method of apportionment provided in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, shall be withdrawn by the Secretary of the Treasury from the principal fund appropriated by the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, upon receipt of the certification of the governor of such State to the existence of either or all of said prohibitions, and such sum shall be carried by the Secretary of the Treasury as a separate fund for future disbursement as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That when, by referendum, the constitutional alterations or amendments necessary to the enjoyment of the sum so withdrawn have been approved and ratified by any State, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of certification from the governor of such State to such effect, shall immediately make available to such State, for the purposes set forth in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, the sum withdrawn as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under its existing constitution and laws: Provided further, That in the expenditure of this fund for labor preference shall be given, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, but any other preference or discrimination among citizens of the United States in connection with the expenditure of this appropriation is hereby declared to be unlawful.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same be distributed among the highway departments of the several States to be used on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid, such distribution to be made upon a value basis of distribution the same as provided by the Federal aid road act, approved July 11, 1916: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may reserve from such distribution not to exceed 10 per cent of such material, equipment, and supplies for use in the construction of national forest roads or other roads constructed under his direct supervision.

"SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $3,000,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $3,000,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $3,000,000, available until expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with the proper officials of the State, Territory, insular possession, or county, in the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or partly within the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources of the same or desirable for the proper administration, protection, and improvement of any such forest. Out of the sums so appropriated the Secretary of Agriculture may, without the cooperation of such officials, survey, construct, and maintain any road or trail within a national forest which he finds necessary for the proper administration, protection, and improvement of such forest, or which in his opinion is of national importance. In the expenditure of this fund for labor preference shall be given, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language proposed by the Senate and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That no officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be detailed for work on the roads which come within the provisions of this act except by his own consent: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture through the War Department shall ascertain the number of days any such soldiers, sailors, and marines have worked on the public roads in the several States (other than roads within the limits of cantonments or military reservations in the several States) during the existing war, and also the location where they worked and their names and rank, and report to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session.

"Provided further, That when any officer or enlisted man in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps shall have been or may be in the future detailed for labor in the building of roads or other highway construction or repair work (other than roads within the limits of cantonments or military reservations in the several States) during the existing war, the pay of such officer or enlisted man shall be equalized to conform to the compensation paid to civilian employees in the same or like employment and the amount found to be due such officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines, less the amount of his pay as such officer, soldier, sailor, or marine, shall be paid to him from the 1920 appropriation herein allotted to the States wherein such highway construction or repair work was or will be performed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

OIL AND GAS LANDS (S. DOC. NO. 392).

Mr. PITTMAN. I present the conference report on the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, and ask that it be printed. I wish to notify Senators that as soon as the pending bill is disposed of I shall ask that the conference report be laid before the Senate, in order that it may be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. When does the Senator desire to call up the conference report?

Mr. PITTMAN. Only after the pending bill shall have been concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to call it up to-day, I shall object.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no intention of calling it up to-day or at any time when it is objectionable. I thought, possibly, that we would wait until after the pending bill had been concluded and then call it up for consideration. I give notice that if the pending bill is completed this evening I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that; but I understood the Senator to say that he would call it up immediately after the pending bill had been disposed of.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was an inadvertent expression.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed with the conference report a statement by the managers which shows specifically the changes made in the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report and accompanying statement is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon National Park, and the Mount Olympus National Monument, but excluding those in other national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities.

"COAL.

"SEC. 2. That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union, including the Territory of Alaska, not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad, and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair: Provided, That improvements or development work of the aggregate value of not less than $8 per acre upon the coal lands so entered shall be made or done upon the lands annually for two years after such award, when patent shall issue therefor. Upon failure to comply with the terms of this section within the required period said lands shall be subject to entry by any other qualified applicant.

"No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area, at any one time, nor be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, and no member of such association or corporation, or stockholder of such corporation, shall own any other coal lands or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, or in any other association or corporation owning or controlling any coal lands: Provided, however, That any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held two years after its acquisition and not longer, and in case of minority or other disability such time as the court may decree.

"That any person, association, corporation, member of such association, or stockholder of such corporation who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a felony, and punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not exceeding two years, or both.

"That if any of such coal lands entered after the passage of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of a trust, or the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by individuals, copartnership, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States of America by proceedings instituted by the attorney general in the courts for the purpose.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, including the Territory of Alaska, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract; and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, from time to time upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and, upon a royalty fixed by him in advance, shall award leases thereof through advertisement, by competitive bidding, or, in case of lignite or low-grade coals, such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act: Provided, That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder. That such a railroad or common carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term "railroad" or "common carrier" as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier, but shall not include spurs, switches, or branch lines operated by any lessee and necessary to connect the mine with the line or lines of any railroad or other common carrier.

"SEC. 4. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

"That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

"SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases or holdings through the surrender of the original leases or holdings and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

"SEC. 6. That where coal lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion, the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease sections or parts of sections which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

"SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall be not less than 2 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for.

"SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of individuals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporation: And provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 160 acres, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease or sell to any person qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

"SEC. 10. That each lease or sale shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivision of the public-land surveys; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of public lands, and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

"SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the phosphates or phosphate rock from the mine, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates, or phosphate rock, under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

"OIL AND GAS.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas well and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought, a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits, not more than five in number, may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: And provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

"SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That said permittee shall be given a preference right to lease the remaining and unpatented lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be upon the same terms and conditions as provided for other general leases.

"SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for patent to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

"SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, entries, and patents of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so located, leased, entered, or patented, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the locator, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the location, entry, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 17. That all unappointed deposits of oil or gas situated within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 1,280 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-eighth in amount of value of the production, which royalty on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 18. That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

"Upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed since prior to July 3, 1910, by the claimant hereunder or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting petroleum placer law to any oil or gas bearing land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced, after first deducting the actual and necessary expenses of such production: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provisions of this section when the area of such geological oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor subject to this limitation shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure.

"All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act of August 25, 1914 (38 Stat. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just.

"Leases granted or compromised settlements made hereunder upon any tract of land shall inure to the benefit of all persons or corporations, except those guilty of fraud, having an interest with the lessee or claimant, by contract or lease, in such land proportionately in accordance with the interest so represented by such existing contract or lease, subject to the assumption proportionately by each such existing interest of the obligations of such lease or settlement so granted or made hereunder, which proportionate benefits and obligations shall be incorporated in such lease or compromise agreement.

"SEC. 19. That any person who, at the time of any withdrawal order, or on January 1, 1918, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands not withdrawn from entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within three months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That such lands are not reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud or who has not acted honestly and in good faith shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: And provided further, That within one year after the passage of this act where any land has been included within an oil withdrawal or classification heretofore made after bona fide entry upon the same by a qualified homestead or desert-land entryman and where said entryman has complied with the requirements of the law relating to such entries up to the time when said withdrawal was made, said entryman or the patentee under such entry, or his assigns when such assignment was made prior to January 1, 1918, shall be given a preference right to a prospecting permit for the same under the same terms and conditions as prescribed in this act.

"OIL SHALE.

"SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the survey of public lands. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid location to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1918, shall, upon the relinquishment of such location, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section, for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil-shale bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

"ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

"SEC. 21. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, or his successors or assigns, who prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent to a prospecting permit or permits, lease, or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases issued in Alaska under this act whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"SODIUM.

"SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Cal.

"SEC. 23. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 22 hereof has been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting limit, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or, if the land be not surveyed, by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims. All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit, from and after the exercise of the preference right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and all other lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 22 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease or sale, and may be leased or sold by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulation theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development, and minimum production, and a patentee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

"SEC. 24. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 20 acres in area for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

"SEC. 26. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18 and 19 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines or railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same.

"SEC. 27. That rights of way through the public lands, including the forest reserves, of the United States are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 25 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over said lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

"SEC. 28. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made, it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

"SEC. 29. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent, surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

"SEC. 30. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

"SEC. 31. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have, including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee of the United States.

"SEC. 32. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified by him and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

"SEC. 33. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

"SEC. 34. That all moneys received from sales, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That any moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts."

"SEC. 35. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment to the title: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title to the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The specific changes made in the Senate bill in the conference are hereinafter set out by line and page. Many of these amendments are simply corrections of language, therefore the managers will briefly state the substance of the changes in the Senate bill.

The Senate bill expressly excluded any legislation with regard to land and oil within oil naval reserve, and therefore the provisions of the House bill were accepted upon the insistence of the managers upon the part of the House. These provisions were prepared by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General.

The Senate bill provided for a fixed royalty of one-eighth in all leases executed under the bill. The House provision was adopted, providing for a royalty of not less than one-eighth, with the amendment, however, offered by the managers on the part of the Senate, that the amount of such royalty should be determined by competitive bidding. The acreage provided in the Senate bill for a lease was not to exceed 2,560 acres, while in the House bill it was 640 acres. A compromise was reached upon 1,280 acres. These provisions, of course, do not apply to claimants of oil lands under existing laws. As to these the claimants, if guilty of no fraud, and if they had developed producing oil wells, are entitled to a lease under the bill agreed upon to the land they so claimed in good faith and which they have so developed under the general provisions applying to other leases. There is a further limitation, however, upon this class of lessee, and in no case shall they be permitted to monopolize any oil field. In other words, with regard to this character of claimants, all of the drastic provisions with regard to fraud provided in the House bill were agreed to. In other words, these claimants who are guilty of no fraud and who developed producing oil wells in good faith are entitled to a preferential right to lease oil lands that the Government purposes to lease under the bill.

The Senate provision with regard to the discovery and development of new oil fields was agreed to. It provides for a prospecting permit and for a grant of title to one-fourth of the area described in such prospecting permit upon the discovery of oil and a preferential right to lease the other three-fourths upon such terms as may be fixed by competitive bidding and general leasing provisions of the bill. The Senate provisions with regard to coal and phosphate were adopted, with the effect intended by the Senate.

Congress has given careful consideration and ceaseless energy during a period of six years to the accomplishment of this legislation. The managers on the part of the House and the Senate have been attempting to reach an agreement since May. Each board of managers has conceded all that it will concede, and the result meets the approval of 9 out of every 10 conferees. The conferees believe that the bill will accomplish development of resources that are immediately and vitally required by our Government, while at the same time it protects the Government against fraud, waste, or extortion. In the opinion of the conferees the fight will go on for years, the natural resources of the country will be undeveloped, and there will be a dire scarcity of the minerals described in the bill unless the conference report is agreed to.

Section 1 of the bill as agreed to is section 1 of the House bill, with amendments as follows:

MEMORIAL TO FRANCIS ASBURY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Francis Asbury, which were on page 1, lines 14 and 15, to strike out "the site chosen and"; on page 1, line 15, after "approved," to insert "and the site shall be chosen," and, on page 2, line 2, after "memorial," to insert: "Provided, That the memorial herein provided for shall not be erected or placed on any part of the Mall, or Potomac Park, nor on any ground within one-half mile of the Capitol."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND AT SAN DIEGO, CAL.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is a Senate bill which has just come from the House with amendments, and the friends of the measure are very anxious for its final passage. It is a bill to which there is no objection, and I ask that it be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3646) to grant rights of way over Government lands for dam and reservoir purposes, for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the city of San Diego, Cal., and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the south half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter and the north half of the southwest quarter of section 8; the west half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter and the west half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 9, all in township 15 south, range 2 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, within the Cleveland National Forest; and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 15; the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the northwest quarter, the north half of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 22; the west half of the northwest quarter of section 27; and the east half of the northeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of section 28; and the northeast quarter, the west half of the southeast quarter, the east half of the southwest quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 33, all in township 14 south, range 2 east, San Bernardino base and meridian; also the north half of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 3, and lots 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and the south half of section 4, all in township 15 south, range 2 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, within the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation, and all within the county of San Diego and State of California, are hereby granted to the city of San Diego, a municipal corporation in said county and State, for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation and storage of water, whenever said city shall have provided compensation as hereinafter specified for all property rights and interests and damages done to Mission Indians located upon the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation: Provided, That the lands herein granted shall not be sold, assigned, transferred, or conveyed to any private person, corporation, or association; and in case of any attempt to sell, assign, transfer, or convey, or upon a failure to use and apply said lands exclusively to the purposes herein specified, this grant shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the lands herein granted are and shall be subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired by any person, persons, or corporation in or to the above described premises, or any part thereof, and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States, and no private right, title, interest, or claim of any person, persons, or corporation in or to any of such lands shall be interfered with or abridged, except with the consent of the owner or owners, or claimant or claimants thereof, or by due process of law and just compensation paid to such owner or claimant: Provided, That the rights and claims of the Mission Indians of the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation, located upon the lands herein described and affected by the grant herein, shall be protected and provided for as hereafter set forth in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. That the law of eminent domain of the State of California is hereby extended over and made to apply to said lands, and the Secretary of the Interior or his duly authorized representative is hereby directed to appear on behalf of, in the name of, and to represent the Capitan Grande Band of Indians and the United States in any proceedings instituted by the city of San Diego to condemn the interest of said Indians in said lands: Provided, That any judgment or order of condemnation entered in such proceeding shall be binding upon said Capitan Grande Band of Indians only upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the terms of said judgment: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall require from the city of San Diego in addition to the award of condemnation such further sum which, in his opinion, when added to said award, will be sufficient in the aggregate to provide for the purchase of additional lands for the Capitan Grande Band of Indians, the erection of suitable homes for the Indians on the lands so purchased, the erection of such schools, churches, and administrative buildings, the sinking of such wells and the construction of such roads and ditches, and providing water and water rights and for such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior to properly establish these Indians permanently on the lands purchased for them; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the proceeds or any part thereof, derived from this grant for the purposes above enumerated, for the exclusive use and benefit of said Indians: And provided further, That the grant made in this act shall not become effective until payment has been made of the sums herein provided for.

SEC. 4. That within one year after the approval of this act the city of San Diego shall commence condemnation proceedings to acquire the lands herein described and shall diligently prosecute such proceedings to a final judgment. Within two years after the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of any such judgment of condemnation the city of San Diego shall institute, and thereafter shall diligently prosecute, proceedings for the issuance and sale of municipal bonds to defray the amount necessary to satisfy any such judgment of condemnation, paying such additional sum as the Secretary of the Interior may require, as provided for in section 3, and providing for the acquisition, construction, and completion of a dam, reservoir, pipe line, and appurtenances thereto necessary or convenient to the storage and conservation of water upon the lands herein described for the purposes set forth in this bill. Within six months from the time of payment into the city treasury of the moneys realized from the sale of municipal bonds issued as herein provided the city of San Diego shall commence the construction of said dam and reservoir, and the same shall be prosecuted diligently, and in the event that the Secretary of the Interior shall find and determine that there has not been diligent prosecution of the work, or that said condemnation proceedings have not been commenced and diligently prosecuted, or that municipal bonds have not been issued and sold as herein provided, then he may declare forfeited all rights of the grantees herein and request the Attorney General, on behalf of the United States, to commence suits or proceedings in the proper court having jurisdiction thereof for the purpose of procuring a judgment declaring all rights to be forfeited to the United States, and upon such request it shall be the duty of said Attorney General to cause to be commenced and prosecuted to a final judgment such suits or proceedings: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make no such findings and take no such action if he shall find that the issuance or sale of municipal bonds or the construction or progress of the dam or reservoir has been delayed or prevented by the act of God or the public enemy or by legal, engineering, or other difficulties that could not have been reasonably foreseen and overcome, or by other special or peculiar difficulties beyond the control of said grantee: Provided further, That in the exercise of the rights granted by this act the grantee shall at all times comply with the regulations herein authorized, and in the event of any material departure therefrom the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively, may take such action as may be necessary in the courts or otherwise to enforce such regulations: Provided further, That if such dam be built the Indians of the Capitan Grande Reservation shall be permitted to reside on, occupy, and cultivate the lands of their present reservation up until within 90 days of the time when water for storage purposes will be turned into the reservoir to be constructed hereunder, provided such occupancy by the Indians will not materially hinder the construction of the dam and storage work, which fact is to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That said reservoir, when constructed, shall be maintained and controlled by the city of San Diego for the use and benefit of said city and the inhabitants thereof and of such other municipalities within the county of San Diego, State of California, as may be now or hereafter furnished with water by said city of San Diego, and for the use and benefit of riparian owners along the San Diego River below the lands herein described and for the benefit of persons, corporations, or municipalities situated along or adjacent to the pipe lines of said city of San Diego for the conservation and storage of water for domestic, irrigation, or municipal uses: Provided, That the city of San Diego shall sell to the United States for the use of the War and Navy Departments such water as the War and Navy Departments, or either of them, may elect to take, and shall deliver the same through its system in or near the city of San Diego to the mains or systems of such military or naval reservations in that vicinity as may be designated by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or both, under such rules and regulations as they or either of them may prescribe. In payment of such water and the delivery thereof the United States shall pay to said city of San Diego a rental to be calculated at a fixed rate per 1,000 gallons, said rate not to exceed the actual cost of such water to said city for all water so furnished as determined by meter measurements: Provided, however, That the grantee shall at all times comply with and observe on its part all of the conditions specified in this act, and in the event that the sums are not reasonably complied with and carried out by the grantee upon written request by the Secretary of the Interior it is made the duty of the Attorney General, in the name of the United States, to commence all necessary suits or proceedings in the proper court having jurisdiction thereof for the purpose of enforcing and carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the city of San Diego is authorized to assign all its rights, powers, and privileges under this act to any public water district formed under the laws of California.

SEC. 6. That this act is a grant upon certain express conditions specifically set forth herein, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation, or for municipal or other uses or any vested rights acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior and the city of San Diego in carrying out the provisions of this act shall proceed in conformity with the laws of said State.

SEC. 7. That the grantee shall file with the Secretary of the Interior, within six months after the approval of this act, its acceptance of the terms and conditions of this grant.

And to amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting to the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes."

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It seems that that submits an entirely new bill. Will the Senator briefly state what changes were made by the House?

Mr. PITTMAN. The only change is that in the Senate bill an easement was granted to the city of San Diego over certain Government lands. The House felt that they should convey the title instead so that it might be subject to taxation. That is the only change.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN OKLAHOMA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) providing that one term of the United States District Court for the Eastern Judicial District of Oklahoma shall be held annually at Hugo, Okla., which was, on page 1, line 8, after the word "act" to insert "Provided, That suitable quarters for holding said court shall be furnished without expense to the Government."

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

H. R. 11368. An act to authorize the Secretary of Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for a certain described tract of land;

H. R. 13034. An act to validate and confirm certain erroneously allowed entries in the State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 13350. An act to add certain lands to the Yellowstone National Park.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 19, in the total for maintenance of Red, Black, Ouachita, and other rivers in Arkansas and Louisiana, to strike out "$315,000" and insert "$335,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Will not the Chair let us vote on these amendments? I do not want to take time on them, but I simply want to vote against them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no objection, but it has been the custom when no one raises his voice to state that the amendment is agreed to without objection.

Mr. KENYON. I raise my voice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 23, after the words "Bear Creek," to strike out "$17,000" and insert "$35,000," so as to make the clause read:

Yazoo River and tributaries, Miss.: For maintenance, including Yazoo, Tallahatchie, Coldwater, and Big Sunflower Rivers, Tchula Lake, Steele, and Washington Bayous, Lake Washington, and Bear Creek, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 11, to insert:

Mississippi River: For the removal of snags and wrecks from the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri River, and from Old and Atchafalaya Rivers, in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers in his annual report for 1918, $50,000, in addition to amounts otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice, following that item, that the House inserted:

Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis, Minn.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $250,000.

I suppose the $50,000, as is stated, is to be expended below the mouth of the Missouri River, and the other appropriation is to be expended above the mouth of the Missouri River. Is there any request on the part of the engineers for this $50,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state to the Senator from Utah that that is the case. This item was inserted:

For the removal of snags and wrecks from the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri River—

And the other item is to cover the maintenance above. The Chief of Engineers, through Gen. Taylor, appeared before the committee and urged this appropriation. Gen. Taylor said it was necessary in order to properly maintain and take care of that project.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator tell the Senate when the last appropriation was made for this purpose?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not say as to that. It is recommended in the report of the Chief of Engineers of 1918. The engineers appeared before the committee and urged that this appropriation be made. I do not know when the last appropriation was made.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the question because I wanted to know whether this had been the policy in the past or whether this was a new appropriation.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state to the Senator from Utah that this has been the policy. If he will turn to page 1161 of the Report of the Engineers, he will see that there has been a continuous appropriation for this work, but that the appropriation is not sufficient. The engineer says it will leave a probable deficit of $50,000.

The engineer appeared before the committee and urged that an additional $50,000 be given as a permanent appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. There is, then, already an unexpended balance?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; there is a permanent annual appropriation for this work of $100,000, which the engineer said would not be sufficient this year. His statement will be found on page 1161 of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 20, line 4, after the words "Mississippi River," to strike out "Completing" and insert "Continuing improvement, $10,000; completing"; and in line 7, after "$6,000," to insert "; in all, $16,000," so as to make the clause read:

Mississippi River between St. Paul and Minneapolis, and between Brainerd and Grand Rapids, Mississippi and Leech Rivers, and reservoirs at headwaters of Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $10,000; completing improvement of Minneapolis Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1512, Sixty-third Congress, third session, $6,000; in all, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 14, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $3,000; completing"; and in line 17, after the words "first session," to strike out "$2,750" and insert "$5,000; in all $8,000," so as to make the clause read:

St. Croix River, Wis. and Minn.; Minnesota River, Minn.; Lake Traverse, Minn. and S. Dak.; Red River of the North, Minn. and N. Dak.; Warroad Harbor and River, Baudette Harbor and River, Zippel Bay, and Lake of the Woods, Minn.: For maintenance, $3,000; completing improvement of Baudette Harbor and River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 109, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $5,000; in all, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 22, after "$400,000," to insert:

Provided, That operations shall be conducted with a view to making the work already undertaken secure against destruction, should Congress hereafter fail to make further appropriations.

So as to make the clause read:

Missouri River: For maintenance and continuing improvement with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City, Kans., from the upper end of Quindaro Bend, and the mouth of the river, $400,000: Provided, That operations shall be conducted with a view to making the work already undertaken secure against destruction, should Congress hereafter fail to make further appropriations; for maintenance between Kansas City and Sioux City, $10,000; in all, $410,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] asked to be sent for when that amendment came up. I have sent for him, and he will be here in a moment or two.

Mr. REED. I should be glad on that account to pass the matter over, except for the fact that I have two committees, of one of which I am chairman, which are now in session. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin can be gotten in.

Mr. KENYON. As I stated, the Senator has been sent for and will be here in a moment. I suggest that we might go on to the Ohio River proposition, so as not to cause any delay.

Mr. REED. Let this be passed over temporarily, but I should like to take it up within the next few moments, for I can not remain in the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. If it will hasten the consideration of the amendment by calling for a quorum, I shall be glad to do so, and have the subject considered at the present time.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. KENYON. The same situation exists as to the next item, with reference to the Tennessee River. It might expedite matters to call for a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it would; and so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Smoot
Brandegee	Kellogg	Poindexter	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Pollock	Sterling
Colt	King	Pomerene	Sutherland
Culberson	Kirby	Ransdell	Thomas
Cummins	Knox	Reed	Townsend
Dillingham	Lenroot	Robinson	Trammell
Fletcher	McCumber	Saulsbury	Underwood
France	McKellar	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gay	McNary	Sheppard	Walsh
Gore	Moses	Sherman	Williams
Hale	New	Simmons

Mr. MCNARY. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] on official business of the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] in attendance upon a committee of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] on account of official business. I should like the announcement to stand for the day. They, as well as myself, have been engaged in attendance upon a committee which is conducting hearings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending amendment is the amendment beginning in line 23, on page 20.

Mr. REED. I ask that the amendment be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That operations shall be conducted with a view to making the work already undertaken secure against destruction, should Congress hereafter fail to make further appropriations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am a member of the Commerce Committee, but at the time this part of the bill was reached I was absolutely compelled to be in service upon other committees, and I could not therefore be present. I was greatly surprised to find the bill reported with this amendment, and I ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes while I try to explain why this amendment should not be adopted.

The Missouri River improvement was adopted as a plan of complete improvement in order to make that river navigable from Kansas City to the mouth. The amount estimated as being necessary to complete the improvement was $20,000,000. This plan, which was duly formulated after an exhaustive examination by the engineers of the Government, was finally submitted to Congress, according to my best recollection, about 16 years ago; and a number of years ago the entire project was accepted as a project, and every appropriation made subsequently has been in pursuance of that plan, and has been made with a view to the completion of the plan; and every bit of work done on this river has been done, not with reference to the best use that can be made of the money for the purpose of protecting particular banks or particular points but for the purpose of carrying through a completed scheme of river improvement, so that the stream would be made thoroughly navigable from Kansas City to the mouth.

In pursuance of that plan the engineers adopted the scheme of beginning at Kansas City and of working down the stream, so that as their work progressed each part would protect the other and so that the entire job could be completed in the most economical manner possible.

Mr. President, there was opposition to the improvement of this river of the bitterest character almost from the first. It was led by the then distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. Burton, who succeeded at one time in having the entire project reopened for examination. About three years ago that reexamination was made and a board of engineers, I think some 8 or 10 in number, were summoned by Gen. Black, the Chief of Engineers. They sat at Kansas City, took evidence, examined the project from the inception, and made a report in which they reapproved the project, and in which they stated, in substance, that it was one of the few projects in this country where an actual demonstration of the navigability of the stream was going on at the same time the improvements were being made.

Mr. President and Senators, the fact is that the people along this stream were so interested in its improvement and in navigation thereon that, in advance of any improvement by the Government, they raised by private subscription, as I now recall, approximately a million and a half dollars and put that into a line of boats. They had their boats ready before the Government had its river ready; and, with their boats, they have been ahead of the river work from that day to this. If the Government had kept up its work as fast as it should have kept it up, the river would now be navigable by boats that would make a splendid profit. As matters stand, the river has been navigated consistently and persistently and at a very slight loss, although this boat line was compelled to undergo the tremendous disadvantage of passing over several bars, which ought to have been removed, and which, if they had been removed, would have enabled each boat to have carried two or three times the load it was able to carry over these shallows.

This boat line is in existence to-day. The only thing that has happened to it is, when the Government concluded during the war that it was necessary to carry freights upon the Mississippi River, and to do so at once, at the demand of the Secretary of War, and because their boats were practically to be commandeered and taken from them, they turned over to the organization that is navigating the Mississippi River, for war purposes, the best of their boats, because that commission found that these boats that were being used on the Missouri River were the best river boats there were in the United States. They took them for that purpose; and the money they have received has been set aside in a fund to purchase new boats.

On top of that I wish to submit just one other thing. We are at the close of a great war. It is a time when everybody feels that there may be a slackage in work; it is a time when we have been asking for, and I believe did appropriate, $200,000,000 for roads, in the Senate, did we not?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes.

Mr. REED. While we are appropriating $200,000,000 for one class of highways, it is proposed by this amendment at least to threaten, if not to destroy, the scheme of navigation upon the great inland rivers.

If this war has demonstrated anything to an exact certainty, it is that our country can not rely upon railroads alone for the purpose of carrying its freights. If anything in the world ought to be understood by the American people to-day, it is that it is necessary to have more than one way of carrying freights in time of heavy demand; and no man can tell the day when this demand again will come.

There is another lesson that this war ought to have taught people who think, and that is that waterways, properly developed, are of the highest importance for the defense of the country as well as for its economic development. What was it that made it possible for Germany to devote all the rolling stock of all of her roads to the purpose of moving troops back and forth and for purposes devoted exclusively to war? What was it but the fact that every stream in Germany has been canalized, and that every one of them was bearing upon its surface an almost immeasurable tonnage that supplied the armies at the front and kept the industries moving in the interior?

Mr. President, this is a strange time to come in here asking that one of the great approved and reapproved and still reapproved waterways of this country should be assassinated, for that is what this amendment means. It is only three years since we had a reexamination. It is only three years since that reexamination was a complete vindication of this river.

Now, Mr. President, what does this amendment say? Understand, we have an approved plan, a plan that was approved years ago, and which contemplates the improvement of the Missouri from Kansas City to the mouth, and the total that that is to cost has been estimated, and engineers have now for more than 10 years been proceeding along that plan. With the work about two-fifths to one-half done, it is now proposed that something shall be done looking toward the stoppage of that work, and it is found here in this amendment:

Provided, That operations shall be conducted with a view to making the work already undertaken secure against destruction, should Congress hereafter fail to make further appropriations.

That language either means something or it means nothing. I take it that the distinguished Senator who drew it meant something; and he generally knows how to say what he means. He meant to say that instead of going on with this work as they have—proceeding down the river from bend to bend, putting in revetments and protections to the banks, and deepening the channel—they shall change the character of that work, and that they shall do the work, not with reference to the complete navigability of that stream, not with reference to finishing this job, but in some other and different way. That other and different way means that they shall abandon the present plan and scheme and that they shall do the work in some manner so that it will stay differently than it would stay if it were done in the ordinary manner. The implication is also that Congress shall abandon this work.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say at this moment. I ask that this amendment be rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I hope that the committee amendment will be adopted by the Senate. I am very sure that if Senators will carefully examine the merits of the amendment it will be adopted.

All that this amendment does is to provide that the unexpended appropriations that have already been made, together with the appropriation made in this bill, constituting a total of $1,200,000, shall be so expended that if, a year from now, Congress shall be of the opinion that this work ought not to be proceeded with further, it will be free to decide that question upon its merits.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. REED. If that is all that the Senator means, why did he not stick this amendment on to all the other appropriations?

Mr. LENROOT. For the reason—I shall be very frank with the Senator—for the reason that the Government ought not to be conducting an experiment of this kind at a cost of $20,000,000 when an exactly similar experiment, only more favorable to commerce, is now being carried on and with the building of boats by the Government it will soon be demonstrated whether it will be a success or not.

Mr. REED. Then why does not the experiment of which the Senator speaks apply to every other stream? Why does it apply just to the Missouri River? I suppose the experiment to which the Senator refers is the Mississippi River?

Mr. LENROOT. It is.

Mr. REED. If the experiment of the Mississippi River applies to the Missouri River, and this qualification ought to be put on the Missouri appropriation, why should it not be put on the Ohio River appropriation? Why should it not be put on the appropriation for every tributary of the Mississippi? Why should it not be put on the appropriation of every other river?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. Because, Mr. President—I am very frank to answer the Senator—take the Ohio River: In the Ohio River we are constructing locks and dams; and it would be entirely feasible for Congress at any time to say, if in its wisdom it believed that course should be taken, that no more locks and dams should be constructed upon the Ohio River. But in the case of the Missouri River we have this situation, and we have it now in this bill—that if Congress should be of the opinion that it is a waste of money to attempt to go on with this project, it would be said and is said now, that "we have expended the money in such a way that we must make this appropriation so as to conserve and save the expenditures that we have already made."

All that this amendment will require will be that this $1,200,000 shall be so expended in improvements that at the end of next year Congress will be free to say whether or not this improvement shall go on, without the claim being made that "here is a lot of half-constructed work, and we must go on with another appropriation to finish this particular construction."

The Senator inquired why this amendment should not be placed upon every bill. Well, in the case of most of the bills in which we make appropriations, so far as rivers are concerned, we are providing moderate sums for a local commerce. In the case of the Mississippi River and in the case of the Missouri River no one will say that these appropriations, running into millions and millions of dollars, can be justified upon the ground of a merely local commerce. I know very well that when this Missouri River project was adopted it was based largely upon the commerce that would utilize this river between Kansas City and St. Louis, and we had statements made of the tonnage between Kansas City and St. Louis and the tonnage that would go over this river. Mr. President, it seems to me that anyone must see, even without making a close study of the commerce, that the Missouri River never can be a commercial project, so far as through commerce is concerned from East to West, upon the theory that we will utilize the river from Kansas City to St. Louis. That means that the wheat from Kansas and Nebraska will be loaded upon cars to Kansas City, there transferred into boats, from boats transferred to cars at St. Louis, and then on to the Atlantic coast. This can not be justified upon any such theory of commerce, because there never will be any commerce of that character, for the reason that water transportation can not compete with railroad transportation for a distance of only a few hundred miles where you have to bring the commodity to the water by rail and then take the commodity at the end of the water route and ship it by rail again. It is a great deal cheaper, and is bound to be cheaper, in such cases as that to make a through rail route.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. Now, what is possible, and the only possibility that will justify this expenditure of $20,000,000 for the Missouri River, is the possibility that in connection with the Mississippi River it will furnish a through route for traffic to New Orleans and on beyond for the grain and the products of the Middle West to cross the ocean. That experiment is now being conducted upon the Mississippi River, and so far the experiment upon the Mississippi River has been a failure.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. Now I yield.

Mr. REED. I challenge the last statement, but I will take it up at the proper time. I want to ask the Senator now if he happens to know that the navigation upon the Missouri River has been conducted at a 20 per cent saving to the shipper and, as I have stated heretofore, a very slight net loss to the company, even under the adverse conditions now existing, namely, that there are bars in this river the removal of which would enable the boats to carry two or three times the loads they have been able to carry and to run at seasons of the year when they have been absolutely compelled to tie to the bank? That is the proof of the fact, not the fancy or theory of Senators.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, now, let us see. The Senator states that the commerce on the Missouri River has been conducted at a slight loss. Will the Senator state how much commerce has been conducted on the Missouri River at that loss?

Mr. REED. No; I can not state it out of my mind. I can find the figures. They have been put in the RECORD a dozen times.

Mr. LENROOT. I have them before me.

Mr. REED. But it was a very substantial commerce; and if they could carry a small commerce at a small loss, they could certainly carry a larger volume of commerce at a smaller proportional net loss. The project has gone far enough so that the engineers who have examined it have reported, in view of the experience—not the fancy of people, but the experience of fact—that the project is entirely and absolutely feasible as a project by itself, wholly divorced from the Mississippi River or any other project.

Mr. LENROOT. I can state to the Senator what the commerce has been upon the Missouri River during the past number of years. Although we have expended altogether upon this river so far $16,914,000, according to the report of the engineers, with that expenditure of $16,000,000 upon the Missouri River we had in 1917, according to the engineers' reports, a commerce of 217,000 tons. The commerce, the report says, consisted principally of sand and gravel, grain, manufactured steel, miscellaneous merchandise, live stock, and so forth. It cost us to maintain that river for this 217,000 tons, most of which was sand and gravel, $467,000, or about $2.50 a ton. Why, Mr. President, so far as the saving to those shippers upon this stretch of the Missouri River is concerned, the Government could have better afforded to have paid the entire railroad freight rate upon that commerce, and, in fact, could almost have bought the commodity and paid for it out of the sum that it expended for maintenance alone, saying nothing of improvement.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire of the Senator, if his views are to be accepted with regard to this project, would it not be necessary or advisable to cut out this appropriation altogether? But if we are to leave any appropriation in the bill, does the Senator think it would be economical to expend that money with a view of stopping the work? Would it not be more economical to expend the money with a view to the completion of the project rather than with a view to stopping it?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not, Mr. President; for the reason that we shall still have to expend $12,200,000 to complete this project if we go on with it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator would not complete the project at all, would it not be better to stop it now?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wisconsin is not prepared to say that this project should not go on. Based upon present information, I would say yes; but I am free to admit that the Mississippi River experiment may be a success, and if it shall be a success I am willing that the Missouri River experiment shall go on; but, pending the conclusion of that experiment, the work that is being conducted on the Missouri River ought to be so conducted that if the experiment is a failure we shall not be compelled to go on making additional millions of appropriations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that raises the very issue I should like to get the attention of the Senate to—as to these improvements on the Missouri River. I do not suppose the Senator ever saw the Missouri River?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, many times. I have never traveled on the Missouri River. I did not know there was any opportunity for anyone to travel on the Missouri River.

Mr. REED. I expect the Senator knows as much about the Missouri as I know about the harbors of the Great Lakes that are along his State.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the Senator ever visited them?

Mr. REED. I have been in a few of them on a steamboat, and I know that I know so little about it that I would not set my judgment up against the Senator's in regard to them. I will state the way the improvement is being made on the Missouri River. Let me say as a preliminary the Missouri is a very rapid-running stream. It runs through a rich alluvial soil that in times of freshet is easily melted down into the stream. That is what gives the stream its color and makes it known as the Big Muddy. It is, in fact, a bigger stream than the Mississippi River above the confluence of the Mississippi and the Missouri.

This rapid-running stream, in time of high water, wherever there is a bend strikes the bank, and the process of erosion will begin at that point. The result is that great quantities of earth will be carried down into the stream and form bars at some other point below. So the method adopted by the Government engineers has been to protect the bank at the curves. Each one of these projects is a complete thing in itself; but they have started on a system beginning at the upper end so that the erosion and the formation of bars can be prevented as the work goes along.

Now, what change does the Senator propose in that? Each one of these projects is a project by itself. Each one consists of the work of putting in revetments. Each piece of revetment is made as complete as possible and stands by itself.

I can not understand what the Senator has in mind, and yet he does have in mind something. I know him well enough to know that he does not dream idle dreams.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad to answer the Senator. I want to say to the Senator that in the discussion of this matter before the committee Gen. Taylor of the Board of Engineers was present, and he was asked with reference to the manner of expenditure of these appropriations and whether it would be feasible to so expend them that they would conserve the work already done so that hereafter Congress would be free to pass upon the question of further improvement upon its merits without the destruction or deterioration of work already undertaken. Gen. Taylor stated that it would be entirely feasible to do so.

Now, if the Senator says that that is the method of construction, if the Senator says that hereafter no claim will be made that we must go on with further appropriations to protect improvements already made, then I do not see why he objects to this amendment, because if that be true the amendment can not injure in the slightest degree.

All that I have in mind is to permit Congress at its next session or at a subsequent session to decide on the merits whether this improvement should continue, nothing more. The Senator will then have his opportunity to present his reasons why it should continue, and I may then vote with him for its continuation, but if the improvement is not to continue it is merely good business to say that the money shall be so expended as to conserve to the fullest extent the work that has already been done.

The Senator has spoken of other reports that have been made upon this project. Of course, the Senator is familiar with the fact that a few years ago the district engineer, Col. Deakyne, I believe it was, made an adverse report on this project. The Senator is familiar with the fact that that adverse report stirred up all the central and southern waterway associations for fear that if that adverse report was finally agreed to it might mean a stoppage of other waterway improvements. The Senator is familiar, as I am familiar, with the pressure that was brought to bear to secure a reversal of Col. Deakyne's report, and a reversal was secured. It was based in very large part upon the assurance of the organization of the corporation the Senator has spoken of that it would put boats upon the river that would reduce rates 20 per cent.

Here again, the board in making this favorable report proceeded upon the theory that a waterway improvement was justified if it resulted in the reduction of freight rates. Computations were made as to how much the rail rates could be reduced from Kansas City to St. Louis if the Missouri River was improved, although the commerce might not be carried on the Missouri River. The Senator is familiar with that. Extensive computations were made. No one ever seems to have thought of the proposition that if a point having potential water competition, by reason of that fact, secured a rate that is less than cost, other shippers upon that railroad will have to make it up, because the railroad is entitled to a reasonable return upon its investment, and especially now, Mr. President, when there is talk about reducing railroad rates, when Congress is called upon this year to take hundreds of millions of dollars out of the Treasury to pay to the railroads, because a fair return is not being made according to the report of the Director General upon them to-day.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator, then, opposed to water transportation because it is cheaper?

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator wants water transportation wherever it is more economical to transport freight by water than by rail.

Mr. REED. And you find that condition in your country pretty generally?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir; we do upon the Great Lakes; and upon the Great Lakes I may say that that has been so fully demonstrated by the figures of commerce carried upon them that there can be no question. But make a comparison with the Mississippi River. How much commerce is carried on the Mississippi River from Kansas City down to the mouth of the Ohio, where we have the entire stretch of the Mississippi River tributary, where they have a 6-foot channel to-day? If the Missouri River is to be successful, ought there not to be a tremendous commerce from St. Louis down the Mississippi now? How much is there?

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know anything about the engineering problems here, but if this amendment obtains would the work which is being done there still be subject to destruction? In fact, would this amendment change the manner of doing the work in any way? I can not on the face of it see why the engineers should do the work so that a year or two or three years would destroy it.

Mr. LENROOT. Let this be said: If the engineers go upon the theory that Congress is to appropriate—the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—I think the original plan was $2,000,000 a year, was it not?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. If they should assume that $2,000,000 a year was to be appropriated, I can readily see how they might go on with some projects and have them half completed at the end of each year.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, I do not know as to that; but it does not seem to me that the engineers with this appropriation of $400,000 would so conduct the work that it would be destroyed.

Mr. LENROOT. They have $1,200,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, $1,200,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree that good business would seem to require that as fast as the work proceeds it should be protected.

Mr. KELLOGG. If that is the case—and that ought to be easily determined by the engineers—the only effect of this amendment is to rather throw a doubt upon the matter, and it would really have no beneficial effect.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it is not so.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish the Senator would explain that.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad to explain. For instance, if in this bill we attempt to cut off the appropriation of $400,000 with the amount that is necessary for maintenance—that is, about half a million dollars—it was stated there would have to be some work left in such a condition that it would deteriorate and would not be protected.

This simply means that if this amendment is adopted it gives notice to the Engineer Department that as fast as they proceed with improvements, under the appropriations made each year, they will protect the improvements made that year so that if appropriations are not subsequently made there will not be a loss of the improvements.

Now, with reference to the Mississippi River, which as I said is completed for a 6-foot depth from St. Louis to New Orleans, and we have such commerce as there is from the head of the Mississippi down. How much commerce is transported over that complete stretch of river? I have the figures here for the year 1917. The entire commerce amounted to only 293,000 tons. How can you expect more than that upon the Missouri River when it is completed, unless we shall have a tremendous increase in the commerce upon the Mississippi River?

Now, what did the district engineer, Col. Deakyne, say with reference to this Missouri River project?

Mr. REED. Why should the Senator take up the time with reading the report of a district engineer who was reversed after a full hearing by 9 or 10 engineers, and whose inefficiency on that river was such that he was removed and sent to another place?

Mr. LENROOT. I am only going to quote one paragraph from that report.

Mr. REED. Let me state before I leave the subject, with the Senator's permission, I do not mean to say anything harsh of Col. Deakyne. He may be a very good engineer. All I mean to say is that he seemed to be entirely out of harmony with that project from the first. He had a good many difficulties. He made this report and a hearing was had before these engineers, and it did seem to me that Col. Deakyne was in a most pitiful condition. Shortly after that he was sent to some other part of the country and a man sent in there by Col. Black—Gen. Black now—with instructions to carry the project through.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to that I can well imagine that Col. Deakyne might have found such a condition as the Senator suggests; because gathering from the report of what was done in that section of the country, following Col. Deakyne's report, I do not believe that it would have been very safe for him, at least he would not have received a very warm or cordial welcome in Kansas City or anywhere else in that region.

Mr. REED. What does the Senator mean by that statement?

Mr. LENROOT. I mean that there was so much resentment against his report, and I do not say that it was not honest resentment; that it was very unpleasant for Col. Deakyne, and would have been unpleasant for any engineer in any section of the country who would make such a report as he made.

Mr. REED. That simply argues that the people who live out along this river and who knew the value of this project did not feel very good when somebody proposed to destroy it.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand.

Mr. REED. The Senator might be equally unpopular if he succeeded in his amendment. But if the Senator means that there was anything improper——

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. REED. That there was anything in this hearing——

Mr. LENROOT. Not in the least.

Mr. REED. Anything done at this hearing except to present sworn testimony of figures and arguments—I say, if the Senator does not mean anything else than that——

Mr. LENROOT. Of course I did not mean that anyone had indulged in anything improper.

Mr. REED. The Senator said something about pressure being brought. I never saw the judges of a supreme court conduct themselves in a more dignified manner than this great commission of engineers. They came there, and they were not entertained, they were not carried around. They met like a court. They listened to the evidence and they went away without signifying their decision to anybody. When they got away, they wrote their opinion, and it stands to-day as a complete vindication of this river project, as complete a vindication as any river or any waterway in the country has.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, there was nothing in what I said that indicated any reflection upon those who sought to secure a reversal of Col. Deakyne's report. Certainly I never believed for a moment that any improper influence was exercised; but it is true, as the Senator well knows, that upon Col. Deakyne making that report an appeal was made by Kansas City interests to the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. The Senator knows that a great conference was held at which there were something like 200 delegates present, representing 10 States, protesting against Col. Deakyne's report.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. REED. If the representatives of 10 States directly affected assembled to protest against this report, does not the Senator think he has a good deal of temerity to ask that a thing so universally demanded as that should be assassinated?

Mr. LENROOT. No; because the Senator is aware that the issue which was made was not alone the Missouri River in that conference, but that if the Missouri River improvement should stop it was claimed that it meant the stopping of all other waterway improvements in those sections. So they made a common interest and a common purpose not based upon the merits of the Missouri River alone, but upon the theory that they must secure a reversal of Col. Deakyne's report or projects in other States, having no connection with the Missouri River, would also fail.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell us where this meeting was held?

Mr. LENROOT. As I recollect, it was at Kansas City, Mo., with some 200 delegates present. That is my recollection.

Mr. REED. The only meeting that I know of was a meeting composed almost entirely of people directly affected along the Missouri River. The Missouri River was discussed; its importance was discussed. Anything that was said about other rivers was merely incidental, and the Senator is simply misinformed about that meeting. But suppose there was such a meeting, how does that affect the decision of this Board of Engineers? They did not decide this question on the meeting. They decided it on the evidence with reference to the Missouri River.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator and myself were members of the Board of Engineers and such a meeting was held and a protest was raised, I think we would be human enough to be somewhat influenced by such a meeting. Perhaps the Senator would not.

Mr. REED. I wish that the Senator would be as human then as a Senator as he said he would be as an engineer.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in reply that I am very human. If I was not, I would move to strike out this appropriation entirely; but I am only asking now that the matter be left in the future so that it may be decided upon its merits; and it may be, as I have already said, that I will then vote with the Senator for the full development of this project.

But I am going to read, although the Senator does not seem to like it, one paragraph of the report of Col. Deakyne, in which he says:

It should be noted that this stretch of river—

Speaking of the Mississippi River—

is so situated as to draw commerce from the improved stretches of the Mississippi above and below it as well as from the Ohio and Missouri. It seems to me doubtful whether the Missouri with the same depth will carry any more. The Missouri River traffic would have to increase sevenfold to equal that on the above section of the Mississippi, and would have to increase a hundredfold to reach a figure commensurate with the cost of the work.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator, who has been very generous, just let me point out what I think I am justified in saying demonstrates the idiocy of that paragraph just read—and I dislike to use so harsh a term. Here is a river in process of improvement. At first it is not navigable at all, but after a part of the bars have been removed boats of light draft can move over the river and at very great expense. The river is not yet improved, yet you find this engineer complaining because a river that is not yet fit for navigation does not carry as much navigation as a river that has been completely improved! He must be a lineal descendant of the old lady who said to her daughter that she might go out to swim, but she must not go near the water.

The proposition that the feasibility of a river for carrying transportation, for carrying goods, is to be determined before it can carry goods at all, or when it can only carry half of the goods, is so foolish that an engineer who signs a report like that marks himself as unfit to be an engineer. It is like saying to a railroad that is built halfway to a town, "You are not going to be worthy of improvement because you have not yet hauled any freight." Of course it has not hauled any freight if it is only half built; of course it has not hauled any freight if the bridges are out; and of course if it has only an old track that will carry only light engines and light cars you can not determine the value of that railroad project under those conditions. You must wait until you have put it in a state so that it has a chance to carry cars.

Now, let me say, if the Senator will pardon me, this criticism comes at a very strange time, when the Government is putting boats upon the lower Mississippi, and when the Government is putting boats upon the upper Mississippi, when it has already been determined that there shall be transportation upon the Mississippi River; and after that fact is determined and settled the very fact that he says certainly will greatly increase the value of the Mississippi River itself and its practicability—it is now proposed to put a monkey wrench into the proceedings and stop the work on the Missouri River.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Missouri has made many statements. In the first place, I fail to see how the Senator can say that the adoption of this amendment would be putting a monkey wrench into the machinery. Does the Senator say that if this amendment is adopted the next Congress will be prevented from making a similar or a larger appropriation?

Mr. REED. The Senator from Wisconsin has asked me a question——

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. REED. The Senator answered it a few minutes ago. He said that if this appropriation were made, if this work proceeded in the way it has in the past, when the next Congress meets there may be some work partially completed, and that he wants that not to be possible. That is the way I understood the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not understand the Senator's statement.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator to say that, if his amendment was not adopted, if the work was done in the way that it has been done in the past, the engineers would proceed with a piece of work; that they might have that work half done out of this appropriation, and therefore it would be necessary, as he says, for the next Congress to continue it. The Senator wants to make that impossible; in other words, he wants to say to these engineers, "You shall no longer build as though you were going to complete a great $20,000,000 project and finish this work from Kansas City to the mouth of the river, but you shall proceed by piecemeal, closing each job as you get to it." That is what I call putting a monkey wrench into the plan for the improvement of that river; and it is very plain that that is the purpose of it.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator may so think. However, I think that the judgment of the engineers is better than either his or mine upon that proposition. Their judgment is that this work can be so conducted and so conserved that Congress will be able, if we are not going to appropriate $2,000,000 each year, to pass upon the question upon its merits at any annual period. That is all there is to the proposition. There is no suggestion of any change in the project. The only suggestion by this amendment is that the Board of Engineers shall not assume that there will be $2,000,000 appropriated each year, and nothing more.

The Senator also did a very great injustice to Col. Deakyne in what he has just said concerning his report. Col. Deakyne was talking about the improved Mississippi River and the commerce upon it. He stated in this report that it was not fair to believe that the Missouri River when improved would carry any larger commerce than was then being carried upon the Mississippi River improved. That is all that Col. Deakyne stated; and he stated, if that were true, the improvement of the Missouri River was not justified.

Mr. REED. Since the Senator calls attention to that phase of it again, the foolishness of the report is evident. He was talking about a stretch of the river between St. Louis, Mo., and Cairo—a small town at one end and a large city at the other, with railroads that had been engaged in a cutthroat competition with the boats on the river and that had put them out of business by methods that would no longer be tolerated. It had no relation whatever, or but very slight relation, to the Missouri River situation. There was a commercial town of 500,000 people at one end of the improvement, and at the other was a city of approximately 800,000 people. The traffic between those two cities was such as to make an entirely different condition than the traffic between little Cairo, Ill., and the city of St. Louis. Every man familiar with shipping knew that, and therefore knew that the engineers' illustration was an unfair illustration, a false illustration, and an illustration that was unworthy of a Government engineer.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, let us see how fair that illustration was. The Senator from Missouri would have the Senate believe that this involved commerce only between two cities—St. Louis and Cairo. The Senator does not mean that.

Mr. REED. Yes; I do.

Mr. LENROOT. It involved all of the commerce of St. Louis; every city on the Mississippi River below and New Orleans at the mouth of it; and more than that, the commerce of Europe across the ocean.

Mr. REED. Why, Mr. President, the language of the engineer refers to that stretch of the river between Cairo and St. Louis.

Mr. LENROOT. And it covers all of the commerce, wherever destined, carried over that stretch of river, whether it was destined to Cairo or whether it was destined to New Orleans, does it not?

Mr. REED. It would cover through commerce, but everybody knows that there was not any through commerce, and this engineer knew it——

Mr. LENROOT. Why not?

Mr. REED. The railroad had cut the rate until it had destroyed river transportation, and having reduced river transportation to that condition, it had in some instances actually bought out the river lines and discontinued them. That was the reason.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. REED. Everybody knew that but Deakyne.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the Senator has that condition changed?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Since when?

Mr. REED. It has changed since the Government has got possession.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from New York here the other day made the statement, and it was not contradicted, that upon the Government taking over the railroads, instead of the Erie Canal transporting commerce at 20 per cent less than the railroad rate, the Railroad Administration raised the rate, and exacted the same charge upon the Erie Canal that they did upon the railroads.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator ought not to change the venue from Missouri to New York on a question of this kind. I was not here when the statement was made, and it has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator can not assume that the Railroad Administration was applying one rule to one portion of the country and another rule to another portion.

Mr. REED. I am not assuming anything. I am talking about what I know. I am saying that the Railroad Administration is now running the railroads and at the same time is running the boats on the lower Mississippi. I am saying that they have compelled the railroads, or at least, the order was to be issued, and I think it has been issued, to interchange traffic, a thing that the railroads in the past have refused to do; and I think that the rate charged on the boats is about 20 per cent less than the rate charged on the railroad, the difference, of course, being a difference in service.

Now, stating the matter broadly, this I know to be the present plan of the present Railroad Administration, so far as the Mississippi River is concerned: The proposition is that they propose to coordinate the water service and the railroad service; that, so long as the Government controls both, they shall be run not one to cut the throat of the other, but each to do its service to the people of the country, which is the proper theory, I think, the Senator will agree.

Mr. LENROOT. I am thoroughly in accord with that idea.

Mr. REED. I am very sure that, even if the roads go back to private ownership, they will never be permitted again to destroy by cutthroat competition the traffic upon rivers; and I do not believe the Senator would ever vote for a bill that would permit that sort of condition.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator knows that that has been a subject before Congress for a great many years. So far as the Senator who is now speaking is concerned, he has done what he could to secure a remedy for the condition that has prevailed with reference to water competition. I thoroughly agree with the Senator that water competition should be utilized wherever it is most economical, and the railroads should not be permitted to make a rate that is lower than cost, thus destroying water competition. Now and then we have made little dabs at that situation with reference to the Great Lakes. A few years ago we adopted a provision—the Senator remembers it—that if the railroads made a low rate, so as to compete with water navigation during the summer, they could not raise that rate during the winter. It was not put in that language, but that was the effect of it. Congress, however, has never made any serious attempt to remedy the condition; and I am not sure that Congress is going to make any serious attempt in that direction, much as I think it ought to do so; and so long as these conditions do exist we had better wait, or at least be in a position to stop dumping millions and millions of dollars into waterways that will never be used.

We had better first do our part to see that waterways shall have a fair chance before we appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars, when under present conditions they have no chance at all.

The Senator made a very unfortunate illustration in referring to Col. Deakyne's report when he used the illustration of a railroad. A fair comparison between the Missouri and the Mississippi situation and the railroad situation would be this: Supposing that here is a railroad in first-class condition built between two cities, and there is no commerce upon that railroad, and then the Government proposes to build another railroad between two other cities where like conditions prevail. Those who hold the opinion that I do would simply say that until commerce develops upon the railroad that is already built, showing that the proposed railroad will be successful, we ought not to go on with the second railroad. That is all there is to the proposition.

So far as this amendment is concerned, there is nothing in the amendment that will estop either the Senator from asking or the Congress from continuing to make appropriations upon the Missouri River; but I think the Senator will agree that if the Mississippi River experiment is a failure the Missouri River experiment can not be a success, and we ought not to be conducting two such enormously expensive experiments at the same time.

Mr. SPENCER obtained the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the roll be called; but the Chair is going to announce, adhering to a former ruling, that hereafter, unless business is done—and debate is not business—the roll will not be called every half hour.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Henderson	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Hitchcock	Nelson	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	New	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Norris	Sutherland
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pittman	Underwood
Fernald	King	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Wadsworth
France	Lenroot	Ransdell	Warren
Gay	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Hale	McKellar	Sherman	Williams
Harding	McLean	Shields	Wolcott
Hardwick	Martin, Ky.	Simmons

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who are in attendance upon a committee of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll-call There is a quorum present.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, there are two reasons why I fully agree with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that the amendment on page 20 ought to be rejected. It has nothing to do with dollars and cents; there is no appropriation to it; but there is a whisper in the language of the amendment looking to a future discontinuance of appropriations in connection with the Missouri River, for the amendment which the senior Senator from Missouri and I agree in opposing concludes with the words "should Congress hereafter fail to make further appropriations." That has to do with the Missouri River. It indicates a possibility of future disregard of this great river that is unthinkable.

It is both unfair and unwise to make an attack upon the great network of water transportation of which the Missouri and the Mississippi and the Ohio form the great interlocking highways. In 1910 Congress arranged for a commission to investigate into this matter—act of June 25, 1910. The report of that commission was made in 1911. It is published in House Document 1287, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 12, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, of this date, together with copy of report by a special board of engineer officers, dated November 29, 1910, on examination of the Missouri River with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, made in compliance with an item contained in the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910.

Very respectfully,

J. M. DICKINSON,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

APPENDIX.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, January 12, 1911.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith, for transmission to Congress, report dated November 29, 1910, by a special board of engineer officers, composed of Col. F. V. Abbot, Col. C. McD. Townsend, and Maj. Charles Keller, Corps of Engineers, made in compliance with the following item in the river and harbor act of June 25, 1910:

"Improving Missouri River, with a view to securing a permanent 6-foot channel between Kansas City and the mouth of the river, $1,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall appoint a board of three officers to further consider and report upon the most economical and desirable plan of securing such channel, in which report consideration shall be given to the subject of cooperation on the part of local interests in the work of said improvement: Provided further, That the report hereby authorized shall be submitted to Congress on or before the opening of its next regular session."

The special board made a trip on this river from Kansas City to the mouth to learn existing conditions and to observe in person the state and effect of previous improvement works. A public hearing was held at Kansas City after due notice to all those interested. The physical characteristics of the river are briefly stated, and a comprehensive discussion of the general principles that govern conditions in such streams is given, with a résumé of improvement practiced in other countries.

The special board reviews the past history of the improvement of Missouri River, begun in 1832, carried on after 1884 by the Missouri River Commission until the commission was abolished in 1902, and continued since that date under the Chief of Engineers. The appropriations for the entire river prior to the act of June 25, 1910, aggregate $12,279,618.69, of which about $7,000,000 has been expended below Kansas City.

In applying the general principles to this specific case, the special board concludes that, first, caving banks must be revetted and, in general, held and protected as found when reached in a systematic progress of the work. When the banks are revetted, sloughs and minor channels must be closed and the low-water flow concentrated, using low structures, thus leaving the minor channels still available for high-water flow. In connection with the protection of the caving banks, some of the bars opposite such banks may have to be held in place by inclined groins or spurs, consisting of low pile dikes of the standard type.

The special board recommends the use of the standard structures developed under the Missouri River Commission, with some modifications as to height of dikes and groins and distance between works on opposite shores. However, changes to other more efficient or economical types, should any be discovered, is not excluded. It is estimated that the work will cost $20,000,000, with $500,000 annually for maintenance and $60,000 additional per year for snagging, the latter expense, however, to decrease as the improvement work advances and the accumulation of snags is reduced.

In preparing the estimate of cost due consideration was given to the facts that at a number of localities revetments of the standard type, aggregating about 15 miles, had been built by private interests; also that the river runs along rocky bluffs for about 30 per cent of the distance below Kansas City. The board emphasizes strongly the absolute necessity of continuous and systematic work, beginning at points where the channel is securely held, and state that though to insure proper progress it may become necessary to begin work at a number of points, the first general work should begin at Kansas City and proceed downstream.

After investigating the question of local operation the special board recommends that the work of channel improvement be completely disassociated from all work of levee construction and that local cooperation be not demanded, since there is no prospect of any cooperation which would materially reduce the cost of the work to the United States. It was developed at the public hearing held November 14, 1910, that the owners of the bottom lands along the river were merely awaiting the protection of the banks before beginning the construction of levees on an extensive scale.

This report has been referred, as required by law, to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for consideration, and the board concurs generally in the plan proposed; believing, however, that the project and methods should be sufficiently elastic to permit of modification from time to time as experience gained in the conduct of the work indicates. The board is further of the opinion that proper prosecution of this work will require appropriations for construction amounting to about $2,000,000 a year, and further appropriations for maintenance increasing from $60,000 to a final estimate of about $500,000 a year.

I concur with the special board and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors in the opinion that the plan proposed, subject to modification as work progresses, is the most economical and desirable one for securing a permanent 6-foot channel in the Missouri River from Kansas City to the mouth, and I recommend its adoption at the estimated cost of $20,000,000 plus the cost of maintenance, ultimately reaching $500,000 annually, with an additional cost for snagging not exceeding $60,000 annually. I further recommend that the appropriations be in amounts not less than $2,000,000 a year for original work, $60,000 annually for snagging, and such amount increasing to $500,000 annually, as the progress of the work requires, for proper maintenance.

I concur with the board that the levee construction should be left to the riparian owners, and that as a general rule other cooperation will be impracticable; but I consider that along city fronts or at other special localities where large interests are involved, cooperation in the way of bank protection may properly be required.

The item of law calling for this report provides that the report "be submitted to Congress on or before the opening of its next regular session." In view, however, of the limited time available after the passage of the act and the character and scope of the investigation, it has been a physical impossibility to comply with the requirement.

Very respectfully,
W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. SPENCER. In that report of the engineers the utility of the Missouri River as a navigable highway for transportation was unanimously admitted, and the recognition of $20,000,000 as being necessary for its improvement was adopted; Congress in the succeeding year passed an appropriation of $2,000,000, which was the annual appropriation of the agreed-upon policy. To now attack that scheme, which has been running for so many years, and on which $6,103,223.40 has already been spent, is unfair and unwise.

The other reason why I think the senior Senator from Missouri is right and that the amendment ought to be stricken out is because the amendment is entirely unnecessary. It attempts to restrict the engineers in their work. It seeks to tell them how they shall conduct their improvement of the Missouri River. With the amendment out of the bill, the engineers are entirely free to act as they have been acting for the highest efficiency and best use of the river; and this is precisely what ought to be continued. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 15, to insert:

Tennessee River, Tenn., Ala., and Ky.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to prosecute the work of improvement on the existing project for the section between Chattanooga and Browns Island in accordance with the recommendation in report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, that the condition precedent requiring local interests to assume and pay all claims for flowage damages be waived.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment may go over temporarily, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has been called out of the Chamber.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the request?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to pass it over. Let us have a statement about it. We can proceed until the Senator from Iowa returns.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, then, I will talk until the Senator from Iowa can come in, if the Senator thinks he is going to gain any time by that, unless the Senator from Tennessee wants to make a statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not desire to make one at the present time. I did want to know what the inquiry of the Senator from Utah was.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is particularly familiar with this item. I know that the Senator from Alabama has other engagements, which it is very important for him to meet, and I suggest that he state the reasons for the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I shall be glad to hear the statement of the Senator now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think I can make a brief statement about this matter that will satisfy the Senator from Utah or any other Senator who may want light on the subject.

Five years ago, in the Sixty-third Congress, an appropriation was made for the improvement of this stretch of the Tennessee River, and $500,000 was appropriated for the purpose. At that time, as at all times, there were a lot of gentlemen who had a water-power project in view, and their view of it was all that they had; but they said, "If you will give us permission to build one high dam at this place so as to develop water power, we shall be glad to avail ourselves of that privilege." Therefore a provision was inserted in the bill that the Secretary of War, at his discretion, might build one high dam or two low dams, the high dam being constructed for the purpose of developing a water-power site and producing water power.

When an investigation was made it developed that in order to build a dam sufficiently high to produce water power the flowage damages would be $572,000; and when that fact developed these gentlemen who had in mind the possibility of developing a water-power site or dam flung up their hands and never have been heard from since, and never will be again, because even a dam 30 feet high would not produce sufficient power to justify a flowage damage to start with of $572,000. So the matter has been resting.

The board of engineers made a different investigation and a different report, and recommended this amendment, upon the idea that when they do begin the development they will construct two low dams, the cost of which will be something less, perhaps, than the cost of the high dam, and the flowage damages about $20,000. This amendment was inserted at their suggestion. Gen. Taylor appeared before the committee, and he drafted this amendment and thought that it ought to be adopted, and therefore the committee very promptly inserted it in the bill.

That is a short, concise statement of the facts. I think the Senate ought to consent to the amendment remaining in the bill. I shall be very glad to answer any questions I can which any Senator desires to ask me with reference to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, upon the face of this amendment there is no appropriation provided for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. An appropriation of $500,000 was made five years ago, but it has never been taken advantage of. The money is still in the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. In the year 1915 there was an amount of $501,000 set aside for the Tennessee River from the lump sum appropriated; but this amendment, if it is adopted, means that there will be a future expenditure on the project of $600,000, in round numbers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How does the Senator get that idea?

Mr. SMOOT. I get it from the reports that are made.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The annual river and harbor appropriation bill passed in the Sixty-third Congress carried, as I have stated, an appropriation of $500,000, the Secretary of War having the discretion to construct one high dam or two low dams. That is the provision of the bill. As I have stated, it has been demonstrated that no company, no corporation, no individual, will undertake to build a power dam there, and of course the Government will not do so, with a flowage damage of $570,000 to begin with. Therefore this provision simply authorizes the Secretary of War to construct two low dams, or, in his discretion, to construct two low dams and abandon the project for the high dam.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not disagree in substance with the statement which has just been made by the Senator from Alabama. What I did say is that this amendment, though it carries no appropriation, means the expenditure from the Treasury of the United States of something like $600,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the point I am making. Where does the Senator get the $600,000 from?

Mr. SMOOT. From the appropriation that has already been made for the project.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is $500,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I do know, as I have stated, under the act of 1915, which carried a lump-sum appropriation of $30,000,000, there was set aside by the Secretary of War for the Tennessee River project $501,000. The total for the Sixty-third Congress is reported to be $724,000, I will say to the Senator, according to the report I hold in my hand. Now, there may be some of that appropriation expended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator mean to say that now, under existing law, there is $724,000?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say what the balance is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But none of it has been expended. There has been no expenditure at all.

Mr. SMOOT. It shows that there is $724,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am glad to know that. It is better than I thought, then. The appropriation has already been made for this work.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no appropriation carried in this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. That was my opening statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is in the form of a previous allotment by the Secretary of War, is it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no appropriation whatever carried in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no appropriation carried in this bill, as I stated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. But I said that the passage of it means that work would be begun that would cost, in round numbers, $600,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Perhaps that is true, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of a previous appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the department undertakes the work and prosecutes it, in the end it will cost about that much money.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that I have anything further to say about the project, nor would it amount to anything if I did object to the wording of this amendment. The money is already appropriated and will be expended. The Senator from Iowa wanted to express himself on the Tennessee River project itself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that this money has been available for five years and none of it has yet been expended, and I can not tell when it will be; perhaps never. I do not know. It is a matter of discretion.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has just entered the Chamber, and he says he does not believe there is any use in spending any time on the Tennessee River or any other river, as long as the Oklawaha River appropriation was adopted; so I shall have nothing more to say about it.

Mr. KENYON. There is no use in discussing any river.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 2, to insert:

Ohio River: Continuing improvement by the construction of locks and dams with a view to securing a navigable depth of 9 feet, $3,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. I understand there is an unexpended balance for the Ohio River; that, with something like $9,000,000 and contracts amounting to some $3,000,000, there is left $6,000,000 for the Ohio River project. If that is true, and the chairman of the committee probably knows, what is the use of the appropriation of $3,000,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. The entire matter is explained on page 11 of the report in a communication from the Chief of Engineers to the Commerce Committee setting out precisely the reason for this amendment. The Chief of Engineers says:

2. The estimates for funds to be carried for river and harbor improvements in the pending bill were submitted to Congress before the armistice was signed, and at that time the estimates were scaled down on account of the existing war conditions. In this scaling down, consideration was given to the amounts available, and wherever such amounts appeared to be sufficient to carry on the work at even a reduced rate estimates were cut accordingly. It appeared that both the Ohio and Allegheny Rivers works could proceed at a fair rate of progress without additional appropriation, and no data which warranted me in asking for the inclusion of the above amounts in the pending bill were received before the bill was passed by the House of Representatives; but from data which have been received within a few days, it appears that these amounts are necessary in order that the above improvements can be properly prosecuted.

3. It now appears that the funds available for the Ohio River will be all obligated by contract, or allotted to locks and dams being constructed by day labor, before the end of the present fiscal year, making it impracticable, with the funds heretofore appropriated, to take up any new work before late in 1920. This will result in loss of at least one year's time in the completion of the Ohio River project, and possibly the loss of two years' time. The condition of this improvement is now such that it is desirable to prosecute it as rapidly as possible, in order that advantage of the money that has already been spent may be obtained in the near future. Briefly, all of the locks and dams from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, except Dams Nos. 30, 32, 34, and 36, have been completed or are under construction. Below Cincinnati, Dams Nos. 39, 41, 43, and 48 are under construction. It is most important at the present time to fully complete the improvement from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, and without the additional appropriation herein asked for the completion of this stretch of the river will be delayed at least one and possibly two years. Tabular statements showing the condition of the locks and dams on the Ohio River are herewith.

That is all with reference to the Ohio River. Then he speaks further with reference to the Allegheny River, and attached to the letter is a detailed statement with reference to all the locks and dams. If the Senator will just refer to the report on pages 11 and 12 and subsequent pages, he will find that the Chief of Engineers gives the whole statement in reference to the progress of the work on these locks and dams. It was on the strong recommendation of the Chief of Engineers as embodied in this letter that the committee saw fit to insert the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. What is the balance on hand?

Mr. HARDING. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, the engineer made a statement to the committee. There is a discrepancy between the amount on hand at this time and the report as given to the committee. An account of the amount of expenditures shows between five and a half and six million dollars on hand. The engineers asked to have this amendment inserted, because that is only sufficient to carry on the work during the year 1919, and they thought they would like to have this provision made in case there should be a failure of the river and harbor bill next year, so that they may continue the work along during the next year.

Mr. KENYON. So the purpose of this appropriation is in case there should be a failure of the river and harbor bill next year?

Mr. HARDING. That is the main object.

Mr. KENYON. The money is not needed for this year.

Mr. HARDING. No; it is not needed. As the Senator is doubtless aware, the Ohio River improvement contemplates an expenditure of something like $20,000,000 yet to be made—it may be $24,000,000—and the 9-foot channel covers a distance of something like 980 miles. The work is constantly going on, and the engineers felt that they would like to have the assurance on the part of Congress that this work would be hastened to completion.

Mr. KENYON. I am familiar with the project, and I risk the prediction that it will all be worthless when it is done.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator from Iowa may be correct, but he will admit that if there is an interior waterway project susceptible of being made worth while the Ohio River certainly is one of that sort.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that the report shows the amount estimated to complete the improvement is $23,265,488, and that the outstanding liabilities and contract obligations are $3,587,320. It is by reason of having incurred obligations and let contracts that the available funds will not be sufficient to carry on the work for the period desired.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course, if we are to spend money with no regard to the amount of commerce that is developed through the expenditure of Government money I know of no better river to spend it upon than the Ohio. But I want to call attention to the fact that with a continued loss in commerce from year to year, if the work costs in proportion to what it has so far over the 200 miles of the Ohio River the cost will average over $86,000 a mile, and that is rather an expensive channel for commerce to travel over.

However, I take it for granted that it is not a question of return upon the investment. That idea has gone glimmering long ago. I predict now that before the Government stops spending money upon the Mississippi River it will amount to more than it would cost the Government to build a double-track railroad line upon both sides of the river the whole length of the river, and the interest upon the amount that has and will be spent upon the Mississippi River would pay the operation of said railroad lines and deliver the commerce without cost to the people along the Mississippi River and then save money to the Government.

That will be the result if the work as mapped out and as contemplated is carried into effect. But I notice even in the lower Mississippi the amount of money expended on the thousand dollars will average a little over $100,000 a mile already, and they have not touched the project we speak of.

So we must set aside the idea that the expenditure of money upon the rivers of the country is based upon what we are going to receive in return from them, based upon whether it is a financial project worthy of spending Government money on or not.

I have not anything further to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 5, to insert:

Allegheny River, Pa.: For maintenance of open-channel work, $8,000; continuing improvement by construction of locks and dams, $1,000,000; in all, $1,008,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 17, after the words "first session," to strike out "$24,000; completing" and insert "$33,000"; in line 18, before the word "improvement," to insert "for" and, in line 21, after the words "in all," to strike out "$221,000" and insert "$230,000," so as to make the clause read:

Grand Marais, Marquette, Marquette Bay, and Ontonagon Harbors, and Keweenaw Waterway, Mich.; Ashland and Port Wing Harbors, Wis.; Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minn. and Wis.; Agate Bay and Grand Marais Harbors, Minn.: For maintenance, $59,000; completing improvement of Duluth-Superior Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1018, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $33,000; for improvement of Keweenaw Waterway at Princess Point in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 835, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $138,000; in all, $230,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 2, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$38,000; completing" and insert "$80,000"; in the same line, before the word "improvement," to insert "for"; and in line 5, after the words "in all," to strike out "$71,000" and insert "$113,000," so as to make the clause read:

Manistique Harbor, Mich.; Menominee, Oconto, Green Bay, Algoma, Kewaunee, Two Rivers, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, Port Washington, Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, and Waukegan Harbors, Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, and Fox River, Wis.: For maintenance, $80,000; for improvement of Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1382, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $33,000; in all, $113,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 10, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$110,000; completing" and insert "$140,000"; in the same line, before the word "improvement," to insert "for"; and in line 13, after the words "in all," to strike out "$148,170" and insert "$178,170," so as to read:

Chicago and Calumet Harbors, Chicago and Illinois Rivers, Ill.; Calumet River, Ill. and Ind.; and Indiana and Michigan City Harbors, Ind.: For maintenance, $140,000; for improvement of Calumet Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 237, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $38,170; in all, $178,170.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 9, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$42,700" and insert "$104,500," so as to make the clause read:

St. Joseph Harbor and River, Saugatuck Harbor and Kalamazoo River, South Haven, Holland, Grand Haven, Muskegon, White Lake, Pentwater, Ludington, Manistee, Portage Lake, Arcadia, Frankfort, Charlevoix, and Petoskey Harbors, and Grand River, Mich.: For maintenance, $104,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 11, before the word "and," to strike out "Duluth" and insert "Duluth-Superior," so as to make the clause read:

Ship channel connecting waters of the Great Lakes between Chicago, Duluth-Superior, and Buffalo, including St. Marys River, St. Clair River, channels in Lake St. Clair and Detroit River, Mich.: Completing improvement of Grosse Pointe Channel, Lake St. Clair, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 188, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $94,000; for improvement of Livingstone Channel, Detroit River, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 322, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $750,000; in all, $844,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 24, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $5,000; completing," and in line 5, after the word "improvement," to insert "in all, $72,500," so as to make the clause read:

Mackinac, Cheboygan, Rogers City, Alpena, Harbor Beach, and Monroe Harbors, Saginaw, Black, Clinton, and Rouge Rivers, Mich.: For maintenance, $5,000; completing improvement of Alpena Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 830, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $67,500: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any lands required for the purpose of this improvement; in all, $72,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 8, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; in line 13, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; in line 19, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; in line 20, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; and in line 23, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Toledo, Port Clinton, Sandusky, Huron, Vermilion, Lorain, Cleveland, Fairport, Ashtabula, and Conneaut Harbors, Ohio: For maintenance, $55,000; for improvement of Sandusky Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 982, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $181,000; for improvement of Huron Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 5, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $34,500: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any lands required for the purpose of this improvement; for improvement of Lorain Harbor, $20,000; for improvement of Fairport Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 206, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $238,500; for improvement of Ashtabula Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 997, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $83,000; in all, $612,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 7, before the word "maintenance," to strike out "For" and insert "Continuing improvement and for"; in the same line, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$31,000" and insert "$156,000"; in line 10, after the words "first session," to strike out "$132,000" and insert "$145,000"; and, in line 13, after the words "in all," to strike out "$189,400" and insert "$327,400," so as to make the clause read:

Erie Harbor, Pa.; Dunkirk and Buffalo Harbors, Black Rock Channel and Tonawanda Harbor, and Niagara River, N. Y.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $156,000; completing improvement of Buffalo Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1139, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $145,000; completing improvement of Buffalo Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1004, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, $26,400; in all, $327,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 19, after the words "second session," to strike out "$38,000" and insert "$50,000"; in line 22, after the words "first session," to strike out "$54,000" and insert "$72,000"; and, in line 23, after the words "in all," to strike out "$111,500" and insert "$141,500," so as to make the clause read:

Olcott, Charlotte, Pultneyville, Great Sodus Bay, Little Sodus Bay, Oswego, Cape Vincent, and Ogdensburg Harbors, N. Y.: For maintenance, $19,500; completing improvement at Oswego Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 570, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, $50,000; completing improvement of Ogdensburg Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 663, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $72,000; in all, $141,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 9, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," and, in line 12, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to read:

San Francisco, Oakland, Richmond, Monterey, and Humboldt Harbors, Redwood and Petaluma Creeks, Napa River, San Pablo Bay, Mare Island Strait, and Suisun Channel, Cal.: For maintenance, $124,800; for maintenance of Oakland Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1131, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $12,000; for improvement of Suisun Channel in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 986, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $64,500; for improvement of San Rafael Creek in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 801, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $27,300.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is an omission there. In lines 3 and 4, on page 27, after the words "Mare Island Strait," I move to insert the words "Suisun Bay," so as to read:

Mare Island Strait, Suisun Bay, and Suisun Channel, Cal.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move the same amendment in line 9. In line 9, before the word "Suisun," I move to insert the words "Suisun Bay and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 10, before the word "maintenance," to strike out "For" and insert "Continuing improvement and for"; and in the same line, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$65,800" and insert "$222,000." so as to make the clause read:

Sacramento, Feather, San Joaquin, and Mokelumne Rivers, and Stockton and Mormon Channels (diverting canals), Cal.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $222,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 14, after the words "Coos Bay," to strike out "$74,000; completing" and insert "$121,000"; in the same line, before the word "improvement," to insert "for"; in line 18, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for"; and in line 25, after the words "in all," to strike out "$368,000" and insert "$415,000," so as to make the clause read:

Coquille, Coos, Siuslaw, and Yaquina Rivers, and Coos, Yaquina, Tillamook, and Nehalem Bays, Oreg.: For maintenance and continuing improvement of channel over the bar at Coos Bay, $121,000; for improvement of Coquille Bar and Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No 207, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $64,000; for improvement of Coos Bay in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 325, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $130,000; for improvement of Yaquina Bay and Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 109, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $100,000; in all, $415,000. The project for the improvement of Tillamook Bay, Oreg., is hereby modified in accordance with the report submitted in House Document 730, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 6, before the word "maintenance," to strike out "For" and insert "Continuing improvement and for," and in the same line, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$554,000" and insert "$595,000," so as to make the clause read:

Columbia and lower Willamette Rivers below Vancouver, Wash., and Portland, Oreg., and mouth of Columbia River, Oreg. and Wash.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $595,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 10, after the word "maintenance," to strike out "$43,100" and insert "$71,100," and in line 14, after the words "in all," to strike out "$44,900" and insert "$71,900," so as to make the clause read:

Willamette River above Portland and at Willamette Falls, Yamhill River and Clatskanie River from the mouth to Clatskanie, Oreg.; Cowlitz, Lewis, and Grays Rivers, and Skamokawa Creek, Wash.: For maintenance, $70,100; completing improvement of Skamokawa Creek in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 111, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $1,800; in all, $71,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 3, after the word "point," to strike out "; completing" and insert ": Provided further, That local interests shall furnish a place of deposit for the dredged material and the bulkheads necessary to confine such material;"; in line 6, before the word "improvement," to insert "for"; in line 9, after "$30,000," to insert: "Provided, That before work on this project is commenced, the report shall be referred to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for review as to whether the project should be modified to meet existing conditions or whether conditions of local cooperation should be imposed"; in line 17, after the word "document," to strike out "$56,000; completing" and insert "$89,000"; in line 18, before the word "improvement," to insert "for"; and, in line 22, after the words "in all," to strike out "$165,000" and insert "$238,000," so as to make the clause read:

Puget Sound and its tributary waters, Olympia, Seattle, Anacortes, Port Gamble, Tacoma, and Bellingham Harbors, Lake Washington Ship Canal, Snohomish and Skagit Rivers, Swinomish Slough, waterway connecting Port Townsend Bay and Oak Bay, Columbia River between Wenatchee and Kettle Falls, Wash.: For maintenance, $27,000; for maintenance of East and West Waterways, Seattle Harbor, in accordance with the report printed in Senate Document No. 313, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $40,000; for the maintenance of Duwamish Waterway, Seattle Harbor, to a depth of 20 feet and to a width of 150 feet at mean low water as far south as Eighth Avenue South Bridge, $40,000: Provided, That no part of said appropriation shall be available for said purpose until said improvements shall be completed to project dimensions to said point: Provided further, That local interests shall furnish a place of deposit for the dredged material and the bulkheads necessary to confine such material; for improvement of Skagit River in accordance with the report printed in House Document No. 935, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $30,000: Provided, That before work on this project is commenced, the report shall be referred to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for review as to whether the project shall be modified to meet existing conditions or whether conditions of local cooperation should be imposed; completing improvement of Anacortes Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1117, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $89,000; for improvement of Port Gamble Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 851, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $12,000; in all, $238,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment.

I am not going to discuss the league of nations this morning but hope to do so later. I rise for the purpose of putting into the RECORD an opinion touching the constitutionality of any act of Congress or of the Senate that would make the United States a part of the league of nations under the plan proposed by President Wilson, which I hope may be helpful to Senators in reaching a correct conclusion of this most remarkable proposition and extraordinary document.

The proposed organization of a league of nations carries us into unexplored regions of diplomacy. It presents a problem far-reaching in its effect, the solution of which will test the capacity of the American people for self-government and the preservation of American institutions. It marks the most vital period in the life of this Nation up to date and calls for the highest order of courage, manhood, and statesmanship. I hope the measure may receive ripe, mature, full, and complete discussion. I have no sympathy whatever with the suggestion made by President Wilson that the discussion by the Senate should be postponed until he comes home. A most unusual and regrettable request the President has made. If President Wilson had thought more of America, her people, her institutions, and cared less for the triumph of his own personal ideas and efforts he would have said to the American people, "discuss the measure," "vivisect it," "analyze it," "tear it to pieces," and find out its every possible defect, if defects there be in the plan, because, Mr. President, it is only by the attrition of ideas and friction of suggestions that the truth, the eternal truth, shall be evolved. No man possesses a corner on all the wisdom and patriotism of this Republic; all men are fallible, even the Presidency of the United States is not hedged about with divine omniscience. To ask the Congress to withhold its criticism of the league of nations until the President returns from Europe is on a par with the wisdom and prudence of the advice given to a man who is starting out on a long journey through a wilderness, beset by savages and wild beasts, to first supply himself with a sufficient amount of chloroform to soothe his senses and to drive out of his soul all apprehensions of fear. Eternal vigilance is the price of the liberty of the American citizen and the permanency of American institutions. Never in the history of this Republic was it quite so necessary for every man, woman, and child capable of understanding the genius and principles of our Government to be on guard and sound the note of warning when danger is ahead.

I hope, however, the criticism and discussion of the President's proposed league of nations may be free of all partisan bias and the spirit of faultfinding. Let the truth be the end sought and the good of the American people the thing to be subserved. I am heartily in favor of the purpose which the President seeks to subserve in the league of nations. I want peace, world peace; I want reason and justice and righteousness to rule throughout the world. I wish we could stop so much talk about war and armaments. But, Mr. President, I would not take the step that the President is asking the American people to take without invoking the assistance, criticism, and the fullest investigation by all the people before taking this important step. The gravity and seriousness of this movement is so overwhelming a wise, patriotic, and prudent man would hesitate, even though he knew he were right. The man who will yield to the mesmeric power of the President's personality or be swayed by presidential patronage in the settlement of this great question is not fit to enjoy the advantages of citizenship, much less hold office in this Republic.

I am going to ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a very able discussion of the constitutionality of certain phases of the league of nations by Hon. Hannis Taylor, of this city. Dr. Taylor is a great lawyer of accurate and profound information. He is an erudite historian, an accomplished man of letters, a scholar, and a statesman with a vision, and of ripe experience. I hope the views expressed in this paper may throw some light on the great question at issue and be of help to Senators and the American people in reaching a correct conclusion.

I am not going to have it read, but I ask permission to have it inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1919.

Hon. JAMES K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: You have requested me to express my opinion upon the following question of constitutional law: Has the Government of the United States the power to make treaties, as an attribute of sovereignty independent of and superior to the Constitution? Or, to state the matter in another form, is not the treaty-making power limited by its very nature to a certain clearly defined area within which it must be exercised in subordination to all the fundamental principles and limitations which inhere in the instrument as a whole?

In the Washington Post of Sunday, the 16th, there appeared as a leader an editorial entitled "The people must decide," which is so lucid, so exhaustive, so convincing that I have resolved to adopt it as an expression of my own views. I hereby tender it to you as such, without the slightest idea as to the authorship of it:

"THE PEOPLE MUST DECIDE.

"The power exercised by the Government of the United States was delegated to it by the States and by the people. This power is not transferable. It can not be increased or diminished by any action of the Government nor increased or diminished by any action of the States or the people, except by a method provided by the States and the people when they granted the power. The individuals temporarily executing the power by virtue of their offices have nothing to do with the origin, transfer, or modification of the power. Their oaths of office require them to execute the duties imposed upon them, and no more.

"The United States Government, not being the originator of its powers, is not authorized to confer with foreign governments as to any changes that individuals may deem desirable in the nature and scope of America's national powers. It does not matter whether these individuals are in or out of office, whether they are influential with the people or whether they believe they are qualified to make improvements in the relations between the people, the States, and the Federal Government.

"The treaty-making power of the United States can not, of course, amend the Constitution which creates the treaty-making power. Within the scope of its authority the treaty-making power is supreme, but its power is limited, just as all other powers of the Government are limited. The treaty-making power is in continuous operation, as it were, and so is Congress. A treaty made yesterday may be amended or repealed by a law made to-day or by a new treaty made to-morrow. A treaty is the supreme law of the land, but any other law passed by Congress may annul the treaty.

"Under the Constitution Congress has certain powers which it can not enlarge, diminish, modify, or ignore. It has the power to declare war, which includes the power to avoid or terminate war. It can not delegate this power to the President, the Supreme Court, a league of nations, or any other agency, nor can it return this power to the States and the people. Nor can the States or the people make war except by virtue of a declaration by Congress. Some Presidents have been accused of making war without a declaration by Congress, but there are important distinctions between casual armed collisions and a state of war.

"No treaty can be made by which the United States Government can agree to substitute the decision of a league of nations for Congress in declaring a state of war. Nor can any treaty pass the Supreme Court which attempts to create an obligation upon Congress to declare war when called upon to do so by an international organization. Nor can any treaty pass muster which obliges Congress to accept the mandate of another authority regarding the size and composition of the United States Army, the Navy, the fortifications or the armaments of the United States or its possessions on land or sea. Nor can any treaty be put into effect which would compel the United States to send an Army overseas against the will of Congress. Nor can any treaty be made which deprives the United States of the right to preserve its neutrality in case of war between two or more foreign nations, for denial of this right would be equivalent to denial of the right to declare war. Nor can any treaty be made under which, upon the outbreak of foreign war, the United States would be compelled to suspend its commerce with any State against the will of Congress.

"If the violent assumption should be made that a treaty could be ratified, providing for some of these transfers of national power, and that it might be operative in spite of its conflict with the Constitution, it should be remembered that any Congress, by a majority vote, may set aside such a treaty at any time. It is quite imaginable that an Executive might endeavor to comply with a treaty obligating the Nation to make war, suspend commerce, or abandon neutrality, and that a Congress, wholly disagreeing with the Executive, might enact legislation making the treaty a scrap of paper. But it is not to be presumed that any unconstitutional treaty will ever be ratified by the Senate, or that any Executive will ever attempt to deny or ignore the exclusive power of Congress to declare war, raise an Army and Navy, borrow money, and regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations.

"The question whether the United States shall join a league of nations must go to the people for decision. The President and the Senate, as the treaty-making power, have no power to amend the Constitution. Even though the Senate should unanimously ratify a treaty transferring the war-making power to a league of nations, still the old Constitution would stand unimpaired, and all their effort would be vain, unless the people should modify their will as expressed in the organic law that controls all parts of the Government."

All sound constitutional lawyers regard as preposterous the contention that this Government has the power to make treaties as an attribute of sovereignty independent of and superior to the Constitution itself. In disposing of that unplausible heresy, Mr. Justice Brewer, one of the most eminent of our jurists, said, in Turner v. Williams (194 U. S., 279): "While undoubtedly the United States as a nation has all the powers which were in any nation, Congress is not authorized in all things to act for the Nation, and too little effect has been given to the 10th article of the amendments to the Constitution. * * * The powers the people have given to the General Government are named in the Constitution, and all not there named, either expressly or by implication, are reserved to the people and can be exercised only by them or upon further grant from them." In speaking the final word on this vital subject the same justice said in Kansas and Colorado (206 U. S., 89): "But the proposition that there are legislative powers affecting the Nation as a whole which belong to, although not expressed in, the grant of powers, is in direct conflict with the doctrine that this is a Government of enumerated powers. That this is such a Government clearly appears from the Constitution independently of the amendments, for otherwise there would be an instrument granting certain specific things made operative to grant other and distinct things. This natural construction of the original body of the Constitution is made absolutely certain by the tenth amendment. This amendment, which was seemingly adopted with prescience of just such contention as the present, discloses the widespread fear that the National Government might, under the pressure of a supposed general welfare, attempt to exercise powers which had not been granted. With equal determination the framers intended that no such assumption should ever find justification in the organic act, and that if in the future further powers seemed necessary they should be granted by the people in the manner they had provided for amending that act."

Judge Cooley, in his "Principles of Constitutional Law," page 117, says: "The Constitution imposes no restriction upon this power (treaty-making power), but it is subject to the implied restriction that nothing can be done under it which changes the Constitution of the country or robs a department of the Government or any of the States of its constitutional authoriy." John Randolph Tucker in his very able work on the Constitution (Vol. II, p. 725), says: "A treaty therefore can not take away essential liberties secured by the Constitution of the people. A treaty can not bind the United States to do what the Constitution forbids them to do. We suggest a further limitation. A treaty can not compel any department of the Government to do what the Constitution submits to its exclusive and absolute will. On these questions the true canon of construction, that the treaty-making power in its seeming absoluteness and unconditional extent, is confronted with equally absolute and unconditional authority vested in the judiciary." Alexander Hamilton (Works IV, p. 342), writing to Gen. Washington, July 9, 1795, says: "A treaty can not be made which alters the Constitution of the country or which infringes any express exceptions to the power of the Constitution of the United States." Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Mason, minister to France, September 11, 1854, said: "The Constitution is to prevail over a treaty where the provisions of the one come in conflict with the other. It would be difficult to find a reputable lawyer in this country who would not yield a ready assent to this proposition."

In the Cherokee Tobacco Case, Eleventh Wallace, 616, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It need hardly be said that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be valid if it be in violation of that instrument. This results from the nature and fundamental principles of our Government." And in Holden against Joy, Seventeenth Wallace, 243, the same court said, in speaking of the treaty-making power: "That the framers of the Constitution intended that it should extend to all those objects which in the intercourse of nations has usually been regarded as the proper subjects of negotiation and treaty, if not inconsistent with the nature of our Government and the relation between the States and the United States." In Downes against Bidwell, One hundred and eighty-second United States, page 370, Chief Justice Fuller said: "Indeed a treaty which undertook to take away what the Constitution secured, or to enlarge the Federal jurisdiction would be simply void. * * * And it certainly can not be admitted that the power of Congress to levy and collect taxes and duties can be curtailed by an arrangement made with a foreign nation by the President and two-thirds of a quorum of the Senate. See Tucker on the Constitution, sections 354, 356." In the same case Justice White, page 312, said: "The theory as to the treaty-making power, upon which the argument which has just been commented upon rests, it is now proposed to be shown, is refuted by the history of the Government from the beginning * * *. The effect of the principle asserted is equally antagonistic, not only to the express provisions but to the spirit of the Constitution in other respects. Thus, if it be true that the treaty-making power has the authority which is asserted, what becomes of that branch of Congress which is peculiarly the representative of the people of the United States, and what is left of the functions of that body under the Constitution * * *. If the treaty-making power can absolutely, without the consent of Congress, incorporate territory, and if that power may not insert conditions against incorporation, it must follow that the treaty-making power is endowed by the Constitution with the utmost unlimited right, susceptible of destroying every other provision of the Constitution; that is, it may wreck our institutions."

But nothing can be found so directly applicable to this unprecedented instrument, called a league of nations, which proposes to deprive this great Federal Commonwealth of its sovereign powers and subject it to the yoke of a foreign and novel dominion as this golden passage from Story's "Commentaries on the Constitution," section 1508, which seems to have been drafted in anticipation of the event. That famous jurist, whose lightest words are weighty, says in discussing the treaty-making power that: "Though the power is thus general and unrestricted, it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed, therefore, in subordination to it, and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and of paramount authority within its scope; and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other. A treaty to change the organization of the Government, or annihilate its sovereignty, to overturn its republican form, or to deprive it of its constitutional powers, would be void, because it would destroy what it was designed merely to fulfill, the will of the people."

In the light of these precedents the conclusion is irresistible that this stupendous instrument called a league of nations—to be incorporated into a treaty which, if adopted, will demand a surrender of the sovereignty of this Nation, the sacrifice of its independence, the abolition of the Monroe doctrine, and a recasting of the entire system of the Government of the United States—could never have been devised by anyone familiar with the basic principles of the American Constitution.

It is evidently the work of British jurists and statesmen who fancy that the President and the Senate, acting together, are endowed with all the omnipotence of the English Parliament, which can amend its constitution without any consultation with the people whatsoever. Fortunately, Mr. Frank H. Simonds, a warm friend of the proposed league, in a communication from Paris, which appeared in The Evening Star of the 11th instant, has relieved President Wilson of all responsibility for the authorship of this monstrous and un-American invention. Mr. Simonds says:

"It is essential to face the fact that, so far as President Wilson and his European expedition are concerned, the President came here with no definite or clear or coherent program for a league of nations. Certain ideas, certain phases, even certain principles, were expressed in various of his speeches, but only in the vaguest sort of way. He came here to plead his cause, but he did not come here prepared to present any working basis of an organization for a league of nations. In a very marked degree the President, then, came empty-handed. * * *

"British statesmen, like Lord Robert Cecil, like Gen. Smuts, like Mr. Asquith, had in recent times outlined specifically and definitely certain sketches of a machine to be called a league of nations.

"All these various tentative suggestions and proposals confronted Mr. Wilson on his arrival. It was supposed by many that he in his turn would present for his country the American view of what a league of nations should be. In point of fact he had no scheme, and a situation approaching paralysis resulted during a certain period of time.

"What was essential, so far as Mr. Wilson and those associated with him were concerned, was that the league of nations as it developed should in no respect do violence to the famous 14 points. But the 14 points were not at this end the basis for a league of nations or anything else.

"Thus the President's position in course of time developed rather into an inactive attitude. So far from proposing, he remained silent. His real contribution, it would seem, was to veto at various points where suggestions conflicted overnight with his principles as proclaimed in America.

"After a certain length of time, however, it became clear that if real progress was to be made it would be necessary to cease discussion of abstract principles and get down to actual construction of machinery, and at this point the President was helpless, and his associates in the American commission were useless, and it fell to the British logically and inevitably to begin the task of constructing some framework, and this is what has been going on for the last three weeks.

"The league of nations, to be anything in fact beyond an association of uncommitted powers, must be a superstate. It must be an international organization with power and authority over all international organizations, possessing more authority over various nations of the world than the British Parliament possesses over her self-governing Dominions."

And so in relieving President Wilson of all responsibility for the authorship of this intensely un-American creation, Mr. Simonds has disclosed the fact that the "framework" which has been constructed is the brain child of "British statesmen like Lord Robert Cecil, like Gen. Smuts, like Mr. Asquith," who contemplate an international organization "possessing more authority over various nations of the world than the British Parliament possesses over her self-governing dominions." Before the Senate permits this "Trojan horse" to be brought within our walls, it should certainly consider its pedigree; it should not close its eyes to the fact that the world-encircling sea power of the British Empire and its three allies, France, Italy, and Japan is concealed in its belly; that the control of the new machine is to be vested in the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States—4 foreign votes against our 1. We have not an ally in the world.

Very sincerely,

HANNIS TAYLOR.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at this point I should not like to interrupt the proceedings, and for obvious reasons I wish to avoid discussion of the question of the league of nations, but following the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], placing some appropriate matter in the RECORD, I ask at this time to have put in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of Sunday, the one marked, entitled "Mr. Wilson's Triumph." I ask to have it inserted without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"MR. WILSON'S TRIUMPH.

"Americans who regretted the President's decision to absent himself from the country in these days of domestic need and urgency, and The Times was one of those which regretted it, will not only cheerfully admit the greatness of his achievements at the Paris conference but will rejoice in their recognition of his now amply demonstrated fitness for the work he undertook. Mr. Wilson's presence at the conference has not been a cause of discord or of jealousy; it has not been resented. It was seen from the beginning that he went there not to dominate, as his critics said, but to unite the nations. He has been marvelously successful in bringing into agreement men who represented interests that seemed to be conflicting. His influence in this work has prevailed because all the other nations represented looked upon him as a wise and impartial friend, interested only in making justice and the welfare of peoples the basis of the decisions reached. His triumph in securing unanimous approvai of the league of nations constitution is one in which every American may take pride.

"Mr. Wilson has a dreadful way with his critics. He does not reply to them; he does worse. They rail at him as an idealist, a visionary, a man without practical objectives, or if he have them that they are impossible of acceptance; and they obligingly point out the things he ought to do. Mr. Wilson calmly continues his great labors and presently lays his critics flat and leaves them helpless either by doing the very things they had proposed and doing them in a manner better than they ever dreamed of, or else by attaining his ends in a way that robs their objections of every point. We are confident that Mr. Beck, for instance, must regret the violence of the language he used in his Lincoln Day address when he said that Mr. Wilson's foreign policy throughout 'has been a black stain of dishonor upon the American people'; that 'his principles have been a crazy patchwork of contradictions,' consistent only in one idea, that the war 'must end in a peace without victory.' If this be just criticism, then Mr. Wilson has as his accomplices in dishonoring the American people, in constructing 'his crazy patchwork of contradictions,' and in bringing the war to an end without victory, some 14 nations of the earth, including the greatest civilized nations. Such criticism recoils disastrously upon him who utters it. Not even the natural desire of a great political party to find or create 'issues' for the coming presidential election can give lodgment in the minds and hearts of the people to this estimate of Mr. Wilson's distinguished service.

"The day when the project of the covenant of peace was approved unanimously in Paris was one of the greatest in the world's history. The people of all the nations understand that; the people of America, with their horror of war, can not be fooled about it; they can not be misled into any small and narrow view of its momentous promise. In bringing the plan of the league into form and acceptance, Mr. Wilson has played a master rôle, every American feels that in his heart, every American understands that he brought great abilities, extraordinary qualities of tact and persuasion, and a profound understanding of the need of all the peoples to the performance of his task. The American people will be impatient of any petty or partisan obstruction put in the way of the acceptance of this covenant of the nations as their public system of law and justice."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 24, before the word "maintenance," to strike out "For" and insert "Continuing improvement and for"; in line 25, after the word "maintenance," to stike out "$10,000" and insert "$135,000"; on page 31, line 15, after the word "further," to strike out:

That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any lands required for the purposes of this improvement; in all, $354,300.

And insert:

That the Territory of Hawaii is authorized to condemn such strip of land, not less than 600 feet wide, fronting on the proposed wharf sites and extending from Huleia River northerly to the public road and the Wai Ko Nui Stream, and all rights of way and other lands required for the breakwater and construction work thereon as shall be approved by the Secretary of War; and no contract for work herein appropriated for shall be entered into until the Territory of Hawaii shall have commenced condemnation proceedings to acquire such lands and rights of way; and no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring or using such lands and rights of way: And provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to condemn a quarry site or sites, with rights of way thereto, the awards therefor to be paid out of the funds appropriated for this project; and the quarries when so acquired may be made available to any contractors for work on this project on terms to be fixed by the Secretary of War; in all, $479,300.

So as to make the clause read:

Honolulu, Kahului, Hilo, and Nawiliwili Harbors, Hawaii: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $135,000; completing improvement of Kahului Harbor, $94,300; for improvement of Nawiliwili Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 609, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $250,000: Provided, That work on the project herein adopted shall not be commenced until the Secretary of War is satisfied that railroad connections will be made within a reasonable time which will make the harbor of Nawiliwili accessible by land to the entire southern portion of the island: Provided further, That no contract for work herein appropriated for shall be entered into until the county of Kauai, or other agency, shall have deposited to the credit of the Secretary of War, in some bank in the Territory of Hawaii to be designated by him, the sum of $200,000, which sum shall be expended by the Secretary of War in the further prosecution of said work, in the same manner and in equal amounts as the sum herein appropriated: And provided further, That the Territory of Hawaii is authorized to condemn such strip of land, not less than 600 feet wide, fronting on the proposed wharf sites and extending from Huleia River northerly to the public road and the Wai Ko Nui Stream, and all rights of way and other lands required for the breakwater and construction work thereon as shall be approved by the Secretary of War; and no contract for work herein appropriated for shall be entered into until the Territory of Hawaii shall have commenced condemnation proceedings to acquire such lands and rights of way; and no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring or using such lands and rights of way: And provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to condemn a quarry site or sites, with rights of way thereto, the awards therefor to be paid out of the funds appropriated for this project; and the quarries when so acquired may be made available to any contractors for work on this project on terms to be fixed by the Secretary of War; in all $479,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 17, after the word "adequate," to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$500,000," so as to make the clause read:

Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works: For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation for which the funds specifically appropriated may not be adequate, $500,000: Provided, That the amount to be alloted to each work shall be determined by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 33, line 4, after the word "project," to strike out "unless, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, another allotment or division should be made of the same," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. Where separate works or items are consolidated herein and an aggregate amount is appropriated therefor, the amount so appropriated shall, unless otherwise expressed, be expended in securing the maintenance and improvement according to the respective projects adopted by Congress after giving due regard to the respective needs of traffic. The allotments to the respective works so consolidated shall be made by the Chief of Engineers as authorized by the Secretary of War. In case such works or items are consolidated and separate amounts are given to individual projects, the amounts so named shall be expended upon such separate project. Any balances remaining to the credit of the consolidated items shall be carried to the credit of the respective aggregate amounts appropriated for the consolidated items.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 9, to insert:

SEC. 3. That in all cases where the project for a work of river or harbor improvement, heretofore, herein, or hereafter authorized, provides for the construction or use of Government dredging plant, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, have the work done by contract if reasonable prices can be obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 15, to insert:

SEC. 4. That Little River, from Big Lake in Mississippi County to Marked Tree in Poinsett County, Ark., is hereby declared to be not a navigable waterway of the United States within the meaning of the laws enacted by Congress for the protection of such waterways: Provided, That this provision shall be null and void unless expressly approved by an act of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas within one year from the date of approval of this act.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to move to strike out the proviso in the proposed amendment.

There are some great drainage projects under way down in that part of the State of Arkansas, and they desire to use this river, which is not in fact navigable, for a spillway. If the proviso is left in, requiring the State of Arkansas to consent to this within one year, it may defeat the object of the bill and hold up the improvement. The Legislature of the State of Arkansas is about to adjourn, or it is feared that it may adjourn before this could be passed and agreed to. I suggest on that account that the proviso be stricken out. If any legislation is necessary on the part of the State to make it valid, of course it can not be done until that legislation is procured anyway. I therefore move that the proviso be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from Arkansas if he has any doubt in his mind that if the amendment is agreed to the Legislature of Arkansas would refuse to pass the legislation?

Mr. KIRBY. No; I understand not.

Mr. SMOOT. The sentiment, then, of the people of the State would be in conformity with the amendment, even though the proviso was left off?

Mr. KIRBY. That has been my information. I sent copies of the amendment to several people in different counties down there, and no one is objecting, and one or two men have come here and stated that it was very desirable to have this legislation.

The Senator from Florida, I understand, has no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. I understand the legislature, if it does not adjourn before the act here becomes complete, would consent to it anyhow, and if it does adjourn it could not be done and the law would be of no effect.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know but that it might be agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas to change one year to two years.

Mr. KIRBY. That was my idea at first. If the bill goes through while the legislature is in session, that might be done, but if it is not done until after the legislature adjourns, then the drainage project will not be proceeded with, although they have issued bonds and got the money.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the committee offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. At that point I desire to offer another committee amendment as section 5, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

Mr. SMOOT. As section 5 or to section 5?

Mr. FLETCHER. As section 5.

Mr. POMERENE. Are we to understand that this is to be substituted for section 5?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it is an additional section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to ascertain whether, in his judgment, any of the contracts for work on river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of materials, labor, and other unforseen conditions arising out of the war; and to ascertain and report what amounts, if any, in addition to those fixed by the terms of said contracts, should in justice and equity be paid to contractors for work performed between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, the date of the approval of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," on account of the increased cost of labor and materials and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war during that period: Provided, That in every case the amount so ascertained shall not exceed the actual loss sustained by the contractor in performing the work between the said dates: Provided further, That when such amount shall have been ascertained the Secretary of War shall transmit to Congress for consideration a statement or statements of all findings or determinations rendered by authority of this section, the amounts thereof, the names of contractors, and dates of contracts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment. No Senator has had an opportunity to study it or to realize to what extent it will reach. I desire to say to the Senator from Florida that I anticipate general legislation upon this very subject, and I hardly think it ought to begin piecemeal on this pending bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Utah will recall that in the river and harbor bill of last year provision was made whereby contractors who had entered into contracts before the war to perform work upon these projects were given relief in the way of a readjustment of their contracts after July, 1918. The appeal was particularly strong by contractors on the Ohio River, and a general provision was inserted on the river and harbor bill covering those cases, which have simply saved some of those contractors from absolute bankruptcy, because they were unable to control the price of wages and the price of materials, all of which rose, after they had entered into their contracts, to such an extent that it would be a gross wrong inflicted upon them to require them to carry out contracts entered into before the war under conditions brought about by the war, and over which they had no control whatever. Congress felt that they ought to be given some opportunity for reasonable relief, and that was provided for in the river and harbor act of last year.

There are other contractors who entered into contracts before the war who have suffered great loss and damage by reason of the conditions which arose, as this provision here reads, between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918. It is to do for these contractors, just as we have done for the contractors after those dates, the fair and equitable thing that this provision is reported by the committee. The amendment has been very thoroughly considered by the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. As I remember the form in which the committee adopted the amendment, it did not commit Congress to any action, but merely asked for information to be furnished to Congress in order that it may act, if it shall deem it proper to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. The provision is simply asking that a report be made to Congress as to what would be a reasonable adjustment of these matters.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that will mean that Congress will be expected to pay the amount of loss sustained.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will observe that the provision is:

Provided, That in every case the amount so ascertained—

That is, by the War Department—shall not exceed the actual loss sustained by the contractor in performing the work between the said dates.

No profits or anything of that sort are allowed.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Florida that I know of public buildings, contracts for the building of which were entered into before April 6, 1917, which were not completed until last year. I know of cases where contractors for those buildings have not only lost all of their profits but where they have lost twenty and thirty thousand dollars in addition. Why should they not be taken care of just as well as the man who digs a channel or who makes an improvement upon a river or in a harbor?

Mr. FLETCHER. That, of course, falls under the jurisdiction of another committee.

Mr. SMOOT. What I say is that there ought to be general legislation covering this entire question. It is a broad one, and it is a very serious one. No one can tell to what extent it is going to reach when we go into all of the activities and workings of the Government. I believe that whatever course is decided upon by Congress ought to be embodied in a general bill and not be tacked upon a public buildings bill or upon a river and harbor bill, or upon the military bill, or some other appropriation bill. Let us have general legislation, Mr. President, if we are going into this question, that will cover the whole field, so that there will be no discrimination made between classes of contractors with the Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. We have already gone into the matter, so far as the river and harbor bill is concerned, in the act of last year. We are now simply providing for what may only be an investigation with reference to the filling of the gap between certain dates and the putting of people on the same footing.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not all we are doing. It is proposed to go back from July 1, 1918, to April 6, 1917, and consider the losses of contractors between those dates. When we do that, we widen the breach as to all other contractors with the Government. If a contractor has, for instance, made a contract for the furnishing of produce, hay, grain, meats, or any other commodity to the Government for a term of five years, and he has been compelled to furnish it through all that time, even after April 6, 1917, and if the loss is so great that it has ruined the man, he suffers just the same as if he were ruined in improving the harbors and rivers of this country. If we are going to take care of one class of contractors, I desire that all classes shall be cared for.

This is clearly general legislation on an appropriation bill, and for that reason I make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to agree with the point of order made by the Senator from Utah. Does the Senator from Florida, in charge of the bill, desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FLETCHER. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to make the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. It is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and I make the point of order against it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Similar legislation to this was carried on the river and harbor bill last year. I do not remember whether or not the point of order was then made against it.

Mr. SMOOT. No. I will say to the Senator from Florida the point of order was not then made against it, because we at that time had not decided that there should be general legislation on the subject. I remember very well when the question was discussed. There was no one who particularly objected at that time, that from July 1, 1918, the work to be done thereafter should be cared for in the way that the law provided; but here we are going back from July 1, 1918, to April 6, 1917. That is entirely another proposition, for in many cases contractors have been paid for the work done between those dates. Now, to ask for general legislation covering all of the contracts furnished or worked up within those dates upon all the rivers and harbors of the country, is entirely too broad.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator, if he will allow me——

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize the fact, as I say, that this amendment simply provides for the making of an investigation to ascertain the losses sustained on such contracts.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true; but I call the Senator's attention to this: Are we not putting the people who persisted in their work and went on losing money day after day until they finished their work and who grinned and bore the hardship and suffered the loss in a more unfavorable position than we are the people who had the privilege to abandon their contracts and quit? It is those who fulfilled their contracts at great loss who are appealing to us to have some consideration for them.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida must know that there are other contractors appealing to us. I have letters here from builders of public buildings, as I have said. In fact, I know that one letter I received only the other day from a Mr. Young stated that he was compelled to finish a public building on the construction of which he was engaged in year 1918 and that he not only lost all that he possessed, but had lost nearly $30,000 additional he borrowed with an indorsement of a friend.

If we are going into this matter at all, let us go into it in the proper way and not place it on this appropriation bill or on any other appropriation bill, as I have already stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, to be inserted in section 5 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arkansas that by unanimous consent committee amendments to the bill are first to be considered.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to say that this amendment has the approval of the committee, although it has not been offered on behalf of the committee. It had the approval of the committee until the other amendment that has just been proposed by the Senator from Florida was offered, and I supposed it would be in order in that way; otherwise I shall wait until the committee amendments shall have been concluded.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 33, line 24, to change the number of the section from "3" to "5"; and in line 26, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to read:

SEC. 5. That for examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors for which there may be no special appropriation the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 20, to insert the following:

Waterway from Chincoteague Bay, Va., to Delaware Bay, at or near Lewes, Del., including consideration of the relative advantages and costs of utilizing the Mispillion River as the northern entrance to the waterway rather than the Broadkill River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before we go further, Mr. President, I desire to say that I reserve the right, if it is necessary to do so, to offer in the Senate the amendment which has been ruled out of order. I suggest to the Chair a little further consideration as to the point of whether or not that amendment is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to offer the amendment in the Senate, and the Chair will be very glad to have him do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to reserve the right to offer the amendment in the Senate. The amendment relates to contracts for work on river and harbor improvements, and, therefore, I do not think it is general legislation. If it embraced the scope which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires that legislation of this kind shall embrace, then it would be general legislation; but it is confined to river and harbor work. For that reason I respectfully submit to the Chair that the point of order is not well taken, and I desire to offer the amendment in the Senate so as to afford an opportunity to then present that question.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has the right to offer the amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the undoubted right to do that, and the Chair will be very glad, of course, to have him do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the Senator proceeds, might I say just a word or two with reference to this particular matter?

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator from Florida will offer the amendment in the Senate. I do not believe it is general legislation. As the Senator has well pointed out, it relates solely and entirely to matters covered by the river and harbor bill; and, further, it is limited by applying only to certain contracts within a certain period of time. Furthermore, it simply calls for facts.

I take it, Mr. President, that if the Senate saw fit to do so it could pass a resolution directing the Secretary of War to furnish this information to the Senate. In other words, it is not legislation at all, but it is simply a request, embodied in this bill by Congress to the Secretary of War, directing him to furnish the information. That is all the amendment does. It does not direct the payment of any money; it does not make the findings of the Secretary of War of any force or effect whatever; but it will simply secure to us information upon which we may hereafter act.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that every survey contained in this bill merely calls for facts, as this proposition does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all.

Mr. SMOOT. That is in relation to one particular item. That would not be general legislation, but the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida is general legislation, because it applies to every project there is in the United States. It is general in its character.

Mr. LENROOT. But it does not fix the rights or liabilities or affect the status of any of the contractors.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it does not apply to all of them in the country, either; it applies only to contracts between certain dates; that is all it does.

Mr. McKELLAR. It simply asks for a report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is very positive in his opinion, and I am just about as positive in mine as he is in his. The fact that he says this is general legislation does not convince or add anything to the information that I have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. It merely calls for a report from the Secretary of War with respect to matters concerning which we have legislated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate in this connection to one or two precedents. On page 61 of the Precedents I find this:

[60th Cong., 2d sess.: J., p. 221, February 25, 1909.]

H. R. 27053 "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture," etc., being under consideration:

On the question to agree to the reported amendment on page 55, after line 23, viz, "Commission on Country Life: For all necessary expenses to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to digest, compile, and publish the material already gathered by the Commission on Country Life, including the employment of the necessary clerical assistance in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $25,000."

Mr. Kean raised a question of order, viz, that the amendment as amended proposed general legislation to a general appropriation bill, and was therefore not in order.

The Vice President submitted the question to the Senate: Is the amendment as amended in order?

It was determined in the affirmative; yeas 48, nays 19. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 3075–3078.)

It seems to me that the language of the amendment referred to there is just about as general and calls really for more legislative action than is called for under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida. But further, on page 62, is a precedent which I think is much more applicable and much stronger:

[62d Cong., 3d sess.; J., p. 240, February 27, 1913.]

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914; and the reported amendments having been agreed to in part, and in part amended and as amended agreed to.

On motion by Mr. McLean to further amend the bill by inserting on page 55, after line 16, the following:

"All wild geese, wild swans, brant, wild ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, rail, wild pigeons, and all other migratory game and insectivorous birds which in their northern and southern migrations pass through or do not remain permanently the entire year within the borders of any State or Territory, shall hereafter be deemed to be within the custody and protection of the Government of the United States, and shall not be destroyed or taken contrary to regulations hereinafter provided therefor.

"The Department of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to adopt suitable regulations to give effect to the previous paragraph by prescribing and fixing closed seasons, having due regard to the zones of temperature, breeding habits, and times and line of migratory flight, thereby enabling the department to select and designate suitable districts for different portions of the country, and it shall be unlawful to shoot or by any device kill or seize and capture migratory birds within the protection of this law during said closed seasons, and any person who shall violate any of the provisions or regulations of this law for the protection of migratory birds shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than 90 days, or both, in the discretion of the court," etc.

Mr. Bryan raised a question of order, viz, that the amendment proposes general legislation to an appropriation bill and is therefore not in order under the rule.

The President pro tempore [Mr. Gallinger] submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order?

It was determined in the affirmative. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 4148, 4149.)

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to say, in answer to both precedents cited by the Senator from Washington, that the Senate did not vote upon the question as to whether or not the amendments proposed general legislation; in both those cases Senators voted as they did because they wanted the Senate to act favorably upon those particular items. I can go through the precedents of the Senate and show that the question as to whether matter proposed to be inserted was in serious violation of the rules never entered into the vote at all. Senators voted according to the course they wanted the legislation to take, as every Senator is fully aware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that he is happy to know that his decision will not in any way affect the adoption or refusal to adopt this amendment as it may be offered in the Senate. If under the last precedent read by the Senator from Washington the amendment referred to was in order, undoubtedly the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida would now be in order; but the Chair thinks it is the duty of the Chair to decide a question of this kind as it comes up. Of course, ordinarily he would submit, if requested, the point of order to the Senate for discussion; but in this case the Chair is glad to know that his decision will make no difference in the ultimate disposition of this amendment, as it can be submitted in the Senate and there decided. The Chair will further say that if any Senator, when this motion is submitted in the Senate, requests him to submit the question to the Senate for its consideration, he will do so.

Mr. SMOOT. And then the Senate will vote exactly in accordance with the course they want the legislation to take.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say that that is always the privilege of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I really think it is advisable that the Senate should vote that way; otherwise the Commerce Committee will be put in the position of having to make an investigation into all these various contracts and claims and then submit amendments covering specific cases. It was a question really with the committee in this instance whether we would report in favor of certain claims, which we felt were really just and ought to be paid, for losses sustained under contracts without fault of the contractor at all, but purely imposed upon him by conditions over which he had no control. We were about to submit as amendments to this bill items covering those losses in particular cases, but we saw that there were others in the same condition as those that had been brought to our attention, and we thought it was advisable to have this investigation first made by the department. I think it is in the public interest that that should be done.

I will submit that later on, but I wish now to propose, on page 35, the amendment which I send to the desk, which has been agreed to by the committee, having been presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following in the survey items:

Kill van Kull, Newark Bay, N. Y. and N. J., with a view to securing a channel 30 feet in depth and of suitable width up to the bridge of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey, between Elizabeth and Bayonne, including the removal of Bergen Point ledge.

Rahway River, N. J., and Staten Island Sound, N. Y. and N. J., with a view to securing a channel 30 feet in depth and of suitable width up to the bridge of the Sound Shore Branch of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey.

Raritan Bay and Raritan River, N. J., with a view to securing a channel 30 feet in depth and of suitable width to deep water near the bridge of the New York & Long Branch division of the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 35, after line 20, to insert:

Waterway from Chincoteague Bay, Va., to Delaware Bay, at or near Lewes, Del., including consideration of the relative advantages and costs of utilizing the Mispillion River as the northern entrance to the waterway rather than the Broadkill River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 8, to insert:

Cape Fear River, below Wilmington, N. C., with a view to the construction of jetties for the purpose of obtaining and maintaining a channel of suitable dimensions across the bar at the mouth of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Following that, the committee offers another amendment, which I will read. I regret I have not an extra copy of it. The amendment is as follows:

Waterway from Newbern, N. C., to Wilmington, N. C., via Trent River and Northeast Cape Fear River.

The item is for a survey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. After line 19, on the same page, I offer an amendment, which was suggested by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. It reads in this way:

And with a view to bank protection at and in the vicinity of Vermilion, S. Dak., and with a view of ascertaining the location of practicable sites in South Dakota for the construction of dams which would prevent erosion and be in the interests of navigation, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

That amendment should come in following line 19, and is offered by the committee.

Mr. STERLING. On what page, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. FLETCHER. Page 36.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 19, it is proposed to insert the following item:

And with a view to bank protection at and in the vicinity of Vermilion, S. Dak., and with a view of ascertaining the location of practicable sites in South Dakota for the construction of dams which would prevent erosion and be in the interests of navigation, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I think I have suggested the wrong place.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; the amendment should come in on page 37, following line 19, under the Missouri River item.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been pasted in the wrong place in my copy of the bill. I will omit that amendment for the present and will submit it later.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 36, after line 22, to insert:

St. Andrews Bay, Fla., with a view to increasing the dimensions of the channel between the Gulf of Mexico and St. Andrews Bay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 25, to insert:

Bayou Texar, including entrance from Pensacola Bay, Fla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 37, to insert:

Pensacola Bay, Fla., to Mobile Bay, Ala., with a view to providing a channel of greater dimensions than recommended by the Chief of Engineers in report published in House Document No. 610, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. In behalf of the committee I offer an amendment at the end of line 5, as follows:

Little Caillou Bayou, La.

Mr. SMOOT. Does that clean up all the items for Louisiana?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is the only thing Louisiana is getting in the way of surveys. In Caillou Bayou are found a great many oysters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 37, line 7, after the word "to," to strike out "Pass Cavello" and insert "Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex.," so as to make the clause read:

Intracoastal waterway from Galveston Bay to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 12, to insert:

Galveston Channel, Tex., with a view to the extension of the seawall to and around Fort San Jacinto Reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 14, to insert:

Neches River, Tex., from Beaumont to mouth of Angelina River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 16, to insert:

Missouri River, Mo., with a view to bank protection near Centaur and Gumbo, St. Louis County, Mo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed to insert, on page 37, at the end of line 19, the item proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], as follows:

And with a view to bank protection at and in the vicinity of Vermilion, S. Dak., and with a view of ascertaining the location of practicable sites in South Dakota for the construction of dams which would prevent erosion and be in the interests of navigation, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 37, after line 23, to insert:

The Miami and Erie Canal, Ohio, including a branch canal connecting the Miami and Erie Canal with Lake Michigan, and such other routes between Lake Erie and the Ohio River as may be considered practicable by the Chief of Engineers, with a view to securing a channel 12 feet in depth with suitable widths, or such other dimensions as may be considered practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 16, to insert:

Morro Bay, Cal., including an entrance channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, after line 12, I desire to offer a committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

Such routes between the Great Lakes and the Hudson River as may be considered practical by the Chief of Engineers, with a view to securing a waterway admitting ocean-going vessels to the Great Lakes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 38, after line 18, to insert.

Yaquina River, Oreg., from Newport to Toledo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 25, to change the number of the section from 4 to 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before that is done, may I suggest to the Senator that the renumbering of these sections may be allowed?

Mr. SMOOT. They have already been changed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know that they had been changed. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Pittman	Smoot
Brandegee	Jones, N. Mex.	Pollock	Spencer
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Ransdell	Sutherland
Culberson	Kenyon	Reed	Thomas
Cummins	Kirby	Saulsbury	Townsend
Dillingham	Lenroot	Shafroth	Trammell
Fletcher	Lewis	Sheppard	Warren
France	McCumber	Sherman	Weeks
Gay	McKellar	Shields	Williams
Hale	Moses	Simmons
Harding	New	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], are detained on account of official business in the Indian Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 10, it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 7. That the International Joint Commission created by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relating to boundary waters between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington January 11, 1909, under the provisions of article 9 of said treaty, is requested to investigate what further improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario is necessary to make the same navigable for ocean-going vessels, together with the estimated cost thereof, and report to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and to the Congress of the United States, with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada in the improvement of said river.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this amendment, I understand, is to create some controversy. I wish very briefly to explain it.

The Senate has just adopted an amendment proposed by the committee, at the instance of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], providing for a preliminary survey of routes between the Great Lakes and the Hudson River with a view of securing by one of those routes a waterway for ocean-going vessels. The pending amendment provides that the International Joint Commission is requested to investigate the St. Lawrence River route, with estimates of cost and recommendations for cooperation for the construction or improvement of such route by the United States with the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. President, Senators will remember that some years ago, in 1909, the United States and Great Britain entered into a treaty concerning boundary waters between the Dominion of Canada and the United States. By that treaty a joint commission was provided, consisting of three members appointed by the President of the United States and three members appointed by the Dominion of Canada. That commission has been in existence ever since that time and has had jurisdiction of all questions relating to boundary waters between the two countries. One of the articles of this treaty provides:

The high contracting parties agree that the navigation of all navigable boundary waters shall forever continue free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants and to the ships, vessels, and boats of both countries equally, subject, however, to any laws and regulations of either country, within its own territory, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation and applying equally and without discrimination to the inhabitants, ships, vessels, and boats of both countries.

It is further agreed that so long as this treaty shall remain in force this same right of navigation shall extend to the waters of Lake Michigan and to all canals connecting boundary waters and now existing or which may hereafter be constructed on either side of the line. Either of the high contracting parties may adopt rules and regulations governing the use of such canals within its own territory and may charge tolls for the use thereof, but all such rules and regulations and all tolls charged shall apply alike to the subjects or citizens of the high contracting parties and the ships, vessels, and boats of both of the high contracting parties, and they shall be placed on terms of equality in the use thereof.

That means that either nation has the right to use the waterways of the other in so far as those waterways are in any sense boundary waters. It means that the United States will have the right to use the Welland Canal, which is now being completed, and, when completed, will admit the passage through the Welland Canal of ships having a length, I believe, of 740 feet and a draft of 30 feet.

Article 9 of the treaty reads as follows:

The high contracting parties further agree that any other questions or matters of difference arising between them involving the rights, obligations, or interests of either in relation to the other or to the inhabitants of the other, along the common frontier between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, shall be referred from time to time to the international joint commission for examination and report whenever either the Government of the United States or the Government of the Dominion of Canada shall request that such questions or matters of difference be so referred.

The international joint commission is authorized in each case so referred to examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances of the particular questions and matters referred, together with such conclusions and recommendations as may be appropriate, subject, however, to any restrictions or exceptions which may be imposed with respect thereto by the terms of the reference.

Such reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted either on the facts or the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award—

And so forth. That is all that is important, so far as this proposition is concerned.

The pending amendment proposes to refer to this joint commission, for investigation and report, exactly in the same way that these preliminary surveys are referred to the Board of Engineers, the matter of investigation of the improvement of the St. Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to Montreal, and recommendations for cooperation between the two nations in its improvement.

The matter of a waterway between the Great Lakes and the sea has been a dream of many, many years, almost since the Republic was founded; and its history is not so dissimilar to the history of the Panama Canal. It is interesting to know that the first project for connecting the Hudson River with the Great Lakes was inaugurated by Gen. Washington. In 1792, Gen. Washington obtained the passage of an act of incorporation by the Legislature of the State of New York for the construction of a waterway between the Hudson River and Lake Erie by a system of canals and slack-water and lake navigation by way of the Mohawk River, Oneida Lake and River, Oswego Lake, and Lake Ontario. As we all know, canals have been constructed, and we have to-day the Erie Canal; but the Erie Canal does not, of course, admit ocean-going vessels into the Lakes. The Welland Canal, which will soon be completed, will permit the passage of ocean-going vessels through that canal; and the people of the entire interior, from the Pacific coast to the Allegheny Mountains, are interested in securing a deep waterway to the sea that will permit the passage of ocean-going vessels.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. The statement was made in the press some months ago that when it became necessary to take some of the Lake steamers through, so that they might be used in transoceanic commerce, it was necessary to cut them in two in order to get them through. Is that correct?

Mr. LENROOT. That is correct, and it has been done a great many times.

Mr. POMERENE. So the only purpose of this amendment is to give an opportunity for the building of great ocean-going steamers in the very shipyards that are now located on the Lake ports, and for the purpose, if it becomes feasible, of having ocean-going commerce go through to the interior lakes?

Mr. LENROOT. That is the entire purpose of the amendment.

Mr. President, this is a question that affects, and vitally affects, the entire northern half of the United States west of the Allegheny Mountains. At the head of Lake Superior is the harbor of Superior-Duluth. Senators are often surprised to learn the amount of commerce that is carried on in that harbor—52,000,000 tons in 1917, valued at nearly $500,000,000. Through the Soo Canal in 1917 there were carried 89,000,000 tons, valued at more than $1,000,000,000. That is on Lake Superior. On Lake Michigan we have the great cities of Chicago and Milwaukee, and many other cities upon the borders of that lake; and upon Lake Erie we have the cities of Cleveland and Toledo, and upon the St. Clair River we have Detroit. Reaching, as this lake system does, to the very heart of the continent, it draws freight and commerce from the Pacific coast to these waterways.

One-half of the grain shipments—I think more than one-half—to Europe traveled over these waterways. They are now compelled to unload at Buffalo, and there their load of wheat is loaded into either railroad cars or canal boats, sent to the city of New York, and then again transferred, and from there transported to Europe. Mr. President, with this deep waterway that transfer would not be necessary, and it would save 5 cents a bushel to every farmer in the Middle West upon the price of his grain. It would mean 5 cents a bushel more to the farmer for his wheat if we had this deep waterway.

I anticipate that it will be said, in opposition to this, that it will destroy or materialy injure the commerce of the city of New York; but, Mr. President, I want to call attention now to the fact that the most serious situation we had only a year ago was the congestion in the commerce in the city of New York. The failure of the railroads to properly fulfill their functions was more than any other reason, because New York was the neck of the bottle, and they did not have facilities to take care of the commerce that came in there. In the interest of the country—and that should be the first interest of the Senate—some commerce ought to be diverted from the city of New York. It ought to be diverted to other Atlantic ports; and if by a waterway—whether it be through the State of New York, or the Hudson River, or whether it be through the St. Lawrence Canal to the sea—we can avoid that transfer, if we can avoid that congestion at the city of New York, it ought to be done. New York certainly will not ask the West to pay tribute to it without rendering any service in return for the commerce that goes through it.

But it will be said, too, Mr. President, that this involves the expenditure of Government money in foreign territory, in the territory of the Dominion of Canada. That is not necessarily so. I shall be able to demonstrate that that is not necessarily true to the slightest degree.

That brings us to an examination of what the waterway is that this amendment proposes that the International Commission shall investigate.

From Lake Ontario to Montreal the distance is 181 miles on the St. Lawrence River, 113 miles of that, or considerably more than half, constitute boundary waters between the United States and Canada. Only 68½ miles of that waterway is wholly in Canadian territory.

Now, as to the improvement that will be necessary:

In December of last year the Secretary of War made a report to Congress concerning the cost of the improvement of the St. Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to St. Regis, which is the boundary line between the United States and Canada, and a description was given of this entire project; and I wish to take a few moments in going over this description.

The first 68 miles, from Lake Ontario to Galop Island, now has a depth of 30 feet, with a minimum width of channel of 500 feet; so as to that distance no improvement whatever will be necessary.

From Galop Rapids to the head of Ogdens Island, 8 miles, improvement will be necessary.

From the head of Ogdens Island to the foot of Crysler Island, or Bradfords Point, 11 miles, improvement also will be necessary.

From Bradfords Point to Richards Bay, 7 miles, the river consists practically of a single wide pool or channel, nearly all on the United States side of the boundary line, 30 to 50 feet deep, except at the head of Cat Island, 20 to 23 feet deep.

Just below Richards Bay, at Talcotts Point, the Long Sault Rapids begin and extend, including deep rapid-current channel, below the rapids for 11½ miles down to Massena Point. The American channel is narrow and tortuous, comprising the South Sault Rapids, and having swift current throughout, rendering it commercially unnavigable.

From Massena Point to St. Regis, which is the boundary line, 6½ miles, the United States channel is of ample width and 30 to 50 feet deep, except opposite the mouth of Raquette River, where the controlling depth is 22 feet. This stretch of river is practically an arm of the Lake St. Francis pool, which lake is wholly in Canada. For the improvement of this 113 miles, affording a draft of 30 feet, the entire cost, it is estimated, will be $35,000,000.

Now, we do not know what the cost will be for the balance of the 68 miles from St. Regis to Montreal. That is one of the things that we wish to ascertain by the report of this commission; but when Senators say, as they may say, that cooperation requires the expenditure of Federal money in Canadian territory if we have cooperation, that is not true. In my judgment, if the United States will undertake the improvement from Lake Ontario to St. Regis, Canada will be entirely willing, as its share of the work, to undertake the improvement from St. Regis to Montreal. Canada will expend all her money in her territory and we will expend all our money in our territory, and we shall have a deep ocean waterway to the sea at a cost of $35,000,000 if this commission shall make such a recommendation and Congress adopts it.

Will any Senator say that if we can bring the Atlantic Ocean to the interior of this continent and admit the building of ocean ships in the lake shipyards, which made a better record during the war for construction than any shipyard on the Atlantic coast, both in number of ships launched and in speed of construction—if we can secure the building of ships in the shipyards of the Great Lakes, if we can bring the Atlantic Ocean to the heart of the continent, thereby reducing the freight rates for nearly one-half of the United States, will any Senator stand in his place and say, "It ought not to be done because it will injure the commerce of my State"?

Mr. President, the claim may also be made that if we have deep waterways from the mouth of the St. Lawrence River to the Great Lakes our national defense will be seriously jeopardized. That was taken into consideration in the report to which I have referred, made on December 14, 1918. In speaking of the military and naval view of this question, and how it could affect our status in that respect, the division engineer said:

Under the conditions of greater depth, assumed as stated in paragraph 52, above, the board's view may be regarded to still hold good, for it is to be remembered that notwithstanding present types of naval vessels of great destructive power and of moderate draft, and submarines and torpedo boats of light draft, capable of reaching the Great Lakes through the St. Lawrence River and Welland Canal, such passage could be quickly and completely obstructed by destruction of the locks on these canals by shell fire, notably on Canadian St. Lawrence River canals, where all locks are within 7,000 feet of the United States main river shore, and some not over one-half mile therefrom.

So, if there were the slightest foundation, Mr. President, for the theory that this ocean waterway might admit the English Navy into our lakes and thus be a menace to us in case we ever get into trouble with Great Britain, the board itself shows conclusively that every one of these locks and canals can be destroyed by shell fire from the American side without the slightest difficulty.

But aside from that, Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to say, because it bears upon this question, that I should be unwilling to have my course upon any legislation guided upon any theory that the United States and Great Britain shall hereafter become involved in war between themselves. If we are to assume that that is a possibility, we might as well recognize at the very outset that civilization is gone and the world destroyed, so far as civilization is concerned.

As to the report made by the engineers upon the project of the St. Lawrence River from Ontario to St. Regis, the board said:

It appears that the present commerce of the St. Lawrence carried through the Canadian channel comprises only a small part of the Great Lakes commerce and that there is no material traffic via the United States channels below Ogdensburg. Some increase in commerce is expected to follow the enlargement of the Welland Canal. It would appear however, that the principal advantage to be gained by this enlargement, prior to the provision of equal facilities through the St. Lawrence to Montreal, would be the transfer of the place of transshipment of cargoes from lake vessels to canal boats from the eastern end of Lake Erie to Oswego or some point on deep water in the St. Lawrence. So far as known, no provision has been made for the enlargement of the Canadian canals along the St. Lawrence to accommodate vessels expected to use the Welland Canal. In the absence of any prospect of a suitable outlet below St. Regis, it is obviously premature to undertake the suggested improvement above this point. In view of these facts, the board concurs with the district engineer in the opinion that it is not advisable for the United States to undertake the improvement of the St. Lawrence River from Lake Ontario to the Canadian border.

This makes it very plain that there would have been a favorable recommendation upon the improvement of the St. Lawrence River to a depth of 30 feet from Lake Ontario to St. Regis if there had been a waterway capable of admitting ocean vessels from Montreal to St. Regis, a distance of 68 miles.

The Welland Canal to-day has a commerce of something like 3,000,000 tons a year. Buffalo has a commerce of something like 18,000,000 tons a year. Aside from the advantage to shipyards upon the Great Lakes, no one who studies this question can doubt for a moment that with a deep waterway permitting ocean-going vessels to get into the Great Lakes the commerce through that waterway would be at least 10,000,000 tons a year.

It was stated a little while ago that we are now committed to an expenditure upon the Ohio River of $23,000,000 in addition to what we have already spent. We have already spent upon the Missouri River $16,000,000 and are committed to $12,000,000 more. With this deep waterway there will be more advantage to one-half the people of this country through the expenditure of $35,000,000 than the advantage that has been secured thus far by the improvement of all the rivers in the United States combined.

Yet this amendment commits Congress to nothing. It does ask for information. Can it be possible, Mr. President, that anyone is afraid of information, that anyone is afraid to have the facts presented to Congress concerning the cost? I have never, since I have been a Member of Congress, objected to these preliminary surveys. Congress ought to be in possession of all the facts necessary upon which it may pass an intelligent judgment. But to oppose this amendment merely means that the facts are not desired upon which Congress may act. We will have before us at the same time a report from the board of engineers as to the cost of an ocean waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson River.

I would rather it would go that way than through the St. Lawrence. It is going finally to be a question of cost, and we ought to be willing to have the facts before us as to the relative cost of the two routes, and that is all that is involved in this proposition.

I again wish to emphasize that this amendment commits the United States to nothing. Under the terms of the treaty it is expressly provided that the facts found by this commission shall not be binding upon either Government, nor shall the recommendation be conclusive upon either Government. All this does is that instead of being a report from the Board of Engineers, such as we had the right to ask and did ask from that board with reference to that portion of the St. Lawrence River constituting our boundary water, we take the means provided in the treaty for getting additional facts as to the cost of the improvement of the entire river. Having that information, the way that I believe we will cooperate will not be through spending our money in Canadian territory, but, if this is found to be the practicable route, an agreement that if Canada will improve that portion of the St. Lawrence River lying wholly within her territory, we will improve that portion of the St. Lawrence River constituting the boundary waters between this country and Canada at our expense, and either Government shall have full and free access, as they have under the treaty, to the improvement made by each.

Mr. TOWNSEND obtained the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator allow me to present in behalf of my colleague and myself an amendment which follows the section to which the Senator from Michigan is about to address himself at this time? With the permission of the Senator from Michigan, I tender an amendment and ask that it may take its proper place and that we may take it up at the proper time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and lie on the table for the present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in 1911, when the Canadian reciprocity bill was before the Senate, I proposed an amendment requesting the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with Canada and Great Britain looking to a mutual development of the boundary waters between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, and especially the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway, with the idea that those waters could be utilized as an ocean way, accommodating ships of the largest size, ships that could load at Duluth and other cities on the Great Lakes and discharge their cargoes at Liverpool. That amendment was not accepted.

Subsequently, in June, 1913, I believe, I presented the idea as a separate resolution, and it received the unanimous support of the Senate and went to the Secretary of State. I happen to know that the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Moore, at that time was quite favorable to the proposition, as was also the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Bixby. But it appears that no action was taken by the administration, and the matter rests somewhere in the executive department to-day.

I submitted some remarks on the question to the Senate both at the time when I offered the amendment to the reciprocity bill and when I introduced the resolution in the Senate. The arguments which I made at that time seem to be as good now as they were then, and I shall ask leave to print some of them with my present remarks.

I do not wish the opportunity to pass without expressing my hearty approval of this, to me, the greatest undertaking which the United States could enter into looking to the betterment of our transportation facilities, and therefore to the betterment of our industrial conditions generally.

The St. Lawrence route is a natural waterway, which extends, as you know, from the Atlantic Ocean to the farthest reaches of the Great Lakes, It has sufficient water, when properly employed, to accomplish everything which is needed in ocean transportation. Already the waterway is sufficient for all ocean ships from the Atlantic to Montreal. The Great Lakes afford more than 800 miles of open sailing. The greatest obstacle which presents——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator remind the Senate of the depth of water in the Detroit River?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The greater part of the Detroit River has sufficient depth for ocean vessels. In the shallowest sections in the shipping channel it is 24 feet deep.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask what is the depth of water over the sills of the lock at Sault Ste. Marie?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The largest has been constructed with a depth of 24 feet, as I recall it. I felt that the last lock should have had a depth of 30 feet, but my efforts to this end were unavailing. I knew that this ocean scheme was one that in the not far distant future would be realized.

But what I rose to say is that we have sufficient water, we have a natural course, to make this plan entirely feasible. The only physical objections to the improvement are the obstructions which here and there lie in sections of the course. The greatest of these perhaps are those found in the St. Lawrence River.

Yet I remind the Senator from New York that not many years ago, I think possibly in 1910 or 1911, a water power company sought the aid of New York to construct dams in the Long Soo Rapids for the purpose of generating water power. It was discovered that that company would have to come to the Federal Government for authority to operate. I know from reliable sources that this company was willing to construct the dams and locks for the purpose of harnessing that wonderful power in the St. Lawrence River under plans proposed by the Secretary of War, not only doing it at their own expense and in such way as to create pools through which the vessels could sail, but they were willing also to pay a certain per cent or royalty upon the water power developed.

In 1913, when I discussed this proposition I stated, and I repeat it now, that I think there is sufficient latent power that could be generated in the St. Lawrence River practically to pay the expense of this proposed development.

The Welland Canal, of course, is a short stretch, and the Canadian Government has had this ocean way in view, and it has constructed the new locks with the idea that they could be converted into a 30-foot depth without any great or unreasonable extra cost. There are certain stretches in this waterway which would require improvement, but I estimated, or had estimated for me through the Engineering Department of the Government in 1913, that the total cost of this waterway to both countries would not exceed $200,000,000, and that was the very outside estimate.

Mr. President, this is a gigantic enterprise, but it is wholly a practical one. On the Great Lakes and within an hour's ride of them is found practically the center of the greatest industrial activities of the country. The richest lands of our country are within a radius of 100 miles of the Great Lakes.

The great object contemplated in this river and harbor bill is that of obtaining adequate transportation at reasonable rates. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created for the purpose of regulating rates. Here is a self-regulating scheme, which, if once set in motion, would in itself regulate railroad rates at least from the North and Middle West to the Atlantic seaboard.

Canada is interested in this project. I believe it should be a mutual enterprise. I am sure it can be such. Canada desires an ocean way from her great middle west to the ocean. Her people have been divided into two parties on the question of route. One is in favor of the waterway by the way of the Georgian Bay to the Ottawa River and thence to Montreal; in other words, an all-Canadian water route. That must necessarily consist of a great many canals and is a crooked course. But it has the advantage for Canada that it is all in her territory. I submit, Mr. President, that the United States could not afford to have that waterway constructed if we could get the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence route improved to accommodate both nations. The other party in Canada is in favor of the St. Lawrence course. Its members are organized for that purpose, and as I understand it now, the Canadian Parliament or at least a large part of its members are in favor of the latter project.

Canada is going to do something. She has about concluded that these great waters are not going to run forever unused. In spite of all objections that might be made or opposition that might be offered by the railroads—and I am not sure that they are offering much opposition now—this natural waterway is bound to be used some time. It will not forever be neglected.

The question has been raised that it will interfere with the lake levels. That is not true. That question has been investigated by the Engineering Department. It will not interfere with the lake level. All the water that is flowing over this course now can be used for the purpose of floating commerce from inland ports of our country to the sea.

I know it is argued that this waterway might possibly interfere in some way with New York City or some of the Atlantic seaport towns or cities, yet every man must recognize the fact that this is a great national project, greater than local interest or local pride. It will serve the better interests of 25,000,000 people. It is essential to the development of a large section of our country and in serving the interests of the Middle West and of the great Northwest. It can not injure New York; but if it did, sir, which I deny, I would still insist that a project which has the advantages which this one possesses should not be stifled, should not be neglected.

One of the problems of the present, as it will be the problem for future years, is the taking of our people out of the congested centers into the middle and farther west—the development of the country as a whole. This waterway will tend to do that more than any other project that has been submitted. I may be mistaken—the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], or some other Senator may correct me if I am wrong—but I think we have expended about $700,000,000 upon the waterways of the country up to date.

Mr. SMOOT. We have expended more than that.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the sum is about that. I do not remember the exact amount which has been expended since the beginning of the Government,

Mr. SMOOT. It has been nearly $900,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, I will call it $700,000,000, although I am told it is nearer $900,000,000, but so much the better for my argument, whatever the amount is, although I wish to be modest, as usual.

Canada has spent something over $100,000,000 on her waterways, all for the purpose of developing the means of water transportation; yet this one line, running along the border between the United States and Canada, has greater possibilities than has the Panama Canal. More commerce would find its way to Europe and to other foreign countries over this line than passes through the Panama Canal or enters and clears from our whole Atlantic seaboard. In fact, more commerce goes through the Detroit River every year, much of it destined for export, than passes or will pass for years through the Panama Canal; yet we spent hundreds of millions of dollas for that project, which I approve and which I am glad we have spent; but here is a more practicable improvement, a more practicable means of transportation for our country, affecting millions of our people, than is the Panama Canal. For all the ages this water has been going to waste, and we are permitting it and at the same time trying to put a check on railroad rates, when this, I repeat, is the best regulator which could be employed.

But, Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate in long discussion of this most important subject. I collected a great deal of data on this subject—the tonnage, its possibilities, and so forth—when I discussed it six or seven years ago. Instead of time having changed my mind or altered the convincing effect of my calculations, it seems to me it has intensified them and made the necessity for this project even more apparent than it then was.

Think what it would have meant if we had had that ocean-way during this war! Senators may not know it, but on the Great Lakes have been built more than two-thirds of the steel vessels which have been constructed in the United States since this war began. We have the facilities on the Great Lakes to make our prospective merchant marine an undoubted success, in my judgment. We can build ocean ships up there; give us greater opportunity to do so. We could well afford to cut out many of these little things in this bill, which aggregate millions, for private benefit and local interests, and expend the money on this great enterprise, which would benefit the whole country. The railroad congestion at our Atlantic ports during the war would have been avoided if this waterway had been in operation. Many other war-time benefits would have come from it.

So, Mr. President, I am glad that the committee has placed this amendment upon the bill. Of course it means nothing more than to get at the facts through an organization already created by the two Governments. I want to say that I went before the former Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, when he was in that position, and, though I had written several letters on the subject, evidently they had never reached him, but were answered by someone else, for he told me he had never before heard about my resolution. I plead with him to submit this or to have the President submit it, to Canada for cooperation. That is all that is asked in this amendment—merely to empower the joint commission to go to work and get the facts as to what the work will cost; how much waterpower is there unused that could be developed, and so forth. That is what this amendment proposes, and nothing else.

Can we, I repeat, vote for local projects—doubtful projects—and refuse information upon a project which many of us, including the Engineers of our Army, believe to be feasible and practical, and that has tremendous possibilities for good to our country?

It is a great subject. It could be profitably discussed for hours in showing its great possibilities. I have attempted simply to present a general view of what is possible and what ought to be done at the earliest practicable moment to perfect this international enterprise.

When I addressed the Senate a few years ago on this subject I took some pains in collecting facts. I ask permission in connection with my remarks to submit for the RECORD some parts of that address. It will perhaps be a repetition of some things I have just said, but it will be better arranged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"And now, Mr. President, I desire in as brief a time as possible to discuss the amendment which I have offered to the so-called Canadian reciprocity measure and give to Senators the reasons which induced me to offer and support it.

"May I ask the Secretary to read the amendment?

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

"The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That for the purpose of improving the St. Lawrence River from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean and waterways connecting the Great Lakes the President of the United States is authorized and directed to enter into an agreement with the Dominion of Canada which shall provide, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for a waterway of sufficient depth and width to accommodate deep-water or seagoing vessels for the common use and benefit of both countries and in furtherance of reciprocal trade relations between them: Provided, however, That said agreement before becoming operative shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States for ratification or rejection.

"Mr. TOWNSEND. It is probable that the provision is not as well worded as it might be, but it is sufficiently clear to enable the Congress to understand it and the President to comprehend its intent, if it shall be presented to him for his action. It clearly does not affect the provisions of the bill, or any of them. It simply instructs the President to continue his efforts for the further reciprocal good of Canada and the United States.

"I will, as best I can, present some of the benefits which would come to the people of the United States and of Canada from a deep or ocean waterway from the Great Lakes to the ocean, via the St. Lawrence River, and then I will discuss the feasibility of the project.

"I think I realize some of the objections which will be urged against this amendment, and I confess that I have no hope of accomplishing its object until the utmost trust and confidence, the most complete faith and good will, exist between the people of the United States and Canada.

"Being convinced that the project which I propose will confer greater benefits on both countries than those which flow from any tariff—that it would be, in fact, the consummation of the greatest contemplated benefits in trade—I seek to project it upon the attention of the Senate and of the country.

"It is commonly accepted as true that the industrial and commercial progress of the world has depended in direct ratio upon the progress and development of the means of transportation.

"In their primitive state mankind have been content to produce only what they have desired, and their desires were limited to the simple needs for satisfying hunger and for protection against the elements. But when their desires were increased and they wanted other than what they individually produced, the carrier or transporter became a necessity. At first the means of transportation were crude vehicles, hauled by men or animals on land, and equally crude boats and canoes, propelled by oars or wind on the water. The latter was the most efficient, and settlements followed the course of streams and waterways. But these streams and waterways were limited and only penetrated a small portion of the country. Watercourses were nature's highways, and to the people who could use them they furnished cheap means of transportation.

"The interior portions of the country were in many cases more fertile and productive than land adjacent to navigable waters. Minerals of great value existed in places remote from water, and as these lands and minerals came into demand land transportation received attention. In due course the railroad was born and the country was settled up. Railroad building at first was slow, but as the possibilities of railroading, both speculative and practical, became more apparent, as inventive genius became more active, railroad companies were formed and lines constructed. There was a real contest for railroad business. That was before the age of consolidation. In time roads sufficient for the ordinary needs of industry were constructed; then began the struggle of railroad operators for monopoly; then began the age of consolidation. It was, however a consolidation of railroads. The boat lines were independent, and wherever they existed they furnished real competition.

"This Government has recognized the value of water transportation. It has spent $650,000,000 in improving its rivers and harbors, and has entered upon a most extensive and comprehensive policy of waterway improvement. It is seeking vigorously and intelligently, though not yet altogether effectively, to regulate land carriers; but about the only thing which has effectively resulted in securing low and reasonable rail rates has been the establishment of water competition.

"No one complains of rail rates between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, for these coasts are connected by the two oceans, and the land rate must meet the ocean rate. The charges by rail from Duluth to Buffalo are reasonable, because the lake boats make them so. The freight tariffs from the East or West to the Mississippi River are much lower than those over the same lines to nearer points from place of shipment but which have not the actual or possible advantages of Mississippi navigation. Indeed, the Salt Lake City merchant who buys goods in Boston or New York bills them through his home to the Pacific coast and then back to Salt Lake City, for the reason it is cheaper to do so. The Arizona wool buyer first ships his wool to Los Angeles and then across the continent to Boston, because the latter rate is fixed to meet ocean competition. The railroads haul coal from the Pennsylvania mines to Chicago at a lower rate than they do to Jackson, Mich., 200 miles nearer the mine, and for the reason that Chicago is on Lake Michigan, which is connected by water with Lake Erie, upon which the city of Erie is situated, and the coal might be shipped by rail to Erie and thence by boat to Chicago. Water competition is the one sure power which compels low freight rates.

"This principle is generally recognized by States and by the Nation. He who investigates with care will discover that the freight rate enters into the cost of practically everything of human use, and its effect upon articles of consumption is to increase the cost far in excess of any increase caused by tariff duties.

"Centuries ago European Governments recognized the necessity of common carriers and treated them as public servants. The old common law of England, adopted by the United States, provides that the rates and regulations of common carriers shall be just and reasonable. To the end that they shall be such, statutes have been enacted, and in recent years railroad-rate legislation has been the most important of Federal and State enactments.

"The problem of cheap transportation is still unsolved; but already water transportation is recognized as the prime factor in the solution.

"The Great Lakes extend into the very heart of the United States. Tributary to them is the most fertile territory of our country. On them and within an hour's ride from them are found our largest and most prosperous industries.

"The iron, copper, coal, tin, salt, and other minerals of Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Ohio, and western Pennsylvania would naturally find their way to markets over the Lakes if a deep waterway for ocean-going craft connected those Lakes with the Atlantic; the forest products of the great Middle Northwest could be floated to the ultimate consumer; railroads would have their termini on the inland seas, and to their waters could be carried the grain and other agricultural products for shipment to both shores of the Atlantic. Indeed, the Atlantic would be extended to Chicago and Duluth and a benefit to producers and shippers in the great Middle West, in excess of any other that has been suggested, would be extended. I can not easily overstate this benefit. Think of it, transportation for seagoing craft would be brought to within an hour of the center of population. At the docks of Duluth, Chicago, Port Arthur, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Erie, Buffalo, and Toronto could be seen ships flying the flags of England, Germany, Russia, and of every other maritime power of Europe. Cargoes could be loaded in bottoms at Lake ports bound directly for their foreign destination. The Interstate Commerce Commission would have no occasion to pass upon railroad rates from the Middle West to the Atlantic. Water competition would keep these rates reasonable.

"But shipments from the Middle West and Northwest would not be the only ones benefited. Goods going into those regions from the East would not be charged with the present high freight rates. They would get the benefit of water competition.

"There are other great benefits which would come from the establishment of this waterway. On the Lakes are some of the largest shipbuilding yards in the country. In them are constructed some of the largest ships afloat, and these yards could compete in construction with the seaboard yards, and such competition might be of great value to the Government and to the shipping interests on lakes and seas.

"Session after session of Congress the country is notified of its dangerous lack of colliers for use with its gunboats in time of war, and yet our Great Lakes are covered with leviathans that could be used in case of need, and that without expense of building and maintaining by the Government in time of peace. How much better to spend $150,000,000 in a waterway intrinsically worth the money for commerce and at the same time furnish a way to get collier freighters to the sea in case of necessity than to spend $150,000,000 for boats which will probably never be needed. This is no idle fancy. The Lake boats may not be constructed as a modern naval architect would build a collier, but they would answer the purpose and are such as are now used in time of war. Many of the Lake boats at the close of the Lake season could go down to the sea and engage in the coastwise traffic in the winter season, and thus work the year round. On the other hand, a larger field will be opened to our coast-serving boats, and if it be true that a Lake-boat monopoly exists, or is being formed, competition will tend to destroy it.

"To me this scheme opens a possibility for a merchant marine without subsidy or other similar device. This waterway would induce the building, manning, and operation of seagoing boats on the Great Lakes.

"The St. Lawrence River, with its sources in the very industrial and commercial heart of the continent, leads in a most direct line to the great marts of Europe. It invites the business of both countries to embark upon its waters. Nature never appealed more eloquently with advantages and opportunities than she does to these two countries through this waterway to-day.

"I can already hear the objections which will be urged by representatives from the Atlantic seaboard of the United States. Already they think they see Montreal enlarged into the metropolis of the western continent, while New York, Philadelphia, Boston, and Baltimore contemplate their idle wharves and empty warehouses; but, Mr. President, they are victims of hallucinations; they are but seeing nightmares in their dreams.

"A sufficiently developed Welland Canal and St. Lawrence River would but stimulate railroad facilities and railroad advantages, and a practical waterway sufficient for the needs of ocean traffic, extending from Duluth to the mouth of the St. Lawrence River, would be worth the cost to the people of the two countries, if but few additional boats sailed over the course, in the reduction of railroad rates and the additional railroad accommodations which would be furnished. This is one of the unquestioned lessons which such enterprises have taught the world.

"But, Mr. President, believing, as I do, that this project would be for the good of the United States and Canada as a whole, I would still advocate it even if it should stop the phenomenal, nay, the somewhat dangerous, growth of our seaboard cities. But if great growth is the thing altogether lovely and most to be desired, what should we say of the possibilities in this regard which shall come to Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, Duluth, Chicago, and other cities as a result of this project?

"As for me, sir, I would for the good of my country hasten the movement of the center of population westward into the neighborhood of our greatest natural resources, into the region where exist those somewhat latent forces which must shape and control the great destinies of ultimate America. But no disaster can come from this to any legitimate interest. It will stimulate growth and prosperity everywhere. In all prosperous times, in some seasons of all years, there is great complaint that traffic is retarded and great loss to business incurred by reason of insufficient shipping facilities. This plan would tend to relieve congestion by furnishing additional facilities and by inducing collateral railroad development.

"I have suggested some of the benefits which would flow from a waterway such as I have proposed. I now desire, as briefly as may be, to discuss the feasibility of the plan, and in doing so I deeply sense the fact that I am not an engineer and that my utterances may be properly characterized as those of a novice. There are, however, some demonstrated facts, certain things in being, to which reference can be properly had and upon which I can draw for information, and thus, in a measure, and to that extent, relieve myself from the charge of speculation so long as the analogy is unquestioned.

"One of these demonstrated facts is that a waterway for boats drawing not over 14 feet is already established and in operation on this proposed route. Last year the total canal traffic of Canada was 42,990,608 tons, of which the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is credited with 36,395,687 tons, the Welland Canal with 2,326,290 tons, and the St. Lawrence canals with 2,760,752 tons, and the growth of this tonnage in late years has been most phenomenal. For instance, the total Canadian tonnage in 1901 was 5,665,259 tons; in 1905 it was 9,371,744; and in 1910 it was, as I have stated, 42,990,608 tons. Now, if boats of 14 feet draft can sail from Lake Erie to the Atlantic Ocean by means of canal and river improvement, is it fanciful to say that the largest boats after greater improvement can do the same?

"In the first place, such a waterway as I propose must be practicable for the needs of navigation if it is to be undertaken. To be practicable, it must be so constructed and operated that boats may sail in reasonable safety, with proper dispatch, and under such international arrangements as will facilitate mutually the free and unnecessarily restricted commerce of both Canada and the United States.

"The St. Lawrence River route has been selected, because it has sufficient water and takes, as I have stated, the most direct course to the great markets of Europe. Open-water sailing is greatly preferable to canal navigation. Greater speed is possible. Accidents are less imminent. The cost is materially less. Some canals with locks will be necessary to complete the project, but the fewer of these there are the more desirable and practicable the route.

"I have stated that there already exists a waterway on this line for some boats. Canada alone has spent upon her locks and canals in the St. Lawrence, including the Cornwall Canal, and between Lakes Erie and Ontario about $97,000,000. Owing to the small dimensions of the Welland Canal and locks and of those in the St. Lawrence and to certain Canadian regulations as to lockages on Sunday, and so forth, comparatively few American boats use the St. Lawrence route, although the number is increasing. Last year 692 American vessels passed through the St. Lawrence Canal, or, rather, 692 trips were made by American vessels.

"If the locks and canals in the St. Lawrence and between Lakes Erie and Ontario are enlarged sufficiently, it will be possible for the largest boats to pass through them. Fortunately, the fall of water from Lake Erie to Montreal, which makes canals and locks necessary, also engenders the greatest dynamic force to be found on the continent. These moving waters contain a power which, properly harnessed and controlled, could drive a majority of all the machines of our mighty industries. And power is coming more and more into demand. To utilize that power dams below the rapids will have to be constructed. These dams will check the flow and create pools of deeper water over what before were rocks dangerous to navigation. Is it chimerical to believe that much of the waters in the St. Lawrence, now impassable for ships, may be made navigable by dams constructed for the purpose of generating power?

"There was pending before the Senate last session a proposition for a private corporation to build and operate such a dam at the Long Sault Rapids in the St. Lawrence, and the provisions in the proposed grant all had in view construction and operation in such a manner as to facilitate open water as well as lock navigation. And so valuable did the concessionaires regard this latent power in the waters that they are willing, not only to build their locks and dams so as to facilitate navigation, but they were willing to pay something per horsepower generated for this concession.

"This suggests the probable fact that the power possibilities of the St. Lawrence can be made to pay for improving much of the rivers. I am informed that by proper dam construction practically all of the rapids in the river save one can be overcome in this way, and with little expense to either country.

"How much of the improvement of the St. Lawrence can be secured through the development of its water power? Is it not of sufficient importance to empower and instruct the President to investigate and report upon?

"The Welland Canal would need to be enlarged, or a new canal dug, and larger locks constructed. But no mechanical prohibitions intervene. Whatever improvements are made in furtherance of this project must and should be made through a joint understanding, if not through the joint operation, of Canada and the United States. The waters lie in both countries. The benefits would inure to both. The binational control of these waters may make it desirable that improvements made in waters lying wholly in United States territory should be made by the United States, and improvements similarly made in Canadian waters should be made by Canada. And if improvements are made by impounding waters, as they should be wherever possible, the benefits from power should inure to the country in whose territory the power site is located.

"Improvements in boundary territory should be made by both countries and mutual power benefits should go to both.

"The fees from lockages should be apportioned according to location and benefit, but they should be reasonable and uniform. If, however, it shall develop that private power companies will not be found to construct dams, which will contribute materially to the accomplishment of the plan, or, if the total cost to Canada should seem to her prohibitive, I believe an international agreement can be entered into whereby the United States can perform the work without embarrassment to Canada.

"I am aware that there are canal projects now pending before the Ottawa Parliament, but none of them are as feasible as the international waterway which is here proposed. If this route lay all in Canada, no one in that country would consider the Georgian Bay-Ottawa River route, or any other, in preference to this one. This is a gigantic enterprise which is proposed, but it is in keeping with the spirit of modern enterprise, and with harmonious action on the part of these two great modern nations it can be accomplished to the glory and immeasurable benefit of both.

"It will cost much money, but its accomplishment will warrant the expenditure. How much it will cost I can hardly approximate, and yet we can find some information on the subject. In 1906, when President Taft was Secretary of War, a survey was made for the purpose of determining the cost of a 25-foot channel of sufficient width from Duluth and Chicago to Buffalo, and the total amount was $26,000,000, besides several millions to be expended in dredging some of the lake harbors to the 25-foot depth. This survey and estimate included improvement in the St. Marys River and locks costing $11,000,237; in the passage from Lake Huron to Detroit River, $2,334,180; in the Detroit River, $11,571,450; in Grays Reef passage from Lake Michigan into Lake Huron, $426,500; or, in all, $25,938,367.

"Canada has, as I have stated, expended $97,000,000 on portions of this waterway. It may cost both United States and Canada, on the distance between Lake Erie and Montreal, $150,000,000 for a waterway of sufficient depth to accommodate seagoing vessels. This amount may be materially reduced by assistance from power-developing companies. It may cost more than this sum. But Canada is seriously considering a water route from the Lakes to Montreal through Georgian Bay and the Ottawa River; and another by canal from the southern part of Lake Huron across to Lake Erie, and from Lake Erie either through the enlarged Welland Canal or a new one across to Lake Ontario, thence down the St. Lawrence to near Ogdensburg, and from there by canal to the Ottawa River, and then down to the St. Lawrence.

"There are too many canals in these schemes; too many obstacles to be overcome, it seems to me, and, besides, the course laid out by nature seems the reasonable one, and I believe it is possible for the two Nations to agree upon some system of improvement which will be mutually satisfactory and beneficial. Anyway, Mr. President, the project is so big with possibilities that it should be given the most serious thought and investigation by the two Nations which are, we hope, entering upon an era of good will and amity.

"To me this is a greater proposition than the Panama Canal. It has within it potentialities of great proportions. Had time permitted I could have shown something of the mighty commerce which would be benefited by this deep waterway. Last year more than $700,000,000 worth of tonnage sailed down the Detroit River. More than 50,000,000 tons of freight passed through the Soo Locks. Much of this immense value and tonnage was destined for foreign trade. Suppose it could have been loaded into ships which would carry it without reloading to its European destination. Can you comprehend the saving to industry, the gain to producers? With such a waterway established, our grain and other agricultural products raised for foreign consumption would not have to pay the tolls of reshipment and excessive railroad rates, and the farmer would get the benefits. The copper and iron manufactured for the foreign trade would be turned out at the furnaces, smelters, and factories erected upon the Great Lakes—an arm of the sea.

"Mr. President, this may be a dream, but some day the dream will come true. It may come in the distant future. But it will come. Impatient as its advocates may be for the hour of its consummation, they will not be discouraged. That it looks to the future for the realization of its hopes is no valid objection to any worthy cause."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I rise to make a few observations concerning this amendment, to express my opposition to it, and to explain my reasons for such opposition.

Let me disabuse the minds of Senators who have already spoken—the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], and others—who may take some interest in this matter, that I am opposing the amendment for any provincial reason. Some of the inferences to be drawn from the speeches already made in support of the amendment are entirely familiar to my ears. The suggestion that the city of New York is extracting tolls or tribute from the rest of the country is a very ancient one, and is used upon occasion with startling effect.

My purpose in rising to oppose this amendment, however, is not because I happen to be representing in part the State of New York in the United States Senate, but because I believe this thing to be an idle dream. I fear, however, that millions of dollars will have been spent before the truth will be admitted.

The amendment as drawn can not carry any other conclusion in the mind of the observer but that the Congress of the United States believes that it would be a wise and beneficial measure were the St. Lawrence River to be improved in order to permit ocean-going vessels to go into the Great Lakes. If this amendment is adopted by the Senate, it is safe to assume that Senators vote for it because they believe it would be a good thing to do, and believing it is a good thing to do, they want to know if it is an engineering possibility, and what method of cooperation can be brought about with Canada?

Mr. President, I am not at all disturbed, as has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, with any military danger which may result to this country, because, like him, I can not conceive of war between the United States and Great Britain or any falling out of a serious nature between the people of the United States and those of Canada; nor am I terribly concerned about injury to the port or the city of New York, for I do not believe that this improvement will have much effect upon the city of New York in the matter of the total commerce passing in and out of that port.

In order to further disabuse the minds of Senators who may believe that I oppose this provision because I happen to represent in part the State of New York in the Senate—and reference has been made to that so often that I desire to call your particular attention to it, and to emphasize it—I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a report made by the superintendent of canals of the State of New York to the governor of New York, under date of February 8, 1919. The superintendent of canals—or the superintendent of public works, as he is called in the State government—is Mr. Lewis Nixon, recently appointed to that position by Gov. Smith. He is well known as a business man of wide experience and also as a shipping man. Mr. Nixon, in his report to the governor, uses this language:

> The State of New York could not urge simply a selfish opposition on the ground that even if the proposed route proved desirable it might injure cities or localities of the State while benefiting the Nation as a whole.
> Such opposition would be based upon an admission of the fact that the new route would divert commerce from the complaining localities, and such diversion would not be caused unless the new route provided cheaper and better transportation, granting in advance that while such localities would be injured, the Nation at large would be benefited.

Let us discuss, if we may—and I confess I have to do it in a somewhat amateurish way—the possibilities, commercially speaking, of this project. For, mind you, I insist that if we adopt this amendment we commit ourselves to the advisability of it, subject to its practicability from the engineering standpoint.

The Senator from Wisconsin has described the work that needs to be done in the St. Lawrence River between Ogdensburg and the boundary line at St. Regis, involving, as I remember his figures, a drop in the river of 91 feet. He has not, however, described the work that must be done farther on down the St. Lawrence River, where the rapids are much larger and the obstacles are much more serious, where the drop in the river, instead of being 91 feet, is somewhere in the neighborhood of 300 feet, if my information is correct—I have not the exact figures with me.

It is contended by those who support this project that it is going to be commercially practicable to load a steamer, we will say, with some kind of goods at Liverpool, sail her across the Atlantic Ocean, up the St. Lawrence River, and then proceed to conduct her through a series of locks and dams in the St. Lawrence River, then, again, in the Welland Canal, and finally into the Great Lakes system. I contend that that will never be done, the reason being that if we interpose between the port of embarkation, we will say Liverpool, and the port of debarkation, we will say Duluth, 15 or 20 or 25 locks and many miles of canal through which the ships must go, an ocean-going steamer can not do it economically.

The maximum speed which a steamer can attain going through an inland artificial waterway is about 5 miles per hour. At every lock which an ocean-going steamer must pass through she must be delayed an aggregate of about one hour, including the passage through the lock itself. You can not support the crew of an ocean-going steamer going at that rate of speed though many locks. It can not be done. The cost of upkeep of a seagoing steamer is much greater than that of a Lake steamer or a steamer fitted to go through artificial waterways. The crew must be much larger and the vessel must represent a very much larger initial cost of construction. It is much cheaper to build a Lake-going steamer suitable for engaging in commerce on the Lakes than it is to build an ocean-going steamer suitable to conflict with all the elements of the ocean. The engines of an ocean-going steamer must be more powerful than those of a Lake-going steamer; her safety devices must be much more durable and elaborate, and in one way or another the man who builds a steamer to traverse the ocean must put in a good many more dollars per ton of cargo to be carried than the man who builds a steamer to carry cargoes upon the Lakes.

If you place in between the ocean and your Great Lakes port, we will say Duluth, a series of barriers which will reduce the speed of the ocean-going steamer from 10 to 16 knots an hour down to 5 knots an hour, the ocean-going steamer will not go into the Lakes.

This, I venture to say, is the opinion of Mr. Nixon, the superintendent of public works of the State of New York, and that is the argument which he suggests to the governor of New York in submitting his opinion as to whether this project is practicable.

Now, let us look at some of the distances which must be traversed. From Chicago to Port Colborne, which is the western terminal of the Welland Canal, is a distance of 880 miles. That includes passage through the Detroit River. One of the purposes of my inquiry of the Senator from Michigan was to ascertain the depth of water in the Detroit River, so as to get some light as to the conditions of navigation for an ocean-going steamer, because we are talking about steamers from Liverpool to Duluth or from Liverpool to Chicago. The distance from Duluth to Port Colborne is 980 miles and from Port Arthur it is 850 miles. It is 390 miles from Port Colborne, the western terminus of the Welland Canal, to Montreal, and as it is that distance, a vessel may make the trip from Chicago Port Arthur, or Duluth to Buffalo in about the same time she could go from Port Colborne to Montreal; in other words, it will take her twice as long to go the full distance to Montreal as it will to go a part of the distance to Buffalo.

I quote further from Mr. Nixon's report:

While some saving would be made in going through the deeper waters of Lake Ontario—

And Lake Ontario is the only open water that would be added in this proposed voyage; there would be open water on Lake Erie, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, and Lake Superior, but Lake Ontario is the only remaining open water on which a ship could attain her maximum speed—

While some saving would be made in going through the deeper waters of Lake Ontario, we must add to our estimated time the great delay met in the locks.

* * * * * * *

If adapted for ocean-going vessels, there would be about 20 locks in the whole voyage; and if for Lake vessels, there would be about 30 locks in the whole voyage. The average delay at such a lock will be about one and one-half hours—

I said a moment ago, to be safe, it would be about one hour—

even though the actual time of locking may not be over 20 minutes. Hence we must figure on about two days on such account.

Two days' additional time in the operation of a seagoing vessel!

Taking into consideration the fact that Lake vessels, costing large sums of money, can earn returns for only seven months, they must make as many trips as possible. As the cost of navigating such vessels is now about $500 per day, if they use the proposed route around Montreal they must charge rates that will drive freight to a cheaper route, if such cheaper route exists, and such a cheaper route does exist by way of the Lakes and the Erie Canal.

I am not afraid of this project from the purely New York City standpoint. What I see ahead is what has happened in so many scores of cases—the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars and a dream never coming true.

I know it is stated that all this amendment asks is that we shall get the information, but it has been the history of river and harbor projects—and I think the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] so stated the other day—that about 92 per cent of all the surveys made by our engineers or commissions are finally adopted by Congress.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the Senator has entirely misquoted me.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I have, I will be glad to be corrected.

Mr. RANSDELL. I said that 65.3 per cent of all the surveys referred to the engineers were reported upon unfavorably.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Unfavorably?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes. I have the report here. It will be found on page 2003 of the Engineers' report for last year, 1918.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What I meant was that 92 per cent of the surveys reported upon by the engineers were adopted by Congress.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator means those favorably reported upon?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. Well, that is hardly correct, although I would say a pretty good percentage of those projects which the engineers favorably recommend are finally adopted by Congress. I think the Senator's statement in general is correct; but of the projects which we refer to the engineers, they have reported unfavorably on 65.3 per cent since the Rivers and Harbors Board was created under the act of 1902. However, the Senator's statement that Congress finally adopts a good majority of those which the engineers favorably report, I think, is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps I expressed myself awkwardly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not mean to say that 92 per cent, but a great majority of those that the engineers favorably report upon are finally acted upon favorably by Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I merely wish to remind the Senator that one of the three American commissioners on the International Joint Commission comes from New England and another from North Carolina.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that that is not significant of anything to my mind.

Mr. LENROOT. My point is that they would not make a favorable report unless it was upon the merits; that is all.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I assume that the member who happens to be from New England will, of course, be as intelligent as the others, and, of course, will make an intelligent report as best he can. I would like to keep a local, provincial atmosphere out of this question, if I can.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make a very brief explanation, inasmuch as he has mentioned my name in this connection, I should like to say that the reports of the engineers upon river and harbor projects are quite different from a report that an international boundary commission might submit, because in the case of the reports made by the engineers there is first a local engineer, who surveys the project; then a division engineer, usually with the rank of major, but more frequently with that of colonel; then the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, composed of nine engineers of high rank, and then the Chief of Engineers. So it will be seen that a river and harbor project goes through quite a number of hands before it is finally acted upon.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Nixon proceeds:

We can bring a cargo—

And I think this discussion of his is pretty interesting, because we want to determine now whether we ought to go into this matter—

We can bring a cargo of 250,000 bushels of grain from Duluth to Buffalo, with return cargo of coal, making the trip in about eight days, at a cost of $4,000.

It may be mentioned in passing that it is going to be exceedingly difficult to get any return cargo to go up the St. Lawrence River into the Great Lakes and to reach Duluth. It may be a very attractive proposition to make, that you are going to load wheat at Duluth and take it to Liverpool by way of the St. Lawrence River in an ocean-going ship, but what is that ship going to bring back?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, does he understand what proportion of imports into this country from abroad go out into the Northwest?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is a very large proportion now. Our merchants and manufacturers, when they want to get exports from abroad, have to ship them by rail from New York or other Atlantic ports.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are they great in tonnage? That is the point.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They must be very great in tonnage.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think they are not anywhere nearly equal in tonnage to the exports of American wheat.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can well imagine that they might be.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would be immensely surprised if they are.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I imagine that they might be equal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not conceive that the imports from Europe into the northwestern section would anywhere near equal our exports of wheat.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If there is taken for illustration some particular bulky and heavy product, such as grain, the imports might not equal the exports in tonnage.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator suggest something that they bring in from Europe?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is brought in whatever the people use in the Northwest, just as in the case of New York; and under this project, if completed, the commodities imported would be brought to the place of consumption, or near the place of consumption, just as they are brought now to the eastern seaboard.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Most of the imports are small manufactured articles and chemicals, dyes, and other commodities not bulky in character.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What return cargoes has the Senator in mind that ships from abroad bring to New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The kind of cargoes to which I have referred, but we do a 12-months-a-year-around business. This Great Lakes project would only allow seven months' business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And that makes an enormous difference.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That may be true, but the same condition practically obtains in the one section as in the other. Furthermore, the ships coming from abroad would have possibly some traffic with Boston or some other place before they made the trip through the river or through the inland waterway, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But that would add to the expense.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; but——

Mr. WADSWORTH. The more stops a ship makes the more time she consumes and the more is required for crew pay and for coal consumption.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But as to many of the products that are shipped by water, the element of time is not of the very essence of the thing; it is important, but very frequently they have time enough to make the inland waterway trip, and they will have business all along through this river course, the whole length of it, so far as that is concerned.

I wish to ask the Senator with regard to the engineers, if it is a fact that the experienced engineers of Canada—and I think it is a fact—a great body of their very best engineers, favor this project as a practical enterprise, and if it be true that some of the very best engineers we have in this country believe that this scheme is practicable and feasible, is it not pretty safe to trust their judgment a little bit and say we will let you investigate and report to us upon this project?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is speaking of Canadian engineers?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; and ours also. I am assuming that this project has been approved by engineers from both countries.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not know what the engineers have approved; the Senator is better informed than I am upon that; but of course I can easily see how the Canadian engineers would approve it, because it will send all the Northwestern commerce past the port of Montreal, and, of course, ships passing in great numbers the port of Montreal will increase the business done there in ships' stores, in coal, and in supplies of all kinds. It is an entirely human desire on the part of the Canadians, and I do not blame them for it; I rather honor them for it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think it would be a wise policy for the United States to refuse to investigate this matter, and to let Canada build a canal through the Georgian Bay and Ottawa River down to the St. Lawrence at Montreal?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no faith in a Canadian canal reducing freight rates to Europe.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I may ask the Senator to assume that they are going to construct that canal, does he think it would be a wise thing for the United States to allow that to be done, when, through collaboration with Canada, we might construct the St. Lawrence route?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It seems to me we would be in the same position no matter which of the two routes should be adopted, because eventually either waterway goes through foreign territory.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It goes through boundary waters——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only for a little way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It goes through waters that are partly controlled by both countries.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but the mouth of the channel is completely controlled by a foreign government.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator has expressed himself very candidly and very truthfully when he says we have nothing to fear from Canada. Our relations are exceedingly friendly with that people; we are of the same race, practically the same people; have the same interests; and we have grown closer together than ever before. I think we could enter into commercial relations with Great Britain or with Canada in reference to this canal that would relieve us from any possible embarrassment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am discussing this matter from the commercial viewpoint, and I should like to be permitted to continue.

Assuming the lake freight at the high figure of 4 cents a bushel—

I think that is a high figure for the transportation of wheat from Duluth to Buffalo—the down trip would pay $10,000 and her return trip with coal will pay her expenses back.

I contend that the expenses of a ship that finds itself finally in Liverpool, having gone from Duluth, will not be paid by the return trip; and that that item alone will prevent ocean-going vessels from making these voyages freely back and forth up the St. Lawrence River and into the Great Lakes.

But if she went instead to Montreal the trip would cost about $4,500 for the nine days required. She would have no coal to bring back, and so, in taking, say, a day's less time to return, would spend about $4,000 coming back.

Unless, indeed, it is contended, and people are absolutely convinced, that the ship, instead of stopping at Montreal will go right on across the Atlantic to Liverpool; and that is what I think is a dream. I do not believe you will ever find it being done, on account of the slow rate of speed to which that ship must be reduced in the St. Lawrence River, being lifted up the locks, going through the canals, such as the Welland Canal, and being lifted up at the Welland locks, and the slowness of speed in going through the Detroit River.

And instead of making 20 trips the owner would count on only about 10 trips, so unless he could secure twice the freight from Duluth to Chicago he would not engage in such service, and such charge would block sending grain cargoes in this way.

Now, of course, the harbor tonnage at Duluth is enormous. It is splendid. So is the commerce passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal and through the Detroit River; but you must remember that a very large percentage of it is iron ore, which would not go down the St. Lawrence at all. It is unloaded at Lake Erie ports and sent to the steel mills of Pennsylvania and Ohio and West Virginia, where the coal is situated, to reduce it and manufacture it into steel. I do not know the percentage of iron ore and coal, but you must subtract from the total all the iron ore and coal, because none of that will be shipped to England. We are building on hopes that are not justifiable when we speak in these big figures of total tonnage. The trade is not going to go that way. It is not there to go.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from New York is discussing this matter from the standpoint of practicability, and necessarily he is basing his conclusion upon such information as he may have, and certain deductions which he makes from certain figures which he has presented to the Senate; but allow me to suggest this thought:

In Cleveland there are nearly a million people; in Toledo, 200,000; in Detroit, another million people; in Milwaukee, a half-million people; in Chicago, perhaps two and a half million people; with countless other ports and hives of industry on both sides of every lake in the Great Lake system.

Mr. NELSON. Do not forget Duluth and Superior.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, indeed—Duluth and Superior, very important lake ports. There are perhaps more grain elevators along the Lakes than in any other section of the country. This is a commerce that concerns perhaps 25,000,000 of people. There is perhaps more tonnage on the Lakes than in any other section of the country, or of the world, for that matter. A great portion of this tonnage must find its way to the European markets. It means an expenditure of millions and millions of money every year for transportation.

The question is this: With all this vast tonnage seeking an outlet, a goodly part of it heretofore going through New York, which has been likened by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the neck of a bottle, and the great West having been embarrassed because it could not get an outlet through New York—with all these vast interests at stake, does the Senator think it wise to voice his opposition to an amendment of this kind, which simply asks for information as to whether or not this is going to be a practicable proposition and what, if anything, may be done?

That is the only question before the Senate now, as I see it. I submit that I have voted for appropriations to deepen the channels in and about New York, and I am going to vote for more measures of that kind when they are presented, and I have done it, perhaps, on less information as to the necessity of those projects than we have now, showing the necessity for this new, proposed project.

It does seem to me that under all of the circumstances there ought not to be any objection to this very meager course. If later the fact is developed that it is going to be a squandering of the public funds to spend the necessary money to deepen the channel of the St. Lawrence River, let us take up that matter and decide it then. I submit that under the circumstances there ought not to be very much objection to the small appropriation which will be required for this purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Ohio persists in dragging in the poor old city of New York. I have taken pains to explain to the Senate—and I meant it when I said it—that I am not endeavoring to defend the city of New York. Whatever appropriations have been made for the improvement of New York Harbor have not been made upon my request. I have yet to appear before the Committee on Commerce and ask for a single item for the city of New York; and I wish we could brush aside this provincial way of discussing these things. I am trying to discuss this thing as a national proposition. I am trying to explain why I believe it is a dream, that it can not come true; but the trouble is, we do not learn in time in many of these cases, and we spend millions and millions of dollars before we learn that it is an idle dream. That is what I fear on this proposal—that we shall get committed to it. This very amendment commits Congress to this proposal if it proves to be an engineering possibility, or practicable. That is the straight, bare inference from it.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, I fail to see upon what such a conclusion can be based. We are asking for this information. I assume that if it is satisfactory, we are going to accept it. If it is not satisfactory, we are not going to accept it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The amendment directs the International Boundary Commission to report with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada. The plain inference is that we want them to show us how we can do it, and that we would like to do it if we can. The Senator from Ohio may get some other inference from it, but that is the inference that I get from it.

Mr. POMERENE. I assume, if the Senator will permit me, that the sponsors of this amendment have some faith in it; otherwise, it would not be introduced.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly. I have listened to their speeches.

Mr. POMERENE. But later on, when we get the recommendations from our Canadian friends or from this commission, I do not understand that we have foreclosed Congress by any means or that we are obliged to act upon their recommendations. They will be before us for our consideration, and we will no doubt act then with the light that we may get.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I desire to conclude as soon as I can.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall be very glad to answer a question of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no, no; go on.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The fear that I have in my mind upon these proposals, as I have seen them come up here year after year, is that once we embark upon this thing we can never turn back until we spend millions of dollars. The Senator from Ohio does not agree with me upon that proposal. He thinks we can withdraw from it later on if we see fit.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me again, I recognize the fact that there are some of these propositions in which surveys are made that are of very, very minor importance; but it can not be said that this is provincial in character or local in character. It affects all the people in the great industrial and farming West.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am endeavoring to discuss it from a national standpoint, not from a local or provincial standpoint, in spite of the inferences that seem to have been drawn from my remarks thus far by certain Senators. I have endeavored to show some of the commercial difficulties in ever having this project go through to a successful conclusion and in such a way as to actually make it possible to send ships from Duluth to Liverpool and from Liverpool to Duluth. That is what is in the minds of the Senators and other people who are back of this amendment. It would not be in this bill if they were not convinced that that could be brought about. I assert that it can not be brought about except at a freight rate higher than the rates that are being paid to-day.

Some, of course, may disagree with me upon that proposal, and I do not expect to be considered infallible about it. Assuming that you can do this, assuming that you can find freight to load into a ship which has just come into Liverpool from Duluth, and send her back to Duluth carrying a cargo that will at least pay her expenses, I should like to know why it could not be done through American territory; and in saying that I am not speaking as a provincial. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has already suggested, as I remember, that it would be nice to have it done through American territory if it can be done. It seems to have been forgotten that in a resolution known as public resolution No. 8, of the Sixty-fifth Congress, Senate joint resolution 13, approved on June 30, 1917, the engineers were instructed to survey a route for a ship canal, as well as to do other kinds of work, between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario; and I hold in my hand a letter written by Col. J. G. Warren, of the office of the division engineer of the Lakes division, addressed to a Member of the House of Representatives representing a district upon Lake Ontario, Congressman MOTT, in which he gives us this information:

MY DEAR MR. MOTT: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 12, 1919, referring to General Route Map No. 1-A, 1896, United States Deep Waterway Commission. In reply thereto I have to say that the survey or preliminary-examination report called for by the river and harbor act of July 27, 1916, "Waterway or ship channel between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario," was regarded by the War Department as having been included in the provisions of public resolution No. 8, Sixty-fifth Congress, S. J. Res. 13, approved June 30, 1917, "Investigation, including all necessary maps and surveys, of the entire subject of water diversion from the Great Lakes and Niagara River, including navigation, sanitary, and power purposes, and the preservation of the scenic beauty of Niagara Falls and the Rapids of Niagara River," etc., and the two reports will be rendered as one within the near future. This report will be accompanied by maps giving all the information contained on the map above referred to, and other information in addition thereto.

Very truly, yours,

J. G. WARREN,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

So within a few weeks, according to the Board of Engineers, we are to be informed whether such a ship canal can be built through American territory.

I do not think it is in a provincial spirit that I make this suggestion. I think it is rather in a national spirit that I make it. I have the same wish about this thing that the Senator from Michigan has. Assuming that this whole project, generally speaking, is successful—that is, assuming that an ocean-going vessel can get into the Great Lakes—I have the same wish that the Senator from Michigan has, that it shall be done through American territory. That is not unnatural. I do not think I am subject to rebuke for expressing that opinion. There are obvious reasons; and it does not mean that I dread British battleships coming up into Lake Erie, because they will not come, and they can not get there; for, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, the locks along the St. Lawrence could be blown up. But there are certain advantages arising from the country being in complete control of its own channels of trade; and those considerations have nothing to do with war. They have to do with very proper domestic considerations. I should like to see the canal, if we are to have one, go through American territory; and we are to be told in a little while, according to this communication which I have just read, whether or not it can be done between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

Frankly, I am not yet sufficiently internationalized to be satisfied with our commerce going through foreign territory to the same degree as I would be if it went through American territory solely. If I am out of step with the spirit of the times, I can not help it. I should like to see all our commerce originating in the interior pass out of our own ports if such a thing is possible. I should like to see our people self-reliant, able to take care of their own affairs, secure in their own commercial prosperity. I hold no grudge against any other nation, much less against our neighbors on the north; but if the wheat from Duluth can be taken more cheaply by water from Duluth all the way to Liverpool, I should prefer to see it go solely through American territory. So I suggest that we might stop and think a moment before we pass this amendment, which apparently proceeds upon the assumption that it is just as wise and just as proper and just as desirable to have all our northwestern commerce go past Montreal as it is to have it go past Baltimore, or Philadelphia, or Boston, or New York. Before we proceed upon that theory, I think we ought to find out whether it is not practicable, first, without opening the other question at all, to send it through American territory.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have finished.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield for a question, I should like to ask the Senator whether he is aware that not over two hours ago the Senate adopted an amendment for a survey of such a deep waterway entirely in American territory?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator then think that, having adopted that provision as an amendment to this very bill, Congress is committed to this provision with reference to this particular waterway?

Mr. WADSWORTH. As the two inquiries are not made of the same body—one is made of the Board of Engineers, as I understand, and the Senator will correct me if I am wrong, and the other is made of an entirely different body, the International Boundary Commission—I do not know which body is to express the policy of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but Congress, having adopted both provisions, has not committed itself to either policy, has it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has committed itself to both.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] disclaims any provincial feeling in respect of this matter, and I take this occasion to say that I know of no

Member of the Senate less liable to the charge than the Senator from New York. I think he considers these matters from a very broad standpoint; and I agree with him that if all the interior transportation through American territory and upon American waters alone might be accomplished, it would be preferable. But, Mr. President, in spite of the disclaimer of the Senator from New York, it can not be denied that much opposition to this proposal has developed through the apprehension that it would injure American seaports—a question to which I shall beg to refer briefly later.

The Senator from New York says that he opposes this because, in his opinion, it is an idle dream.

Mr. President, for more than two centuries the great Panama Canal was considered an "idle dream," and even as late as the beginning of the discussion upon that momentous proposition in the Senate of the United States it was so stated, and yet to-day it is an accomplished fact. There was much opposition in this country to the construction of that great interocean highway on the ground that it would not inure to the benefit of the Mississippi Valley and the country in the interior; and that is true, because the transportation to or from the Pacific coast before the Panama Canal was built was driven either around Cape Horn or across the continent on the American railroads. Yet as a whole the American people, not only upon the seaboard but in the interior, and the Senators and Representatives representing that great country lying between the Allegheny Mountains and the Rocky Mountains, supported it as a national project, and it is one of the great monuments of this country, and it has been and will be of inestimable value to us as a whole Nation.

Is this an idle dream? Why, I can remember when the claim that the Soo Canal and the St. Clair River could be so improved as to invite the great tonnage originating in that interior country was considered an idle dream, and great opposition developed to the appropriations for the development of that project.

Let me suggest the magnitude of the commerce and the extent of this interior waterway which it is proposed to connect up with the Atlantic Ocean. Here, reaching over 1,500 miles into the interior of the continent, is a natural waterway unequaled in the world. No other nation with the intelligence, the progressiveness, the population, and the vast extent of territory that we have would for a moment consider that it should be devoted purely to domestic commerce and should not be connected with the ocean. I am coming later to the question as to the proper outlet.

Considering for a moment the extent of this commerce, the latest accurate statistics which I have, for 1917, show the registered tonnage to and from the principal harbors upon the Great Lakes and to and from the Atlantic seaboard. I shall not weary the Senate with the details of these figures, but there passed through the Detroit River that year over 95,000,000 tons, and in 1918 it is estimated at over 100,000,000.

Mr. President, that is more than the entire registered tonnage from every port of the Atlantic seaboard. Let me, however, explain these figures, because I do not wish to make a statement which is at all unfair.

The tonnage reported does not include a certain intraharbor or local coastwise traffic in New York or Boston, because the tonnage up and down the Hudson River, through Hellgate and in that vicinity, of course, is not registered, and it is a very large tonnage.

This tonnage is not all iron ore. To be sure the larger part of it is. I presume out of the hundred million tons that went through the Soo Canal last year, probably 60,000,000 tons at least, and perhaps more, constituted shipments of iron ore. But there is also an enormous tonnage of grain, flour, coal, and other traffic carried westward upon the Great Lakes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator a question for information, not for the purpose of argument?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are the detailed tonnage figures the Senator has given both-way tonnage?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; both-way tonnage.

Mr. WADSWORTH. To which point; Detroit?

Mr. KELLOGG. The Detroit River and the Sault Ste. Marie Canal.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did the Senator say how much of that was coal? Does he know?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know how much of it was coal. Quite a large amount of it is coal and quite a large amount is heavy merchandise. In fact, St. Paul and Minneapolis, and as far down as Omaha and all that country to the west, depends upon the Lakes for the transportation of all or practically all its heavy products. Of course, the lighter products, the more valuable products, move by rail; but the wholesale merchants, the coal dealers, and others depend very largely upon Lake traffic for the transportation of their products.

Mr. President, it is stated by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that in his opinion we should not pass this resolution because it does not represent a practical route to and from foreign countries. That is exactly what we want to determine. That is the information we wish the Congress to have before it shall act upon the proposition. To-day there is a large amount of transportation of grain and flour through this route to Europe, all transshipped before it enters the Welland Canal and is transshipped again at Montreal.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, as the able Senator from Minnesota understands, my State of Illinois, which my colleague and myself represent, is incidentally interested in this project. Will the Senator be so good as to set forth, if it does not divert him, or at the point where it is appropriate, how this route would operate, if the resolution is carried, to obviate or remove the objection which the Senator has just now referred to, about double charges on the grain and freight from the West?

Mr. KELLOGG. Of course, if grain and flour will take that route to-day and transship twice en route, it naturally would take that route regardless of transshipment.

I repeat, I would much prefer that all our inland transportation should pass over American territory. I am coming to that proposition soon.

It is not the fault of the State of New York that that has been an expensive route. I believe it will be cheapened.

In past years I can remember when it cost more in lighterage charges for the transshipment of grain in the port of New York than it cost to transport it from Duluth to Buffalo. In fact, I have known of instances where the freight rate was 1½ cents a bushel, when it cost as high as 3 cents a bushel for transshipment in the port of New York. But no doubt those conditions have somewhat changed. I am not familiar with the figures to-day. I know freight rates are much higher between Duluth and Buffalo, owing to the scarcity of boats on account of the war and the enormous tonnage of last year. Nevertheless, heretofore the great ports of New York and Boston and other ports have been expensive ports through which to ship bulky freight such as wheat.

I deny that this commits us to any such proposition. In the first place, it is simply a request for information, not only information as to the canal on American territory between Lake Ontario and Montreal, but as to the canal which is upon Canadian territory between those same points, so that we may have complete information before us. Furthermore, we have adopted an amendment to the bill providing for a survey from Lake Ontario to New York, which I have no doubt would be what is known as the Oswego route. It is not a long distance from Oswego to the Erie Canal. Other things, as suggested by the Senator from New York, were also asked for.

There can not be any objection to this information. The Congress in 1917 passed a clause in an appropriation bill which called on the Secretary of War to estimate the cost of this canal in the St. Lawrence River; but no estimate can be accurate, and all the information furnished, unless it is done by the joint commission representing both Canada and the United States. What we desire is that that commission shall give us all the information. Then we shall have before us the information as to the Oswego route, as to the Erie Canal, and such improvements as may be necessary to create a great highway from the Atlantic seaboard to the Great Lakes.

Mr. President, as a further proof that the passage of this clause in the river and harbor bill does not commit the Congress to the construction of the canal, let me refer again to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain creating this commission. The commission came into being by virtue of section 9 and a statute of Congress providing for the appointment of the American commissioners and defining their duties. It is an active commission, already in existence, and there is no appropriation required to carry forward this investigation. The treaty provides:

> The International Joint Commission is authorized in each case so referred to examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances of the particular questions and matters referred, together with such conclusions and recommendations as may be appropriate, subject, however, to any restrictions or exceptions which may be imposed with respect thereto by the terms of the reference.

Let me invite the attention of the Senate to this:

> Such reports of the commission shall not be regarded as decisions of the questions or matters so submitted, either on the facts or the law, and shall in no way have the character of an arbitral award.

The only thing to be accomplished, or which is sought to be accomplished, by this resolution is that the joint commission which now exists under the treaty and the statutes of Congress shall make an investigation not alone of the project upon the American side but of the project upon the Canadian side, and shall report not only as to its expense but as to its feasibility, practicability, and usefulness in the development of the great commerce of this country.

What more proper board is there than the international joint commission of this country and of our neighbor on the north to report to Congress upon the whole project? At the same time we will have before us the reports of the engineers as to a route entirely within our own country. There is, of course, no necessity for a report of any international commission upon the project of a canal connecting the Lakes with the port of New York, which is provided for by the amendment by the junior Senator from that State. This will be made by the engineers of this Government; and I am desirous that this report should be made, because if it is practicable for us to connect this great inland waterway with the seaboard through American territory, so that commerce will be handled through our own ports, I would much prefer it.

But, Mr. President, that is no reason why we should not have before us all the information as to the other route, and that the other route is feasible is demonstrated by the fact that it is now used for a comparatively heavy tonnage from the Northwest under all the adverse conditions of the shallow canal. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] cites as his authority for the impracticability of the St. Lawrence route a gentleman who made the report upon the Erie Canal, and the principal reason stated is that the outgoing ships will not have a return cargo. Mr. President, a large part of the enormous traffic to-day on the Great Lakes from Duluth and other ports to Buffalo and Lake Erie and Atlantic ports and through the St. Lawrence River is carried on ships which do not have return cargoes. There is not traffic enough to cover all the eastbound tonnage. The grain and ore ships are compelled, to a large extent, to return empty. Nevertheless, from year to year the enormous traffic upon these Lakes from that great interior country has increased.

I am not going to argue the merits of the improvement of the St. Lawrence River until we have all the facts before us, although I am told by the best engineers and by the best commercial experts and shipping men who have been engaged in business on the Great Lakes for years that it is entirely feasible and would be one of the greatest improvements in transportation in this country.

Mr. President, as I said, there is a large return tonnage of commerce from Lake Erie ports and Lake Ontario ports to-day into that country. That country west has just begun to develop. There are vast undeveloped territories and resources to be thrown open to the enterprise of the American people. There is upon the south shore of Lake Superior in Michigan and in Minnesota and in Wisconsin an untold amount of iron ore of a low grade which to-day can not be transported because there is higher-grade ore of greater value available. But much of that ore is as high grade as is used in foreign countries. There are not only hundreds of millions but actually billions of tons of it. Who can say that, with a great waterway to the sea, we may not only supply manufactured articles but supply raw materials for the depleted markets of Europe? Already English merchants and manufacturers are looking to South America and to Cuba, as they previously looked to Spain and to Greece, for their ore supply. Why should we close our eyes to the possibilities of the enormous commerce which might come into that country or go from that country to Europe and to other foreign countries?

Mr. President, it has been said by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that the low speed which must be taken by ships going through the canal would so operate against it as a commercial proposition that it could not become feasible. The Senator from New York knows that in the transportation of heavy material the question of speed is of very minor importance, and that the question of tonnage and transportation and loading and unloading are the important features in the transportation of heavy articles by water.

Mr. President, I might say that not only is it said to be practicable by the best experts within my knowledge, but the recommendations of the engineers who have heretofore examined the canal upon the American side say that it is practicable. They simply say in their report that, "At the present time" until the Welland Canal is deepened, they do not recommend that the American Government undertake the improvement of canals on the American side. I think that is entirely wise. The Welland Canal is now being deepened to a depth of 25 feet, and the subsills and the substructure are so placed that it may be easily increased to 30 feet. I think I am correct. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] knows that the Welland Canal is being built so that it can with small expense be made 30 feet instead of 25 feet?

Mr. LENROOT. The sills are so constructed.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is one other suggestion that I have to make to the Senate, and that is the possibilities of the development of the water power upon the St. Lawrence River. There is no question that that is the greatest water power upon the Western Continent for development. It is estimated by competent engineers that there is a possibility, if these canals are built, of the development of 2,000,000 horsepower at a reasonable cost, the profits of which would more than support the entire canal. Everybody knows that here is a vast undeveloped water power which could be used to its limit without in any way affecting navigability of the streams or lowering in any way the level of the Great Lakes, while at Niagara, without destroying its wonderful scenic effect, such a development can not take place.

Mr. President, I have listened to the discussion upon this river and harbor bill for some days, and I should think that where we have an opportunity to obtain information without any expense to the Government, without any appropriation, without any binding effect as to whether we will or will not engage upon this enterprise, Congress would seek the opportunity to obtain that information and adopt this amendment. I am quite sure there is nothing in the law which can be in any way interpreted as binding the Congress to go on with this project, although I do believe that connecting these lakes with the ocean and perfecting the greatest inland waterway of the world is as certain as the construction of the Panama Canal was certain in the decades before it was considered.

I should like to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my discussion the table from which I have quoted.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States Shipping Board, Port and Harbor Facilities Commission, February 13, 1919.

NOTE.—Above statistics comprehend foreign, coastwise, and local harbor traffic.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I rise to discuss this question with some reluctance, for my colleague [Mr. WADSWORTH] it seems to me has quite fully covered the subject. This river and harbor bill has been under consideration for nearly a week, and I trust that it will pass to-day so that we may be assured of legislation before the end of the session.

Mr. President, I am interested in this matter very much, representing as I do, in part, the great State of New York, with its great commerce both on the ocean and the Great Lakes as well.

I have listened with some concern to the suggestion that if this examination is authorized and the improvement finally made, so that ocean-going vessels can trade from the Lakes through the St. Lawrence River to Europe, the business of the ports on the north Atlantic will suffer. Frankly, I am sure of it. In my judgment there is no doubt of the fact that Norfolk, Baltimore, New York, Boston, Portland, and other cities on the Atlantic seaboard will be more or less injured in their overseas commerce if this improvement is made.

Even if this is true, it ought not, however, to have a final and conclusive bearing upon this subject if this waterway would materially help our western country.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has referred to New York City as being the neck of the bottle and the difficulty encountered there in handling the commerce of the country in the early days of the war. The trouble at that time was that through lack of business management every department of the Government was endeavoring to send everything for our Army and Navy, both in Europe and this country, through that great city. In the last six months of the war, when we handled 100 per cent more business than during the first six months, the business of the port was taken care of without the slightest difficulty. Our whole transportation system worked just as smoothly as it ever had in the history of the city. To-day 50 per cent of the overseas commerce of the country goes in and out of our gateway, and with the proper arrangement of our facilities I have no doubt we could handle without difficulty even 100 per cent more than we do to-day.

This is a great national project, as has been well stated here by every Senator who has spoken. My colleague [Mr. WADSWORTH] has referred to its commercial possibilities and to the probability of its being not of a financial and commercial advantage to the States west of New York. He referred to the delays in shipping and the difficulty in obtaining return cargoes from Europe. Let me say to the Senate that to-day at least one-half of the American ships returning from the other side cross the ocean in ballast.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has referred to the fact that shipping coming east with ore and grain are filled to overflowing, while in many instance they go west from Buffalo without any cargoes at all, proving conclusively, it seems to me, the argument of my colleague, that the hope of getting through cargoes from Europe back to the West is certainly expecting something which seems to me to be exceedingly visionary.

Mr. President, I oppose this project for the sole reason that it is proposed that we shall lend our great financial support to the construction of an ocean-going waterway within the boundaries of a foreign country.

Like other Senators who have spoken, I have no fear of the possibility of war with Canada, but, as a great economic business proposition, I can not approve of the investment of millions of dollars in a project which practically all goes through the territory of a foreign country.

I do not forget, either, Mr. President, that the State of New York has contributed very materially, indeed, to the prosperity of the West in building the Erie Canal and afterwards in constructing the great barge canal so recently put in operation—a canal, Mr. President, which would be to-day of much greater benefit to the people of the West in the shipment of their products to the Atlantic seaboard if it were not for the fact that the railroad administrator has refused to route freight through the canal. We have spent $428,000,000 of the money of the people of the State of New York for the improvement of our great canal system, helpful, of course, to us, and materially tending to make ours the great port of the Nation, but also proving of enormous benefit to the States lying west of New York on the Great Lakes.

I know we have to-day, on my motion, adopted an amendment authorizing a survey in order to ascertain the possibilities of a ship canal through New York State. Its engineering possibilities undoubtedly can be worked out; whether or not it will be feasible ultimately as a great commercial proposition will bear the most careful examination.

Mr. President, it is scarcely conceivable that any American would favor joining with a foreign country in building a ship canal from our inland waters through a foreign country.

The Canadian Government has a perfect right to build a ship canal or any other improvement of their transportation facilities through their country at their own expense, but I believe that it should be plainly intimated to them that if they build a ship canal through their country that this country would look upon the project as being a means of diverting the commerce of the United States from American waters and ports, and no matter how deep or large a canal they would build, we would deem is our duty to build a larger and deeper one.

No matter what the action of the Senate may be to-day on this question, I am certain that the American people, when they come to understand it, will insist that if the Great Lakes are to be connected with the sea by a waterway for ocean-going craft it shall be through our own territory.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this question has been very thoroughly discussed by my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], as well as by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], so I will only occupy the Senate a moment in regard to it.

I desire to disabuse the minds of both the Senators from New York, for whom I have the highest regard and the utmost respect, of any hostility on my part to New York. While we were discussing the bill, when the Senator from New York offered as an amendment a proposition for the survey of the Oswego route from Lake Ontario to the headwaters of the Hudson, neither the Senator from Wisconsin nor myself made any opposition, although I knew that that route had been twice before surveyed, once away back in 1897. I hold in my hand House Document No. 86, first session, Fifty-fifth Congress, which shows that at that time there was a survey of this very Oswego route. I have just looked at the estimate of the engineers for the Oswego route, which was only for 20 feet depth of water, and find that it would have cost the country $200,000,000 at that time. If it would have cost that sum at that time, it will certainly cost 50 per cent more as prices now are.

Furthermore, it appears that the distance is upward of 483 miles, and to get a completely American canal would involve the construction of 42 locks. I was curious when the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] proceeded to discuss the difficulties of the St. Lawrence route, and I was tempted to ask him, but refrained from doing so, to describe the difficulties of the Oswego route—an all-American route—involving the construction of a multitude of locks far greater in number than would the St. Lawrence system; and that in a scheme that would only afford 20 feet of water.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will then Senator yield to me?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Oswego route, so called, would involve a canal 483 miles long?

Mr. NELSON. The Oswego route as contemplated was the only through route on American territory from Buffalo down on the American side. We have no route now; we are dependent on Canada for the Welland Canal. The Canadians built the Welland Canal; we have not put a penny in it, so far as I know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not understand how there should be any such distance as 483 miles necessary.

Mr. NELSON. I have the figures here—124 miles of it around Niagara Falls, and the balance is by the through route from Oswego, involving over 20 locks by that route. I will read from the engineer's estimate. There were three routes proposed.

The first-mentioned route extends from Lake Erie, via the upper Niagara River, to the vicinity of Tonawanda or La Salle; thence by canal, with locks, to the lower Niagara River at or near Lewiston, or to some point on Lake Ontario; thence through Lake Ontario to Oswego; thence up the Oswego and Oneida Rivers to Oneida Lake and through Oneida Lake; thence across the divide to the Mohawk River, and down said river to the Hudson at Troy; and thence down the Hudson.

That is the only way in which we could get an all-American canal.

We from the Northwest are generous enough—and I am sorry to see the Senators from New York, whom I very much love and respect, are not actuated by the same spirit—not to interpose any objection to the survey of the Oswego route. I have no hostility to New York, and although there have already been two surveys of the route referred to, I am willing that the Senators from New York should have a third survey. I am willing to secure all the information possible and have it presented to the Senate to the end that we may pass upon that question.

The Senator speaks about the cost. The Senator from Wisconsin, from the report that he read, demonstrated that the cost of improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence from Lake Ontario up to St. Regis would be $35,000,000; and it has been stated that the Canadians would undoubtedly, if we improved that stretch of the river, improve the other 68 miles to Montreal. If we could get an outlet to the sea for $35,000,000, I do not see why anybody should object.

My idea is that the commerce of the great West, of the inland empire, is growing so rapidly that we shall need both of these routes. I am not opposed to the New York route; and if, when the final survey comes, it is shown that is a feasible route and that we can get a ship canal from Lake Ontario, I shall be in favor of it; and if, in the meantime, we can also get an outlet to the sea by way of the St. Lawrence River, I am in favor of that.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. May I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that such discussion as I have heard on this question has referred to the Atlantic coast simply as the New York route? There is a Boston route, a Portland route, and a Providence route. All of those places have excellent harbors and, to some degree, unused harbors. I have time and again during the war urged the executive departments to divert freight from New York, when there was great congestion there, to Boston, when at one time one of the largest docks in this country there was being used simply as a barracks for men and was not being used at all for shipping purposes. To a great extent the port of Boston has not been used even during the pressure extending throughout the war. So that there are other facilities on the Atlantic coast which will be affected by this legislation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to say further—and I do not say it in a spirit of criticism—that we all know that the business in the harbor of New York is so immense that they lack the proper warehouses and elevator facilities for handling the commerce of the country. The great congestion that occurred among the railroad lines two years ago and a year ago was owing to the fact that a large number of the cars of the country had to be used for warehouse purposes, and acres and acres of them remained on the tracks in New Jersey loaded with commodities for which no warehouse facilities could be found.

I do not say this in a spirit of criticism either, but the elevator facilities of Buffalo are very poor. When we take our grain from the Northwest down to Buffalo, in order to get our grain into the canal boats or on board of the cars, we have to pay tribute to the elevators of Buffalo; and then when that wheat reaches New York we have to pay another tribute to the elevators and the warehouses, for such facilities as they have, to get that wheat transferred to the ocean steamers.

I am not saying that in a spirit of faultfinding; I am simply referring to it and pointing out that New York, even to-day, with its river and harbor facilities, has not the capacity to handle the water-borne commerce of the Northwest. What we want is an opportunity to utilize the St. Lawrence route; and then if the Oswego route is practicable I want to utilize that. I am not actuated, and we of the Northwest are not actuated, by any dog-in-the-manger policy. We are willing, if possible, to get a ship canal from Lake Ontario to the headwaters of the Hudson, so that ocean steamers can go that way; and we shall be proud when that day comes. It will take a long time to build that canal, while a little improvement in the St. Lawrence River, at a cost of $35,000,000, will bring us to the ocean.

As I have said, according to the survey made in 1897, the estimated cost of the proposed Oswego canal was $200,000,000. If that was the estimated cost in those days, it can safely be said to-day that it will cost $300,000,000.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that we of the Northwest have made no opposition to the survey of the Oswego route, in view of the fact that we are willing to have that route surveyed and have it considered along with the others, I submit that, in a spirit of reciprocity, Senators from New York ought not to oppose our amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Gerry	King	Moses
Bankhead	Harding	Kirby	Nelson
Calder	Hardwick	Knox	New
Cummins	Henderson	La Follette	Norris
Curtis	Hitchcock	Lenroot	Page
Dillingham	Johnson, Cal.	Lewis	Penrose
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Lodge	Pollock
Fletcher	Kellogg	McKellar	Ransdell
France	Kendrick	McLean	Reed
Gay	Kenyon	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth
Sheppard	Spencer	Townsend	Wadsworth
Sherman	Sutherland	Trammell	Weeks
Smith, S. C.	Swanson	Underwood	Williams
Smoot	Thomas	Vardaman

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are detailed on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have taken no time on this bill, and I desire to take very little now; but I am neither international enough nor perhaps national enough to be wholly regardless of what would be the very great injury, in my judgment, to the commerce of all the New England ports, and especially of the city of Boston, in the State which I, in part, represent.

If there is no other way by water of getting the products of the West cheaply to the coast, of course, we must do it by the St. Lawrence route; but it seems to me that we ought to think long before we join with another country, no matter what it is, to make a waterway which we can not control. The people who control the mouth of the river control the river. We are asked to spend what will be an enormous sum in opening up the St. Lawrence River, and after it passes beyond the international waterway at the northern boundary of New York we have no control whatever over it. If any waterway can be found through our own country, I think the ship canal should be made in that way, either by the Erie Canal or by the junction of the Mississippi with the Great Lakes. If that were to be accomplished, it would give all the commerce of the Great Lakes immediate access to the ocean. We could do both, if necessary—reach the Gulf and reach the Hudson River.

I only rose to say that I hope we shall not enter on this scheme until we are entirely satisfied that it can not be accomplished through American territory. I think, from every point of view, that is extremely important. If the mouth of the St. Lawrence—in fact, several hundred miles of the St. Lawrence before you reach the ocean—is in the control of Canada, difficulties and disputes may arise at any moment, because they can put their hands on the river and close it at any time. The power of Holland to close the Scheldt made it necessary to have a general treaty entered into by all the nations to secure its free navigation. Therefore, before we spend these enormous sums of money on a waterway which is controlled by another country, I think we certainly ought to look into our own opportunities and see what can be done there.

Moreover, Mr. President, I am not aware that this international joint commission is an engineering commission. It was made up, I suppose, as a diplomatic commission. It is running a little short of work, and it is very natural that there should be a human desire to keep it in operation. If we are to have a report, we ought to have an engineers' report, just as we shall have an engineers' report on the Erie Canal route or on the Mississippi route; but I do not think this international joint commission, unless it employs engineers, can give us the sort of report we ought to have.

I wish very much that this could be postponed, for it is a very large undertaking, which will take a great deal of money. I wish it could be postponed until we are satisfied that there can be no route made through American territory which will give cheapness of transport to the products of the agricultural West, and yet at the same time keep it within our own boundaries. As we are engaged now in promoting peace I think we had better not start anything that is likely to lead to international discussion, and as long as the waterway is in our own territory there is no danger of any international discussion.

It is for that reason that I regret that this amendment should have been placed in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is already a provision of law providing for a report upon the feasibility and importance and engineering difficulties or smoothness of a route from Lake Ontario to Lake Erie.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I am aware of that. I knew that was the case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know. I am mentioning that now. That being the case we certainly ought to have full information about the engineering difficulties or facilities and about the cost and commerce of the St. Lawrence route, so that we can compare the two with one another.

The Senator talks about an endless world of money to be spent. That has not been determined yet. All that is involved in this amendment is to get the requisite information, so that Congress may be prepared to act. Congress does not want to act upon the information about this route alone, but it wants to act after a comparison of the information about this route and the information about the other route.

As to international difficulties, I do not see any. For 100 years we have kept the border between us and Canada without a soldier, hardly a policeman, though now and then there have been a few of them. We have had no ships of war on the Great Lakes from the first. The more we can bind ourselves to Canada, the more we can bind Canada to us by mutual commercial interests, hard to untie, almost indissoluble, the better for Canada and us both.

In the first place, I do not think the Canadians want any trouble with us, and certainly we do not want any with them. Although a so-called distinguished statesman some years ago did get up and make a speech about our annexing Canada, I do not think there is an American who wants to do it. What we want to do, as far as our international relations with Canada are concerned, is to make our commercial relations just as close and intimate as we can, so that it will be against the interest of both parties ever to have any quarrel, or, if they have it, ever to drive it to a bad result.

I hope this amendment will be adopted, and I am largely led to that by the opinion and the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only want to say that nothing that the Senator from Mississippi can say about the desirability of good relations with Canada can exceed what I feel myself in regard to it. I think we want to make those relations as close as possible. I have always thought so; and one way of making them as close as possible is to avoid subjects of dispute.

Not so very long ago we had a dispute with Canada of the most serious kind, which led to the dispatch of American troops to the Canadian border in Alaska. The Alaskan boundary question was of the most serious kind, and it was fortunately settled; and many other questions with Canada were subsequently settled. I do not want any of those things ever to arise again. I want to avoid any possibilities of dispute. Therefore, I say that we are taking some risk when we put the control of a large portion of our most important commerce in the hands of another country. With the best wish on both sides to be friendly, it is a dangerous relation to establish, and certainly it ought to be entered upon only with a good deal of careful consideration, because, though we may change many things, we have not yet succeeded in repealing human nature, and I want to avoid any cause of difference.

That is the reason that I have spent a good deal of time and effort on a number of treaties that we have had with Canada. We have gotten all of the questions pretty well out of the way, and it is one of the best services possible; for nothing is more important, to my mind, than the closest possible relations of friendship—real friendship—between the United States and our neighbors to the north.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course I never was fool enough to imagine that anybody could repeal human nature, except the special grace of God, and even that is denied by some religious creeds; but you can appeal to human nature.

The Senator tells me that he wants to avoid causes of conflict between us and Canada. So do I; but indulging in joint cooperation for a joint and common purpose for the benefit of both countries is not creating a cause of conflict. It is creating a cause of sympathy and of cooperation, of harmony of action and purpose. The very thing that led to the union of these States was a common desire for a common commerce.

The Senator says that if we go into this we surrender to Canada the control of the route of a part of our commerce. We do not do anything of the sort, nor does Canada surrender to us the control of that part of the route that goes through American territory exclusively. The whole thing will result in this, if it results in anything—a mutual agreement between the two countries that the two countries together shall manage an international route of commerce in amity and friendship and harmony. It will not lead to conflict. It will lead to the consciousness of a common interest; and the thing that can ally two people most closely together is a consciousness of a common interest.

The mere pocketbook and commercial interest itself as this would be is not quite as strong as some other interests, as the consciousness of a common interest, as a common language, religion and law and literature, but it is one of the strongest ties in the world.

We have an international commission down here on the southern border that manages the international water courses, and it has not raised any row with Mexico nor Mexico any row with us. On the contrary, it has avoided a good deal of trouble. God made this continent and made a part of it Canada and made a part of it the area of the United States, and the mere geography has very little to do with it. The question to determine is how you can most cheaply and most expeditiously get the products of the western country to the seaboard along the Great Lake borders. If we can do it by an international route all the better. If you can do it by an American route that is preferable; adopt it, but for Heaven's sake get information upon both projects before you act upon either.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] who has been called away on official business. I vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. I believe the senior Senator from Kansas would vote to support the committee, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

Mr. LODGE. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—43.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment of the committee, which was passed over, which will be first in order. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Arizona after the consideration of the committee amendment. The amendment of the committee, which was passed over, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, in the item relative to the Blackwater River, Va., and certain streams in North Carolina, the amendment of the committee begins with line 18, where it is proposed to strike out the word "completing" and to insert "For maintenance, $2,000; for."

Mr. SMOOT. This amendment was passed over, but since the request that it be passed over there has been a general policy carried out in the bill to strike out the word "completing," as provided by the House, and insert "for maintenance." As every similar provision of the bill, and there are about 20 of them, has been agreed to I see no reason why we should not agree to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In the same paragraph, line 22, insert a semicolon and the words "in all, $7,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, at the end of line 23, insert the following:

Colorado River, Ariz.: For maintenance for the Government levee on the Gila River, near its junction with the Colorado River at Yuma, $10,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate not more than a minute I hope. I have not detained it much lately.

Many years ago I got an appropriation through Congress for constructing a levee where the Gila River runs into the Colorado at Yuma. About that time the great irrigation work was started at the headgate just below the city of Yuma. This levee was built to prevent the great backwaters in the Gila River rushing across the town and washing out the foundations and destroying the irrigation works not only at the town but affecting also the works below it.

This item has been on the bill for many years. There have been one or two small appropriations made. It was reported by the House committee, but it was ruled out on a point of order owing to the fact that they did not know it was already provided for by the Government. The engineers report $10,000 as necessary to prevent the great floods which come as soon as the snows melt in the mountains. I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Change the total, in line 23, to read "$151,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRBY. I submit the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add a section in the bill, to be known as section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. If the Secretary of War shall determine that the contract for levee work entered into with Walter H. Denison, but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entry of the United States into war with Germany, became inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of materials, labor, and other conditions arising out of the war, he is hereby authorized and directed to pay said contractor for the work fully completed under said contract between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, the date of approval of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," an amount in addition to the terms fixed by such contract just and equitable in consideration of increased costs of labor and materials and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war. The amount of the increase to be paid shall not exceed the actual loss, without any profit considered sustained by the contractor, caused by increased cost due to the war, in performing the contract and fully completing said work between the dates as above set forth: Provided, That in no case shall the additional compensation exceed 30 cents per cubic yard for the material placed, and there is hereby appropriated a sum not exceeding $18,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the carrying out of this provision.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to explain this amendment for just a moment to the Senate. This man, Mr. Denison, and others entered into a contract before this country entered the war, and he completed his contract after the war was declared and under conditions produced by the war at a great disadvantage to himself and before the relief act of July 18, 1917, was passed.

I introduced a bill that would have taken care of all those whose contracts were made before the country entered the war and were completed after the country entered into the war and before the relief measure of July 18, 1917, was passed. That bill went to the committee. The committee were minded at first to recommend the passage of the amendment, but finally they said it would not take care of men who were relieved by the act of July 18, 1917, for work thereafter done, who were probably entitled to as much consideration for work done between the two dates as a man who had completed his contract. They did not want to go into all that at the time. So they agreed to recommend a bill that would take care of this particular claim, because they were acquainted with the conditions under which this work was performed. The committee agreed to recommend the bill. After that these other contractors came with their claims before the committee, and the committee then took up and introduced a new amendment providing for the adjustment and payment of the losses sustained by contractors for work done between our going into the war and the passage of the act for relief, July 18, 1917. That amendment was recommended by the committee and went out upon the objection raised by the Senator from Utah upon a point of order.

Under those conditions I have thought that this man's claim might be considered here. He made his contract before the war, and after the war was declared he did not wait, like some other contractors, to see whether the Government was going to take care of him by an increase of pay. He went ahead and completed his contract, although at such a loss to himself that he went broke and had to sacrifice all his property to take care of it.

He completed his contract, and the division engineer assured him that if the Government gave relief to anybody it certainly would give relief to those men who stood by their contracts with the Government and performed them without regard to loss to themselves. This man did that.

It is proposed that the War Department, which is thoroughly familiar with this situation, shall enter into the matter and make an estimate and see how much he has been damaged. They understand it, and it is proposed that they shall be authorized to pay this man so much, not to exceed $18,000. The man lost a great deal more than that, but he did not attribute it to war conditions. He built a levee upon land that sunk after the levee was built, and he had to build another levee. He lost about $60,000 on the contract, but he attributed only $18,000 of it to loss caused by the war and war conditions. He had to sacrifice all his property, about $100,000 worth, to complete his contract. He is absolutely broke now and $2,000 in debt, with all his property gone.

The objection to leaving this go to the Court of Claims, as some of these other contractors propose, and to allowing the War Department to examine into it and report it to the next Congress, is that he is in a worse condition than the other contractors, because he is absolutely broke. Regardless of whether his right is superior to theirs or not, his condition is much worse, and it seems to me it demands relief now.

There is another objection raised. Some have said that the War Department ought not to be allowed to make an award that could be paid by an appropriation. But I will say to the Senate that we have passed a bill allowing the War Department to make adjustments of these informal contracts and contracts canceled because of the armistice. We have allowed them to make adjustments and settlements up to one and one-half billion dollars. If they can do that, it might be very well to make this adjustment of $18,000 here, or whatever amount is found to be due this man. I should like greatly to see this amendment adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will join the Senator from Arkansas in passing a general law authorizing investigation into all governmental contracts. I recognize the fact that there is not merely one but that there are tens of thousands of such cases. I think they perhaps do not find themselves in so bad a condition as the Senator has described, though they are in a condition which needs relief; but I can not believe a river and harbor bill is the place to begin that sort of legislation. Contractors all over the United States ought to be relieved if any one class is going to be relieved. I discussed this question this morning, and I do not want to take the time of the Senate on it now, but paragraph 4 of Rule XVI provides that—

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

This is a private claim upon an appropriation bill, and I therefore make the point of order against it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Utah not to make the point of order against the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. KIRBY], but to let the Senate vote upon it. The circumstances as stated by my colleague are somewhat pathetic. This is the one man in connection with river and harbor works who sacrificed the accumulation of years in order to make good his contract with the Government. That was done after it became known to him that his contract was a losing one. Provision was made in the river and harbor bill of last year for those who took the precaution to suspend the completion of their contracts or who failed to carry out their contracts. This man carried out his contract at the sacrifice of his fortune. I am told that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors investigated this claim in detail, and every member of the committee was satisfied that the man was entitled to immediate relief. I hope, therefore, that the Senator from Utah, in view of those circumstances, will give us an opportunity to vote on the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say, in answer to the Senator from Arkansas, that I had an instance brought to my attention from my own State only on last Saturday in which, in the year 1916—I think it was in 1916—a contract was made for the erection of a public building in the city of Richfield, Utah. Mr. Young was the successful bidder to erect that building. In a very little while war was declared. This was in the latter part of the year 1916. He was, however, compelled to finish the building within a certain time. He went on and finished the building, and he not only lost all that he had on earth, but he lost $30,000 besides.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Where was that?

Mr. SMOOT. That was in Richfield, Utah.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I mean where was the $30,000 that this man lost? The Senator stated that he had lost all that he had on earth.

Mr. SMOOT. He had a friend that indorsed his note for him, and he has to pay the note. Why should we begin now to take individual cases and put them on an appropriation bill? It seems to me that if we are going to pass any kind of legislation, it ought to be general legislation, to take care of all such cases. The Senator knows that if this one claim gets on this bill there will be thousands of other individual claims offered. The proper way is to pass legislation authorizing investigation into all such claims and providing that the Treasury of the United States shall pay whatever loss has been sustained.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Senator from Utah to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I know it is not in order to discuss what occurs in the committee, but I wish that the Senator from Utah may know just what did occur. Mr. Denison came before the committee and made a statement of his claim against the Government. I, and I think every other member of the committee, was impressed with the truthfulness of the statement and the circumstances under which this man labored. The splendid spirit which he manifested, fulfilling his contract when he knew it would absolutely bankrupt him, challenged my admiration. He went ahead bravely and sacrificed his entire fortune that his obligation to the Government might be absolved. He came before the committee, not asking for all he had lost, but, like the honest, candid man he impresses me as being, he said, "There are thirty or forty thousand dollars that the war did not cause me to lose. I only desire that the Government should pay my losses that were caused by the war." The engineers, I understand, estimated that the losses sustained by Mr. Denison are about $18,000—less than one-third of what his losses really were. Now, this man is left without a penny in the world. The Government of the United States owes him this money; the Government of the United States can not afford to deal unjustly or drive a hard bargain with an honest, straightforward man of that character; it can not afford to deal unjustly with anybody. I do hope, therefore, the Senator from Utah will not make the point of order against the amendment. I have no interest in this man; never saw him before he came before our committee; but he impressed me as such a splendid, honest, straightforward fellow that I was touched by his appeal, moved by the justice of his cause, and I should like very much to see this small part of the loss which he sustained returned to him. A great Government such as the United States can not afford to be unjust to one of its citizens.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall yield in just a moment. I desire, first, to answer the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

I have no doubt that all the Senator says is true; and when I received the letter from Mr. Young, to which I have referred, it appealed to me. I felt as though all such cases ought to be relieved. I do not agree with the Senator that the Government owes this man the money; I mean technically; but morally the Government owes him the money, and not only owes him money, but it owes thousands of others money, and I am perfectly willing to say that they will all receive compensation from the Government for the losses they have sustained, if not this year, very early in the future.

Mr. President, I can hardly stand here and withstand the appeal of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], knowing, as I do, that this man is virtually entitled to relief; but I do say that the amendment is out of order. If, however, it will relieve this man in the situation in which he is, I am not going to be hardhearted, but say give him the money, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, perhaps I ought not to consume any further time, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has so kindly assumed the attitude which he has, but I merely want to increase the satisfaction to which he is entitled arising from the action which he has taken in this matter.

I do not know of any case which has appealed to me so strongly as has this case of Mr. Denison. I appreciate the reasons which impelled the Senator from Utah to take the attitude he did when this matter first came up. I think it does him credit and does him honor, so far as that is concerned. The Government of the United States needs men like him to protect it on this floor, but I do not think, Mr. President, there will be many cases that will present such strong facts to appeal to us for prompt action as does this case.

As was stated, this man has lost all his fortune. He went to the engineers while he was carrying on his contract and asked them to be permitted to throw it up; not to get any profit out of it, but simply to throw it up. They said, "No; go on and finish it." They appealed to him from the patriotic standpoint, and, though knowing the loss that he was bound to suffer, he went on and finished the work.

There was one thing, however, to which he did not call attention, but I am going to call attention to it. While he was doing this work, when he appeared before the committee he had five stars on his breast, and it seemed to me that a man who had evidently made the sacrifices for his country that he had made ought to be taken care of in a matter of this kind, at least to the extent that he has been in the amendment. I was willing and glad to have that amendment put on this bill, and I believe the Senate ought to adopt it. He ought not to have to wait the length of time that most of these people will have to wait to get their claims settled, if they ever get them settled.

I wanted to make that statement, because I know that it will add to the good feeling that the Senator from Utah will have for withdrawing his point of order, which point was good under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to say also that the whole committee was in favor of this amendment. While others all about him were throwing up their contracts this man kept on with his and completed it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has been recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MOSES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. In appealing to the Senator from Utah to withdraw his point of order a moment ago I did not conceive that the amendment was subject to the point of order. I desire now merely to call attention to the decision on page 161 of the Precedents. I thank the Senator from Utah, in view of the issue raised, for withdrawing the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator is going to question the point of order, we can have that settled at once.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not care to do that; I merely desired to call attention to the Precedents.

Mr. SMOOT. Under paragraph 4 of Rule XVI—

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

And not only that, but the amendment is clearly obnoxious to paragraph 3 of the same rule. So that there is no need of discussing it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no desire to provoke a discussion of the matter. I merely referred to the precedents.

Mr. PENROSE. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. MOSES. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 34 it is proposed to insert the following:

Merrimack and Piscataqua Rivers, Mass. and N. H., with a view to constructing a canal between the same as a link in proposed intercoastal waterway from Maine to Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That each of the appropriations herein made shall become available only in the event States, counties, cities, corporations, or individuals shall pay into the Treasury as part of the same one-fourth of the amount thereof: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to those items requiring contributions from sources other than the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is manifest that it is impossible for Senators individually to examine into the merits of each of the projects that are presented. There is no doubt in my mind that every river and harbor bill contains unworthy projects, and there ought to be some way of eliminating them other than personal examination by each individual Senator, because it is impossible for him to perform such a task.

The proposition which is contained in this amendment is that before the appropriation shall become available States, counties, cities, corporations, or individuals shall contribute to the National Treasury one-fourth of the amount thereof. That is an automatic test which will determine whether or not each project is wise. If the localities—the States, the counties, and the cities—to be benefited will not put up one-fourth of the amount, then we can say that those who ought to know more than any others as to the merits of the project are unwilling to invest their own money in it, and therefore the project may be dismissed as without merit.

This question I have brought before the Senate, I think, every year during the period of my service here, and I must say that it has grown on me that it would be advisable to make a test of this kind in order to determine the merits of these enterprises. In every discussion of this measure we are confronted with a situation where some member of the committee will rise and say, "This is an excellent project," while another Senator, a man of equal integrity—and both believing absolutely in what they say—will contend that it is an unworthy project. How can a Senator determine a question when it is impossible for him to read all the testimony that has been taken or all the recommendations that have been made? In the end we vote blindly upon these proposals.

Mr. President, there is no test quite equal to the requirement of subscribing money to aid and assist an enterprise. We find the committee to a large extent has recognized this, for the chairman of the committee, in speaking of the Houston, Tex., project contained in this bill, said that the local community was required to put up 50 per cent of the cost of the improvement, and that that was a very good recommendation of the merits of the enterprise. This amendment does not require 50 per cent, but it requires that there should be some exhibition of good faith in the project on the part of the counties, cities, and States. I repeat that I can conceive of no better test as to the merits of a project.

This subject has been investigated thoroughly. The Congress of the United States in 1910 appointed a waterways commission, and that commission examined into the question for months. Some of its members went to Europe to study the problems there, and many of them examined the projects that are in the United States. I wish to direct attention to what that commission recommended. It was called the United States Waterways Commission, composed of seven Senators and five Members of Congress, of which Senator Theodore E. Burton, so long chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, was the chairman, and here is what it reported upon the subject under discussion:

In recent years there has been a noticeable lack of uniformity in the method of providing funds for these improvements.

Referring to river and harbor improvements——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if it is not a fact that many of the States have done as suggested, and many would expend further sums for the development of their inland waterways, except that it is now becoming the habit to secure appropriations from the Federal Government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have not any doubt that the temptation of the Senators or the Representatives of any State to have the Federal Government pay the entire amount would be natural, and I have not any doubt that appropriations for unworthy projects creep into the bill that would not be favored over some meritorious projects.

The State of New York in the year 1903, by popular vote, adopted a constitutional amendment providing $101,000,000 for a barge canal. In the year 1908 the people of Illinois, by the same method, voted an amendment to the constitution which allows the issue of bonds by the State to an amount of $20,000,000 for part of the expense of a deep waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. In the original authority for the Chicago Drainage Canal provision was made that it might be a link in, or part of, a navigable waterway from the Lakes to the Mississippi River. At a very recent date provision has been made for a private canal in the State of Massachusetts, with a view to shortening the sailing distance and avoiding the dangerous passage in the open sea around Cape Cod. This enterprise contemplates the expenditure of private capital for the construction of the canal, also the charging of tolls. In numerous instances in other States, as in Oregon, Washington, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and California, provision has been made for waterway improvements, either independently or in cooperation with the General Government.

Some municipalities have also voted large sums for harbor improvements. At the last session the Legislature of Texas passed a law authorizing the formation of navigation districts, which districts may issue bonds, levy taxes, and condemn property in the prosecution of river and harbor works. At the last general election, in 1909, the people of Rhode Island authorized the expenditure of $500,000 for the improvement of Providence Harbor.

Mr. President, the difficulty with the present system is its unfair treatment of those who have to put up the 50 per cent or the 40 per cent. In the appropriation bill of 1916 I recall that Los Angeles was required to put up $900,000 to supplement an appropriation that was given by the Congress. The amount which the Government itself provided in the bill was $1,000,000, and Los Angeles was required to do certain things, the accomplishment of which cost $900,000. It is not fair that we should require large private subscriptions in one section of the country and impose no condition of expense upon people of other sections.

Mr. President, I have placed the percentage low because of the fact that it might work an injustice to some; but it seems to me that it can not work an injustice where the amount required to be put up is only 25 per cent. We know that these projects are a benefit to the States and the counties and the cities and the individuals, often, and the corporations, especially where corporations have terminal facilities affected. Is it possible that we are going to donate appropriations of this kind where they receive a distinct benefit? If you were to pass a general law affirming the principle in this amendment, it would be found that all those advocating meritorious projects would be glad to take advantage of the three-fourths aid which the General Government would give under this provision.

Mr. President, we find that there are many instances in the bill where some State or local authority, or authority other than the Government, is required to contribute various amounts; or, if not various amounts, certain things are required to be done that will cost either the municipality or the State or the county a large sum of money. I have intended to eliminate those cases.

I do not think it is right to tax them for that and then impose an additional tax upon them; and therefore I have provided that the provisions of this section shall not apply as to those items requiring contributions from sources other than the Government. That, it seems to me, would induce every community to come to the front for an enterprise which contains merit.

There has grown up a practice, general throughout the country, of communities presenting demands for appropriations for projects, the promoters having less concern for the merit of the project than for the desire to have the funds expended in its construction and the consequent advantage to the community through such expenditure. Frequently we are confronted with the petition of a community for harbor development or river improvement, even though such improvement would add nothing to the Nation's facilities for movement of commerce. These demands are presented to Senators and Representatives by their constituents and urged upon them with a positiveness and insistence which can not be ignored. Now, under this amendment a proposition of doubtful merit would not be urged upon Senators.

There was a suggestion for improvements of the character described made by a man in my city. We have a small stream called Cherry Creek, which runs through the city of Denver, and is a dry bed part of the time. The demand was made, "Why do not you get several hundred thousand dollars to improve that stream?" The natural reply was, "Why, it is not a navigable stream. It is absurd to suggest spending money on it." "Well," said the enterprising citizen, "the others get such appropriations, and the money would be spent here." Nobody presented to Congress any such proposition as that; but at the same time you can readily see that where citizens are persistent in their demands the project need not be so worthy as one where the person is willing to go down in his pocket and put money into the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of bringing about the improvement.

In Chicago there was constructed a great waterway between the Lakes and the Gulf. Should the taxpayers of Chicago or of the State of Illinois be required to subscribe $20,000,000 and yet receive only a very small appropriation from Congress? Is it fair to Illinois that in the development of a navigable stream we should impose the entire cost of it upon that State, the Government paying nothing, while for a project presented by some other State or city the Government pay all?

It seems to me that the only fair way is to make a test of this kind, not a 50 per cent share, perhaps, but a fourth of the total cost. That is not an unreasonable requirement; and unless you do that you are going to bear with people continually presenting unworthy projects before the committees and to Senators and Representatives.

Now, Mr. President, I want to read a little further from this report:

> It can not be denied that in most instances river and harbor improvements confer an especial benefit upon portions of the country most nearly affected; that there is a constant danger of insistent pressure upon the Federal Government for the expenditure of money upon projects which have not been maturely considered, and which, if part of the burden were chargeable to the localities in which they are advocated, might not be presented to Congress. Again, in the accomplishment of any large and comprehensive plan for the full development of inland navigation throughout the country, and of the associated uses of water, the cooperation of all communities and interests is especially desirable.

The final conclusions to which this commission came were these:

> In passing from this subject the commission would recommend:
> 1. That in the improvement of rivers and harbors similarly situated, where equitable division is possible, uniform rules be observed for a proper division of cost between the Federal Government and minor political divisions. There is at present a lack of uniformity. One illustration of this is in the improvement of interior channels and harbors. In some cases the expense is borne exclusively by the Federal Government, and in other cases by the municipalities interested.
> 2. That participation in improvements by local communities be encouraged, always with due care to avoiding the adoption of projects which are unworthy of recognition by the Federal Government.
> 3. That improvements not essential to navigation should not be undertaken by the Federal Government.
> 4. That improvements in rivers and harbors be not made unless sufficient assurance is given that proper wharves, terminals, and other necessary adjuncts to navigation shall be furnished by municipal or private enterprise, and that the charges for their use shall be reasonable.

Mr. President, before 1861 there was no river and harbor appropriation bill. Cities, counties, States, corporations, and individuals built harbors and improved the rivers. Now, that was wrong. I do not believe it is right that the Government should not aid and assist in improving navigable streams and harbors; but when it comes to testing whether or not a project is meritorious, no condition could be imposed that equals the automatic test of requiring some portion of the money to be contributed by the community to be benefited by the improvement. Indeed, in our street paving, in all of the improvements that are made in cities for public betterments, we find invariably that there is a charge made by law upon the abutting property owners. Ths provision is not compulsory. It does not require them to do anything. It simply says: "If you want this improvement, you must put up one-fourth of the cost thereof."

In the construction of roads the Government requires the States and others interested to put up one-half of the cost thereof. As to the reclamation projects, the Government requires that the people benefited shall pay the entire cost of the enterprise. Why not as to rivers and harbors require that one-fourth of the cost be borne by the States, counties, cities, corporations, or individuals benefited?

Mr. President, I think every one of the projects that have been proposed for the State of Washington, for the State of Oregon, and for the State of Texas has invariably borne a proportion of the expense of each project. It is unfair to those people, it is unfair to those States, that we should assess a charge against them, and at the same time let those benefited by other harbors, other rivers, and other projects escape all taxation for the improvements.

We find, Mr. President, that the commission that made this report, recommending this requirement, made an exhaustive examination of the matter. Some members of the commission visited Europe, and ascertained the manner in which European countries were attempting to divide the appropriations for projects between cities, counties, and the General Government; and they found very many instances where a heavy part of the expense was borne by the cities. Take the city of Antwerp as an illustration: Antwerp improved its harbor by expending $30,000,000 upon it; and the law under which it was done provided that the city of Antwerp should pay two-fifths thereof and that the Kingdom of Belgium should contribute three-fifths thereof. There is fair dealing between the General Government and the community when a general provision is made applicable to all of the harbors. It seems that there is no nation in the world except the United States that assesses solely upon the treasury of its central government the cost of improvements for harbors and rivers—none except the United States.

It does seem to me that when we have a system that seems to have merited adoption by other governments, when we find that it is recommended by this National Waterways Commission, when we find that these contributions will be in themselves a test of the merits of the enterprise, we ought to approve the system, and we ought to pass this or a similar provision as to contribution by those that are benefited. The contributions can be made by the State or some portion thereof; they can be made partially by the counties, partially by the cities, partially by the railroads, partially by any other persons that might be benefited in commerce. Such a course ought to produce more harbor improvements, more river improvements, and would enlist in the enterprise a sympathy that would be of great value in river and harbor improvement.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this proposition is a wise one and that this amendment merits the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. KING. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 19, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Merrimack River, N. H. and Mass., with a view to obtaining increased depth, a more uniform flow of water, and a diminution of periods of drought and of freshet by means of the establishment of a storage reservoir or reservoirs at or near its headwaters in New Hampshire.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether this is a link in the intracoastal canal from Maine to the Rio Grande?

Mr. WEEKS. It is an authorization for a survey to see whether it is practicable to build a storage reservoir at the headwaters of the Merrimack River. There are five or six large millhouses on the Merrimack River which depend partially on that stream for their power, and if it is practicable to construct a storage reservoir at the headwaters of the stream it will give an even flow of water well into the summer and save a great amount of coal. I do not think anybody knows whether it is practicable but a survey ought to be made.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that under the guise of improving rivers and harbors the United States ought to undertake the construction of reservoirs at the headwaters of various streams?

Mr. WEEKS. I am not asking the United States to begin the construction of reservoirs. The State of Massachusetts and the State of New Hampshire will do their full share, if not the whole construction.

Mr. KING. But the Senator is asking for a survey to be made at the expense of the Government, and of course he contemplates that if the scheme is feasible the Federal Government shall pay at least a portion of the expense of building the reservoir, which it is expected will be used to aid private enterprises.

Mr. WEEKS. There are 50,000 mill employees dependent on the steady flow of power on the Merrimack River.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, that of course means that individuals or corporations are engaged in the manufacturing business and employ persons in their plants and mills. The plan the Senator now contemplates is that the Federal Government shall furnish water power for private corporations in order that they may operate manufacturing plants; and this is suggested as a legitimate river and harbor improvement in the interest of interstate commerce.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator is quite wrong about that. I have not proposed that the Government shall spend a cent except to furnish engineers to make a survey to inform the State whether it is practicable to construct a reservoir.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, why do not the States that are interested in this matter employ their own engineers for that purpose?

Mr. WEEKS. There is no reason why the States of Massachusetts and New Hampshire should not have this done when it is being done by the Government engineers in a dozen other cases in this very bill. As I pointed out to the Senator from Utah the other day, the State of Massachusetts has spent $15,000,000 in devoloping Boston Harbor; and it spent a million and a half dollars last year on rivers and harbors. The State will not be backward about spending money when once it has accurate information as to whether it can be spent advantageously.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator be willing to add to the amendment a further proviso to this effect, that if the report is favorable and the plan feasible the Federal Government shall never be called upon to expend a single dollar in carrying out the plan.

Mr. WEEKS. No, I am not willing to accept such an amendment.

Mr. KING. Then, of course, it is obvious the Senator expects that if the plan is feasible the Federal Government shall be called on to pay, if not all, at least a portion of the enormous expense involved in constructing a reservoir which is to be used for the benefit of private corporations.

Certainly, the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the whole cost of it will not be very small?

Mr. WEEKS. Very small, indeed. I do not suppose that it will cost $5,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts. Is not the Senator of the opinion that this reservoir, if it was found to be feasible and could be erected, would increase the navigability of the river?

Mr. WEEKS. Undoubtedly, at the mouth of the river.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I thought. It ought to be connected with navigation in some way in order to have an appropriate place on this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. The Merrimack River is a navigable stream.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX. I offer the following amendment and call the attention of the Senator from Florida to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, lines 20, 21, and 22, strike out the following:

At Lock and Dam No. 6, with a view to the construction of an additional lock.

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee accepts that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, on page 19 of the bill, referring to lines 18, 19, and 20, my colleague and myself desire to present to the Senate that the Mississippi River, that part from the mouth of the Missouri to Minneapolis, Minn., needs improvement to an extent far in excess of that recommended, and we desire to present the fact that $500,000 has been conceded by officers of the Government to be needed, but the committee agreed that it would split the matter equally and allow $250,000. We do not think it is sufficient. We think the river improvement requires more, but under the circumstances and the desire of gentlemen to economize in the bill, we accepted it.

I tender the amendment and will read it. I was only anxious to avoid unnecessary statement, and have the committee state to the Senate the particular part it agreed on and the part it had not agreed on.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the Senator proposes to change the appropriation in line 20 from $250,000 to $500,000.

Mr. LEWIS. On page 19, line 24, insert the following as additional paragraph:

For the construction of a lock at Smiths Island, between Hampton, Ill., and Le Claire, Iowa, together with the purchase of necessary land, $500,000.

If the Senator can not accept that increase of $250,000, let the engineers decide where it shall be expended, and I trust that my colleague and myself may be able to convince the engineers where the money should be expended.

Mr. FLETCHER. The project mentioned in the bill includes the improvement which the Senator refers to in his amendment, and by simply adding $250,000 to the amount carried in the bill in line 20 it will accomplish the purpose the Senator has in view.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this is to be expended upon the Mississippi River between——

Mr. FLETCHER. Between the mouth of the Missouri River and Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. KING. If I may be pardoned, it seems to me that this is necessary (?) because we have spent only about $28,000,000 between certain points on the Mississippi River above the mouth of the Missouri, and the commerce has diminished year by year, until about two years ago, I think, there were a few tons of driftwood and logs and a few tons of sand and a few other unimportant articles of commerce carried upon the waters of that mighty river. It would seem, of course, that in view of the vast amount of commerce which has been developed after expending $28,000,000 for the improvement of navigation (?) between the points referred to a project is presented which is so worthy that I am surprised at the moderation of my distinguished friend from Illinois. I suggest that he make it four or five million dollars, because the ease and facility with which appropriations can be secured under the pretext of improving the waterways of the country gives positive assurance that such a modest request would be granted.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator does not know Rock Island and the peculiar needs of the country. It may be that there are portions of the river that justify the criticism of the able Senator, but not this. He need only have just looked at the report that is before him to justify this expenditure in double the sum I have asked. However, I do not wish to debate the matter, since the committee wholly understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will send his amendment to the Secretary.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Chair will allow me, the amendment is to change the figures in line 20 from "$250,000" to "$500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, line 20, strike out "$250,000" and in lieu insert "$500,000."

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On February 7 I offered an amendment which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, which I will have read in a moment. About the time the Committee on Commerce was taking up the bill for consideration I was taken sick with the "flu," and I had no opportunity of urging the amendment. I saw the chairman of the committee and the senior Republican member, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and a number of them, and they told me that they would have been willing to put the amendment on.

In a certain part of the Mississippi River the landowners have suffered very serious losses owing to the works of public improvement. This amendment is merely to enable them to go to the Court of Claims and make proof of those losses, and if they can prove the amount and that they are attributable to that cause, the Court of Claims may decree whatever is proper and just.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 18, insert as a new paragraph the following:

That as to the lands investigated, surveyed, or reported on under authority of a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, a full report of which is set out in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and wherein the recommendation is made that the title to said lands be acquired by the United States for their use in river improvement, the owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor: Provided, however, That in the trial of said suits said court shall permit any party who at any time since the damage or destruction of such lands owned or held title thereto or any interest therein, and who has become dispossessed thereof by reason of foreclosure proceedings, or otherwise compelled to sacrifice title thereto as a result of said injuries, to appear as a party claimant by filing petition setting up their former interest therein, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Mississippi says the chairman of the committee has approved this amendment and that other leading members of the committee have done so. That being the case, there is no earthly need of any effort to defeat it, even though I would make a point of order against it. Certainly it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, but that would be referred by the Chair to the Senate, and the Senate would vote as they wanted to vote. Therefore, I shall not make any point of order against it.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi the purpose of this amendment. As I understand it, and I confess the subject is entirely new, and all I know is the information I derived from hearing it read, it seems that it may subject the Government of the United States to claims for millions of dollars, as I understand the inundations of the Mississippi River upon lands of private individuals have caused millions of dollars of damage in the past.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Utah is mistaken about that. It does not refer to cases between the levees and the river at all. There were certain riparian landowners down in this stretch of the Mississippi where the land was owned in a little pocket and where the so-called Walnut Ridge or Bluff runs pretty close to the river. That bluff formation is a very peculiar one. It strikes the Mississippi River at Memphis, strikes the Yazoo River at Yazoo City, strikes the Mississippi again at Vicksburg and again at Natchez, and again at Baton Rouge. The land is not worth saving by a levee. On the other hand, the ridge runs so close to the stream on the east side that it of itself formed a levee for the purpose of enabling the Mississippi River to keep in its banks and wash out its deposits, so that for all purposes of navigation a levee was useless along there.

Meanwhile we went over on the Arkansas and Louisiana side and built up a levee, which raised the height of the flood water, of course. Here were lands upon which people and their grandfathers had been living for years which became subject to annual overflow.

The first relief that these people asked was that the Government should levee them like the balance. The Board of Engineers replied, whether properly or improperly, that in their opinion the benefit to navigation from levees along there would not pay the Government to erect the levee. The consequence was that these people were condemned to a general overflow.

Then I brought in a bill to try to get another remedy for them, and it was suggested in the committee that the proper thing to do would be to let the Government take over these land pockets and get out of them gravel and other things, including willow. They have grown up with willow, out of which willow they could make mattresses, and use the gravel for doing a great deal of public work, and then let the Government pay the value of what they cost or pay the damage that had accrued. In a great many cases a man who had been on this land, and his land has been lost, and in some cases the commission merchant has foreclosed upon him and the land has been lost in that way. So the last clause of the amendment provides that where that has happened the party will be entitled to bring suit. That is perfectly just.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11 strike out all of lines 10, 11, and 12 and in lieu thereof insert:

Savannah Harbor and Savannah River below, at, and above Augusta, Ga.: For maintenance, $50,000; continuing improvement at Savannah Harbor, $260,000; in all, $310,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I hope I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, because I believe that this proposal will meet his approval. I offer it in behalf of my colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who is detained at home by illness.

Some years ago, at a cost of approximately $2,000,000, the city of Augusta built out of its own funds a levee to protect that city from floods. That levee is now endangered by the erosion of some of the Government river improvement work below Augusta, Ga.

On that subject I want to read to the Senate a letter addressed to my colleague by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army. It is dated February 14, 1919. He said:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, February 14, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR:

1. I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th instant relative to the condition of the Savannah River below Augusta, Ga., and in reply I have to advise you that the matter to which you refer was called to the attention of this office recently and was referred to the district engineer at Savannah for a report. I am in receipt of a telegram stating that it was expected that the report would be forwarded to-day.

2. From data furnished by Mr. Wingfield, chief engineer, Rivers and Canal Commission, Augusta, Ga., and from available data in this office the following information is furnished:

3. The city of Augusta has built an important levee for the protection of that city from overflow from floods. A short distance below the city the levee approaches close to the river at a point known as Canoe Cut. As part of the improvement of the Savannah River below Augusta the river bank at this point has been protected by certain structures for the purpose of holding the river channel in its place. There has been more or less erosion at this point for some time, and within the past month or two serious erosion has taken place, which has resulted in the river cutting in behind the bank-protection work and eroding the bank to such an extent as to endanger the levee constructed by the city of Augusta. The protection of this bank is a necessary part of the river improvement and is included in the adopted project.

4. In the absence of the report from the district engineer, which has been called for, I am not able to make a definite statement as to the amount which will be required for the protection work at this point; but assuming that the data presented by Mr. Wingfield are correct, it will probably cost in the neighborhood of $50,000 to satisfactorily protect the bank. The funds now available for this improvement are not sufficient to permit the work to be done.

5. Should an appropriation of $50,000 be made, any part of this amount not needed for the bank-protection work at Canoe Cut would be usefully applied to other maintenance work under the project.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. BLACK,
Major General, Chief of Engineers.
By H. TAYLOR,
Brigadier General, United States Army.

RIVER AND CANAL COMMISSION,
Augusta, Ga., February 15, 1919.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The city of Augusta, Ga., on the Savannah River, has recently completed a levee for protection from floods at a cost of more than $2,000,000. The work has required several years to accomplish and the cost has been borne entirely by the city, entailing an unusually heavy financial burden.

The length of the levee is 11.4 miles, and is built from high ground above Augusta to high ground below Augusta. All of the business and manufacturing sections, the railroad depots and terminals, and a large portion of the residence section of Augusta lie in the low area formerly subject to periodical overflows from the river.

The location of the levee is along the bank of the river for approximately 3 miles; through the city limits and below the city for 8 miles it follows generally the course of the river, but cuts across the wide bends; the exact location being determined by the character of soil necessary for a proper foundation. The location was made with full knowledge and at least tacit consent of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, as complete maps were furnished department, and I do not believe anyone will say that the location is an improper one.

At two points below the city, where the levee is near the river, there are sharp bends in the river channel. No apprehension was felt about these, for the reason that "protection work" had previously been installed in both bends by the Government to stop the caving banks, and it was a reasonable supposition that the protection provided would accomplish what was intended; but this has not been the case at one of the bends, known locally as Canoe Cut.

On December 24, 1918, there was a tide of 35 feet in the river, which would under former conditions have flooded the entire business and manufacturing sections and a very large residence section of the city. There was no part of the city flooded, however, the levee proving a perfect protection, thus demonstrating beyond peradventure the efficacy of the flood-protection work the city has done. After the water subsided an examination was made, and it was found that no damage had been done to any part of the work put in by the city, but at Canoe Cut the river had made a deep cut into the bank behind the work put in by the Government. This bank is still caving and is now close to the levee, and unless stopped the river will reach the levee and destroy the flood protection which the city of Augusta has almost bankrupted herself to put in.

When the estimates were made for the pending rivers and harbors bill this disaster was not anticipated and no provision was made for funds for maintenance except as to the Savannah Harbor. In view of the above facts and the immensity of the loss which will occur unless immediate repairs to the bank-protection work are made, we most earnestly urge that an appropriation for this work be incorporated in the pending bill—$50,000 will be needed. We know that it is the eleventh hour, but the need is great.

Respectfully,

NISBET WINGFIELD,
Chief Engineer.

Mr. President, just a word. I believe the committee will then accept this amendment. This is one project in the country where the local authorities built at their own expense flood protection in the shape of a levee. The Government's own improvement below this levee has been eroded by high waters during the past winter to such an extent that the $2,000,000 project of the city of Augusta, which we have almost bankrupted ourselves to pay for, will be endangered. The engineers say that unless this appropriation is made at once there will be no time—for this high water occurred very recently—to get the technical estimate of the Chief of Engineers on this project; and substantial damage will be done to the people who have paid for their own protection out of their own pockets unless this amendment is adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it is proper that this should be included and go to conference.

Mr. HARDWICK. By that time they will have an estimate from the district engineers.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the data justify it, all right, and if they do not the conferees will have to disagree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk by way of substitute for the present bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Utah that before a substitute is offered other amendments must be disposed of.

Mr. KING. I understood that the amendments had been concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I send an amendment to the desk providing for a survey, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 23, insert the following:

Waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Grays Harbor with a view to securing a channel suitable for navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

That whenever the Secretary of War, in pursuance of authority heretofore conferred on him by law, shall cause proceedings to be instituted for acquiring by condemnation the Cape Cod Canal and all the franchises, property, and rights of property appurtenant thereto, the United States, upon the filing of the petition in such proceedings, shall have the right to take immediate possession of said canal and appurtenances and maintain and operate the same in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1909, which are hereby made applicable to said works.

Mr. KING. I raise the point of order against the proposed amendment that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the Senator withhold his point of order until I make a very brief explanation?

Mr. KING. I will withhold it for that purpose.

Mr. WEEKS. The Cape Cod Canal has been operated by the Railway Administration. It is also under the law which was passed two years ago and has been under negotiations for the Government, by the Secretaries of War, of the Navy, and of Commerce, being the representatives of the Government. The Railway Administration wishes to turn the canal back. In the meantime some half million dollars have been expended in improving the canal; condemnation proceedings have been undertaken as provided for in the bill and will soon be concluded. Therefore, the War Department wishes to take over the canal when the Railway Administration turns it back on the 28th of this month.

I think the amendment is general legislation, but it is simply the shifting from one department of the Government to another of something of which we have authorized the purchase, and for the purpose of which proceedings are now under way.

Mr. KING. I dislike very much to insist upon the point of order, but this matter is too important to waive it, and so I shall insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk; and also a letter in support of it from the Chief of Engineers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out in line 24, page 16, the figures "$400,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$758,000."

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator from Texas will not insist upon that amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator not hear the letter of the Chief of Engineers in support of this amendment? This amendment merely makes available all of the money which has been authorized for the entire project. It has been determined since the bill was reported that the entire project of the Galveston sea wall, part of which was constructed by local interests, can be completed during the next fiscal year. It is only for that reason that I have offered the amendment. The letter from the Chief of Engineers is short, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, January 31, 1919.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR:

1. I have the honor to state that the following telegram has just been received from the district engineer at Galveston, Tex.:

"Strongly recommend that appropriation of $400,000, carried in House river and harbor bill, for construction of sea-wall extension to protect Galveston channel, be increased if practicable to $785,000, the amount necessary to bring up appropriation to total of original project and probably sufficient to complete sea wall proper without fill. Plant costing over $140,000 has been purchased, and a competent force organized to carry on this work, which is now well under way and which it is believed can be economically completed in about 12 months if amount recommended above is made available for coming fiscal year. Otherwise plant will have to be laid up and force disorganized with wall only partially completed, which will materially increase cost to Government."

2. If you should find it practicable to increase the appropriation as requested, it is recommended that it be done.

3. The delay in submitting this data is probably due to the fact that Col. Spencer Cosby, Corps of Engineers, the district engineer, has been in charge of the work at Galveston but a short time, and was not able before to go into the matter in sufficient detail to warrant his making such recommendation earlier.

Very truly, yours,

W. M. BLACK,
Major General, Chief of Engineers,
By H. TAYLOR,
Brigadier General, United States Army.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know but that this amendment ought to be adopted, for I should like, as to many of these projects, to see appropriations made to complete them if they can be completed within a year; but if this is adopted, then I shall offer a further amendment, to which I hope the Senator will not object, to strike out the words "continuing improvement by construction," and inserting the word "completing"; so that it will read:

Completing of sea-wall extension to protect Galveston channel.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not know that this appropriation will entirely complete it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the engineer says, and that is what the proposition is.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well, if it will complete it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The proposed amendment is acceptable, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment proposes to strike out the word "continuing," and it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment inserting that word was agreed to, and then the word "completing" can be substituted.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be the proper method of procedure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I therefore move to reconsider the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to. Then the Senator from Utah can move to substitute the word "completing" for the words he has indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment inserting the word "continuing" was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, after the numerals "$25,000," in line 22, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "continuing" and inserting the word "completing" and striking out the words "improvement by construction," so that it will read:

Completing of sea-wall extension to protect Galveston Channel.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator ought to leave the language as it is there.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the regular way of stating an appropriation of this kind—"completing the improvement by construction of sea wall"—that is part of the improvement of the harbor.

Mr. SMOOT. If those words are usually employed, I will not make objection to them.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the usual expression.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 16, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the word "continuing" and to insert the word "completing."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill, it is proposed to insert a new section as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, be, and the same hereby is, amended by adding at the end of section 6 thereof the following:

"No provision of this act shall be construed to prevent the routing of freight by a shipper or consignee over any inland canal or coastwise waterway, or a part way over such waterway and a part way by rail. In case the shipper or consignee shall so route the freight, no provision of this act shall be construed as giving power to change the routing.

"Freight routed a part way by water and a part way by rail shall be charged only the waterway freight rate for the water haul and the proportional through rail route for the rail haul."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, it is proposed to insert the following:

No work shall be undertaken upon any new project herein appropriated for unless the Secretary of War shall of the opinion that, based upon the cost at the time of entering upon the work, the project can be completed at a cost not greater than 40 per cent in excess of the estimate of cost in the report upon such project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. Those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed "no." The Chair is in doubt. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [A pause.] The "ayes" will be seated, and the "noes" will rise. [A pause.] The amendment is carried.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks for the yeas and nays. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and still open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be——

Mr. SMOOT. There are further amendments. In order to hasten the completion of this bill I suggest the absence of a quorum, because I desire a record vote upon certain amendments that I wish to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Smoot
Beckham	King	Pittman	Spencer
Calder	Kirby	Pomerene	Sutherland
Curtis	La Follette	Ransdell	Thomas
Fletcher	Lenroot	Reed	Trammell
France	Lewis	Robinson	Vardaman
Gay	Lodge	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Gerry	McKellar	Shafroth	Williams
Gore	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott
Hardwick	Martin, Ky.	Sherman
Henderson	Nelson	Simmons
Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Smith, S. C.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FERNALD, Mr. KENDRICK, and Mr. SWANSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. POLLOCK entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, after the word "named," in line 9, page 1, of the bill, I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, after the word "named," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That prior to any expenditure of public moneys under this bill the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that there now exist, or shall secure satisfactory assurances that local interests will provide, sufficient areas of water frontage and suitable public water terminals adequate for the traffic, which shall be open to the public on equal terms, and as conditioned in the upper Cumberland project contained in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate for a discussion of the amendment. It speaks for itself, and it is not asking the local communities to give half and half. It simply asks that wherever a local community desires the improvement of a river particularly, it shall grant terminals, or an area of land sufficient for terminals, in order that boats may be operated upon the river.

I wish a record vote upon that amendment, and I therefore ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I never saw this amendment before, and I know nothing about it except what I have heard and what the Senator states, but it rather appeals to me as being not only unobjectionable but desirable. I think it is quite usual for communities to provide terminals.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will accept the amendment, of course I do not want a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no further amendments to offer to the bill, but I have a substitute. As my colleague [Mr. KING] has given notice that he has a substitute to offer, I will allow him to offer his substitute now, and then, if that is defeated, I shall offer mine.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the matter which I send to the desk as a substitute for the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the substitute of the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the sum of $12,000,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the fiscal year 1920, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended under the direction of the Waterways Commission created by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved August 8, 1917, for necessary and proper construction, completion, repair, preservation, and maintenance of harbors, river channels, canals, embankments, levees, wharves, and water terminals within the United States, its Territories and possessions.

SEC. 2. That the floating plant, consisting of dredges, barges, towboats, snagboats, and all other equipment under the control of the Mississippi River Commission and of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, is hereby placed within the control, use, and possession of said Waterways Commission to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the Mississippi River Commission created by the act approved June 28, 1879, and the Board of Engineers created by section 3 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902, shall be abolished and terminated at the end of the present fiscal year, and that after the 30th day of June, 1919, said Waterways Commission shall become invested with all the powers and duties presently exercised by the Chief of Engineers of the Army, the Mississippi River Commission, and said Board of Engineers, with respect to the maintenance and improvements of the harbors and waterways within the United States, its Territories and possessions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I realize that Senators are impatient to pass this bill, and do not welcome at this late hour any amendment or discussion. I fully appreciate the fact that nothing can defeat this measure, and that no amendment can succeed that is not approved by the committee. All the debate has been in vain. All attempts to alter or amend the bill have been futile. I need not state the reasons producing such a situation; various sections of the country receive large appropriations under the bill as reported by the committee. Can it be possible that the provisions are so coordinated and linked together that no change—all must stand, regardless of individual merit?

The amendment just submitted will be ruthlessly rejected. So will all others, regardless of merit, which seek to eliminate items from the bill, or change the system perpetuated thereby. I shall say only a word concerning my amendment, because I discussed it in detail yesterday, and attempted to show how wasteful, unscientific, and indeed vicious is the present system of dealing with the waterways of our country; and I further realize that the Senate will refuse to accept any plan changing or modifying the existing one.

Those persons who have carefully studied the question of water transportation in the United States and the manner of improving our rivers and harbors have with practical unanimity condemned the policy of our Government. It has made for waste and extravagance and has defeated the purposes in some instances which Congress had in view. After spending nearly $1,000,000,000 for such improvements it can be truthfully asserted that the commerce of the inland streams is less than it was many years ago.

It is time we adopted a scientific and national system in dealing with the problem of water transportation. I submit the amendment offered is a partial realization of such a system. Under the amendment the commission provided by the act of 1917 is authorized to expend the amount carried in the bill as amended upon the harbors and rivers of the United States for the benefit of commerce.

This commission will be composed of men of technical knowledge and business ability. It will not be required to spend any part of the appropriation upon creeks and rivulets and projects purely local and of no importance to commerce. Under this plan, not sections or localities will be considered. The system provided will completely revolutionize the present archaic and wasteful one. It rescues the improvement of waterways from the political and other influences which have caused fair-minded men to condemn the prevailing system. The commission referred to possesses large powers, and these powers can be increased when found necessary. It can take over the navigable streams and harbors of the United States; it can make surveys, and determine what streams and harbors are interstate, and national, and of such importance from a commercial standpoint as to warrant improvement or development by the Government.

Congress will determine what amount the Government can afford to expend each year, or covering a given period, and the amount appropriated would pass to such commission to be expended by it as and where it determines necessary in order to carry out the plan scientifically and in a comprehensive and national way improving waterways and aiding commerce.

I believe if we adopt this plan the evils we have complained of will be abated and the Government will secure results which in the past have been denied them.

Mr. FLETCHER. I simply want to say that, of course, I hope this proposed substitute will not be agreed to. The proposition is to refer it to a commission which is not in existence. It was provided for, it is true, in 1917, but it never was appointed and it never functioned at all, and it was never contemplated to turn over to that sort of commission these works, relegating to innocuous desuetude the Chief of Engineers and the Corps of Engineers and all the machinery we have now managing this great enterprise.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to say this in conclusion. I am not going to stop to argue it, but I utterly disagree with the proposition that the present system is extravagant or wasteful or otherwise improper and unwise. I do not believe there is any money paid out of the Treasury of the United States that is safeguarded to the extent that the money expended on the rivers and harbors of the country is safeguarded and protected.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Florida just one question? The Senator alluded to the fact that the President had not appointed the commission provided in the act to which I referred. The Senator, of course, does not mean to intimate that that commission will not be appointed and that the President will omit the discharge of a duty which the law imposed upon him. I feel confident, now that the overshadowing war questions are being settled, that the President will appoint the commission. Such commission will have the power and authority required in order to carry on the development of the waterways of the United States. Clearly such a policy as that contemplated by the bill known as the Newlands amendment, and which my amendment seeks to vitalize, would give the country a needed reform under which there would be a genuine improvement of waterways needed for the commerce of our land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the bill and substitute the following by way of an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the maintenance and improvement of rivers and harbors, $15,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. In the allotment of such funds provision shall first be made for maintenance and urgent commercial and military needs of harbors and waterways. Not exceeding $50,000 shall be used for new surveys, and no allotment other than for necessary maintenance shall be made for any project heretofore recommended by Army engineers for abandonment or for modified improvement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer this substitute carrying an appropriation of $15,000,000. There is already an unexpended balance of $45,000,000. That would be an amount equal to $60,000,000. I think that the lump-sum appropriations which were provided for in the river and harbor bills of 1916 and 1917 have been as wisely expended as any money provided by the river and harbor bills in years preceding that time, and a little more so. So far as I am concerned, I want it distinctly understood that there are items in this appropriation bill which I think ought to be increased. I am in favor of appropriating money for rivers upon which the commerce is sufficient to justify the expenditure of money, but I am totally opposed to appropriating money upon little creeks that never can be used successsfully in a commercial way. I think it is a wicked waste of public money.

Mr. President, I shall be content with having a yea-and-nay vote upon this amendment. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course this is a proposal to strike out the whole bill and substitute something entirely different. Reference is made to $45,000,000 as an available fund, but this will be expended or contracted for before the present year ends. The present bill takes care of the fiscal year beginning June 30, 1919, and ending June 30, 1920. The available balances are not sufficient to do the work. A great deal of that available balance is to the credit of items that are not on this bill. Millions of it are to the credit of projects that are not on this bill at all and therefore can not be applied to any of this work.

Senators speak about a desire to do the necessary public work, and yet the whole effort seems to be to prevent the passage of the legislation that will accomplish it.

I want to say that if former Senator Frye, of Maine, at one time the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce, had reported this bill, it would have passed this body in 30 minutes. There is no question about that. Yet here we are with this work needed to be done, work that it is necessary should be done in order to take care of projects already adopted and to prevent waste of money already expended on waterways improvements in this country; here we are with 300,000 idle men in the country and many more coming in, and with this public work required to be done and needed to be done, and yet we have spent five days blocking the passage of legislation which will enable this work to go on and enable these people to find employment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has been called away on account of illness in his family. I promised to pair with him, but I understand that he would vote as I will upon this proposition and therefore I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. ROBINSON's name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I have a general pair, did not vote. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], but in this matter I understand that he would vote as I did. So I will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. He has not voted. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. That Senator has relieved me from that pair on this vote and the final vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have a general pair with that Senator. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]; and

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Curtis	King	Norris	Wadsworth
France	La Follette	Smoot
Kenyon	Lodge	Thomas

NAYS—38.

Bankhead	Henderson	Nelson	Sheppard
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Simmons
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Smith, S. C.

Goff	Moses	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] being present, and a quorum being present, the nays have it, and the amendment is rejected. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLETCHER. There was one amendment that was reserved for submission to the Senate. It is an amendment reported by the committee. The point of order was sustained by the then occupant of the chair. I ask the Chair to submit the question of order to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know what that means. There is no earthly need of encumbering the precedents with it. I shall not make a point of order, and the chairman can put the amendment on the bill if he desires, because I am just as satisfied as I would be if there was a vote taken that if the point of order is submitted to the Senate it will overrule the point of order. So there is no earthly use of doing that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; let the amendment be submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Florida that the other amendments might be concurred in. Is there objection to concurring in the amendments not reserved? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendments not reserved will be concurred in. The question now is on concurring in the amendment which was reserved.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] reserved the right to have a separate vote on the Oklawaha item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment the Chair is now reserving.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Iowa had to leave the Chamber and he asked me to announce to the Senate that there would be no need whatever of voting again upon that item, and that he might as well not ask for a vote at this time. Therefore I shall not ask for a vote, nor do I believe anyone else will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, then, all the amendments will be concurred in. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. Add an additional section as follows:

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to ascertain whether any of the contracts for work on river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of materials, labor, and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war; and to ascertain and report what amounts, if any, in addition to those fixed by the terms of said contracts, should in justice and equity be paid to contractors for work performed between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, the date of the approval of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," on account of the increased cost of labor and materials and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war during that period: Provided, That in every case the amount so ascertained shall not exceed the actual loss sustained by the contractor in performing the work between the said dates: Provided further, That when such amount shall have been ascertained the Secretary of War shall transmit to Congress for consideration a statement or statements of all findings or determinations rendered by authority of this section, the amounts thereof, the names of contractors, and dates of contracts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to ascertain if I can what probable expense will be entailed upon the Government by that provision if it becomes a law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think, as far as that provision is concerned, any material expense will be entailed, because the War Department now have all the machinery. All they have to do is to take up the contracts, and they can do that in their offices. It simply calls for an investigation and an ascertainment of the losses caused by the war.

Mr. THOMAS. It does not provide for the payment?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all. They are to report to Congress.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator if such a report is submitted if it will not be an inducement for persons who think that they have been damaged—and some persons perhaps have been damaged—to press their claims with the utmost severity against the Government?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it will prevent that sort of thing. I think if we do not provide for this in detail we shall have them here before Congress urging that bills be passed for their relief.

Mr. KING. I make the prophecy now that if this amendment shall be adopted and action shall be taken pursuant to it it will result in the presentation of claims to the Government amounting to millions and millions of dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. More than likely a commission will be appointed to hear claims the next fiscal year.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a question for the engineers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. In connection with the debate on this bill I ask to have printed in the RECORD the proceedings, or the resolutions, rather, adopted by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress in session in this city on the 7th of this month.

They are very brief, and very pertinent to the discussions which have been held.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that is going a long, long way——

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator objects, I will read them. I will ask that they be sent back to me.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to wait until the Senator from Utah gets through.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will read them from my place, if the Senator objects.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator will, and if he had not been impatient I was going to complete what I had to say.

Mr. RANSDELL. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that that is going a long way, and I was going to ask the Senator if the matter he has asked to have printed in the RECORD is the proceedings or resolutions of the congress to which he has referred.

Mr. RANSDELL. Simply the resolutions, covering four pages of typewritten matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, there is no need of keeping the Senate here, and I shall not object to their going into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the resolutions will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

NATIONAL RIVERS AND HARBORS CONGRESS, DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES ADOPTED FEBRUARY 7, 1919.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress, assembled in the city of Washington at its fourteenth annual meeting and represented by delegates from almost every section of the country, hereby submits the following declaration of its policies and purposes:

THIS CONGRESS IS A NATIONAL ORGANIZATION.

From its inception it has striven to promote the improvement of harbors and interior waterways and for the establishment and maintenance of transportation thereon. At each recurring convention and in the work which has been prosecuted during the interim it has held tenaciously to these primary objects and has entered no other field of activity unless the same was closely related thereto. The congress, through its officers and delegates, has not been actuated by selfish, sectional, or partisan motives, but only sought to advance the public welfare. The problem of transportation is one of distribution and affects every section of the country. Industry and commerce wait upon transportation, and the more universal the facilities, accompanied by cheapness and equality, the greater will be our prosperity.

In effectuating its purpose the Congress has sought to disseminate information and to advocate economic propositions which would impress the American people and the Federal Congress. Its work has been in the open. Its success demanded publicity. It has endeavored to provoke thought and to invite intelligent criticism.

COORDINATION OF TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

Transportation is the servant of the public. In every form it should be coordinate and not competitive. Each method should be unified and coordinated one with the other. Neither can be neglected nor impaired without injury to the other. While primarily this Congress seeks to promote transportation by water, yet it recognizes its unity and sympathy with transportation by rail, by highway, and by air. We greet the advent of the airplant and anticipate such a development in aeronautics as will constitute an important factor in transportation.

A SYSTEM OF WATERWAYS.

In so far as may be practicable and feasible we recommend that such a comprehensive system of waterway improvement and water transportation be devised as will most effectually serve the largest areas of the country. Trunk or through lines of waterway should be given preference, particularly where they intersect feeders or branch lines, thus extending the length of movement by boats between distant termini without breaking bulk. As far as possible depths of channel should be standardized. The branch lines of communication may usually await the improvement of the through lines of waterway.

JURISDICTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The United States has jurisdiction of all navigable waterways. It is the duty of the Federal Congress to systematize and improve all navigable waterways upon which commerce may be established. Congress may not escape this imperative duty, which should be performed in such a manner as to serve the public interests. If criticisms of the activities of Congress in the discharge of this duty have been made in the past or shall be repeated in the future, such criticisms do not affect its jurisdiction or duty but the manner of its performance.

THE USE OF IMPROVED CHANNELS.

We declare as our settled purpose that we advocate only the improvement of such waterways as will be utilized. Appropriations of the public revenues can only be justified upon evidence affording a reasonable assurance that channels so improved will be used for water transportation. No ulterior or secondary result constitutes a sufficient justification. Those who advocate improved facilities of navigation with the expectation only of reducing competitive rates by rail are advocating public expenditures inconsistent with public duty or wise economics. It is axiomatic that an improved channel alone will not of itself invite or promote transportation. Other conditions are essential and must coexist.

WHAT ARE THE ESSENTIALS FOR WATER TRANSPORTATION?

1. There must exist in the territory contiguous to the navigable waterway production and a demand for distribution of products in sufficient volume to furnish traffic. If it is a part of a through line of waterway, or if interchange of traffic with the railroads may be anticipated, these factors may be considered. As bulky products are more adaptable to water movement, the proportion of this class will also be an element.

2. An adequate number of boats of appropriate type must be provided. To this end there must be organizations with sufficient capital, managed by men of business capacity and traffic experience to operate these lines of boats. The organization of these boat lines must depend upon the disposition and the spirit of civic enterprise of citizens in the respective sections.

3. We have declared that the waterways and the railways must be coordinate in the public service. This implies a free interchange of traffic which may be carried between points of origin and destination partly by rail and partly by water. Our efficient system of rail transportation has been made possible by a system of interchange and prorating between the several lines of railroads. Such a system predicated upon sympathetic cooperation must exist between the railways and the waterways. Wherever this may not be effectuated voluntarily it must be established under compulsion of law, mandatory in its terms and under competent supervision.

4. There must exist in every harbor and at every city and town located upon any navigable waterway adequate water terminals. Any detailed description of such a terminal would seem to be superfluous. It should have ample water front, capacious warehouses, modern appliances for transferring freight, and should be physically connected by a belt line with each and every railroad serving the city or community. Under the present policy of our Government such terminals must be constructed and maintained at the expense of the city or community. They should be under the supervision and regulation of the municipality, subject to such superior supervision by the State and Federal Governments as may be necessary in the interest of the general public. The construction of water terminals likewise depend upon the civic enterprise of the several communities. Such terminals are necessary for local traffic by water, but are absolutely essential for interchange of traffic with the railroads.

5. Transportation by water must enjoy unrestricted opportunity for development and growth and should be free from unjust discrimination from any source. If lines of railroad parallel to or competitive with any navigable waterway have in the past so unduly reduced rates as to interfere with the orderly operation of boat lines thereon, these rail rates should be readjusted. Navigable waterways are natural lines of communication and are owned by the public and should be conserved and regulated in the public service. Whether the reduction of rail rates competitive with water may be justified in sound economics, it seems perfectly clear that such rates should not be so reduced as to impair or destroy water transportation. If any reduction of rail rates should be permitted, such reduction should afford a differential in favor of the water lines commensurate with the natural advantages of water transportation. We respectfully submit to the Federal Congress the proposition that legislation should be enacted which will prevent destructive methods by railroads competitive with waterways and which will permit both agencies to exist and serve their common master, the American public.

EXISTING LAWS FOR INTERCHANGE OF TRAFFIC.

We repeat the following statement from the "declaration of principles" adopted at the meeting of this congress on December 10, 1915:

"We commend existing laws for the regulation of interstate commerce, and particularly the provisions of the Panama Canal act, approved August 24, 1912, relating to the joint use of water and rail lines and extending the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This act provides substantially:

"(1) For the establishment of physical connection, where reasonably practical and justifiable, between the rail carrier and the terminal of the water carrier by directing either or both of such carriers to construct connecting tracks.

"(2) Authorizing the commission 'to establish through rates and maximum joint rates over such rail and water lines and to determine all the terms and conditions under which such lines shall be operated and in the handling of such traffic.'

"(3) Authorizing the commission 'to establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken, by the water carrier and to determine what traffic, and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates will apply.'

"(4) And further providing for the divorcing of common carriers by water from the railroads under certain conditions.

"These requirements went far toward eliminating some of the undesirable practices which had existed in our domestic commerce between rail and water carriers."

We regret to state that the above provisions of law have not generally been made effective. To what extent this was due to the inertia of sections and cities tributary to navigable waterways, or to the indisposition of the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce the law, it would not be profitable to discuss. We recommend, however, that the above provisions of law, which are now permissive, be made mandatory.

FEDERAL SUPERVISION OF WATER TRANSPORTATION.

The slow development of water transportation upon some of our navigable waterways, the failure of local interests to provide adequate water terminals, the absence of interchange of traffic with the railroads and other essentials, and the existing evils militating against water transportation demand some form of effective supervision and regulation. We recommend that the Federal Congress enact legislation either creating a separate department of transportation, or creating a separate bureau in the Department of Commerce, which shall have jurisdiction to supervise and regulate water transportation. The Interstate Commerce Commission should have enlarged jurisdiction over rail rates and over water rates under such mandatory terms of law as shall compel the commission so to adjust the rates by rail and by water as to enable boat lines to earn a fair profit and to coexist with competitive rail lines. The principle of potential competition by water as affording justification for the reduction of competitive rail rates should be abolished. Boat lines upon navigable waterways must have an opportunity to exist and operate under the conditions afforded by their natural advantages. Interior sections and communities should not be penalized or discriminated against in favor of other sections and communities located upon navigable waterways. Whatever advantages the latter may enjoy by reason of their contiguity to natural waterways should be accorded to them in the fullest degree through the benefits of water transportation.

THE UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION.

It is a pleasure to record our gratitude to the retiring and present Director General of Railroads for such recognition of waterways and water transportation as have been accorded by them. We express the hope that these activities in this direction may be enlarged, and we bespeak the cordial cooperation of the public in the use of the facilities provided.

ANNUAL RIVER AND HARBOR BILLS.

Since 1910 Congress has enacted annual river and harbor bills. This policy has been a distinct contribution toward the systematic improvement of waterways throughout the country. The improvement of waterways constitutes an essential national activity and should be recognized by annual appropriations to the same extent as other activities of the Federal Government.

THE CORPS OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

We are pleased to renew our commendation of the Corps of Army Engineers. The high standard of efficiency maintained by the corps, their engineering skill, and their integrity have been made manifest in their public services. We extend cordial thanks to the present distinguished Chief of Engineers, Maj. Gen. William M. Black, for his presence and his illuminating address at this session.

The Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York has heretofore considered and adopted a series of resolutions recommending legislation by Congress creating a national board of water conservation, which have been presented to this convention by its accredited representative. We desire to express our sympathy with the purpose sought to be accomplished by the proposed legislation.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. JONES of Washington conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is very important that we have a brief executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I withhold the motion and yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14078, being calendar No. 618.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 19, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 18 (legislative day of February 13), 1919.

FIRST ASSISTANT CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Grosvenor M. Jones, of Ohio.

SECOND ASSISTANT CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Roy S. MacElwee, of New York.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 18, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. Robert Arthur Elwood, pastor the Boardwalk Church, Atlantic City, N. J., chaplain in chief United Spanish War Veterans, offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, our Heavenly Father, we are grateful to Thee this morning that Thou hast kept us in Thy loving care through another night; and as we come together we pray Thee that Thou wilt fill our hearts and quicken our memories with the things that have gone before. To that end we pray Thee that Thou wilt accept our thanks for our country, with its history, and that Thou wilt grant that in these days of the Nation's need the memory of that history, wrought by our fathers, shall kindle in our people the true spirit of Americanism and bring to us full completeness of service. Bless the men of this Congress, the executives and officers of the Government, the men in the Army and Navy, that by the cause that Thou leadest us we may walk among the nations of the world, to the helpfulness of all of them. We ask these things, our Father, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 32.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 14,100 copies of the proceedings and the eulogies delivered in Congress on Theodore Roosevelt, late a President of the United States, with illustration, of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senators and Representatives of the State of New York, and 100 copies, bound in full morocco, for the use of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt: Provided, That there shall be included in such document the proclamation of the President and the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States on the death of Mr. Roosevelt, an account of the funeral services, and other matters as may be deemed appropriate—to the Committee on Printing.

CABLEGRAM FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a cablegram sent by the President, through his secretary, Mr. Tumulty, to each member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Is it concerning foreign affairs?

Mr. FLOOD. It is a cablegram making a request to the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The cablegram is as follows:

PARIS, February 14, 1919.

Last night the committee of the conference charged with the duty of drafting a constitution for a league of nations concluded its work, and this afternoon before leaving for the United States it is to be my privilege and duty to read to a plenary session of the conference the text of the 26 articles agreed upon by the committee.

The committee which drafted these articles was fairly representative of the world. Besides the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, representatives of Belgium, Serbia, China, Greece, Roumania, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Brazil, Portugal, actively participated in the debates and assisted materially in the drafting of this constitution. Each article was passed only after the most careful examination by each member of the committee. There is a good and sufficient reason for the phraseology and substance of each article. I request that I be permitted to go over with you article by article the constitution before this part of the work of the conference is made the subject of debate of Congress. With this in view, I request that you dine with me at the White House as soon after I arrive in the United States as my engagements permit. I have asked Mr. Tumulty to fix the date of this dinner.

BRIDGE ACROSS TUG RIVER, MINGO COUNTY, W. VA.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 5478) granting the consent of Congress to the Fall Branch Coal Co. to construct a bridge across Tug River. There is a similar House bill (H. R. 15207) on the House calendar, favorably reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House S. 5478, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Fall Branch Coal Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tug River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Williamson, in the county of Mingo, in the State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. REED, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, H. R. 15207 was ordered to lie on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROANOKE RIVER, WILLIAMSTON, N. C.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Speaker lay before the House the bill (S. 5580) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Martin and Bertie, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River at or near Williamston, N. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there a similar House bill on the calendar?

Mr. SMALL. There is a similar House bill, H. R. 15707, favorably reported and on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House S. 5580, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Martin and Bertie, in the State of North Carolina, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Roanoke River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Williamston, in the county of Martin, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMALL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent H. R. 15707 was ordered to lie on the table.

MEMORIAL OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration for H. Con. Res. 70, for printing the address of Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE in honor of Theodore Roosevelt, and pending that I ask unanimous consent to change it from a concurrent resolution to a House resolution. This is a resolution providing for the publication of additional copies of the memorial address of Senator LODGE. After introducing it as a concurrent resolution, it was discovered that the cost of the printing would be less than $500, and by changing it from a concurrent resolution to a House resolution the printing will be expedited. Heretofore unanimous consent has been granted to have 9,000 copies of this address printed.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. The Senate has already ordered and had delivered some 10,000 copies of this address for its own use. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. BARNHART. That is a fact.

Mr. DYER. So far the House has not had any printed?

Mr. BARNHART. That is the situation.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman inform the House whether it is the intention to print this address upon paper similar to that which was used in printing it for the Senate?

Mr. BARNHART. It will be exactly like that; and we will have 20,000 copies for the House, because we have already had unanimous consent to print 9,000 copies, and this makes 11,000 additional.

Mr. DYER. It will be substantially a duplicate of the Senate print?

Mr. BARNHART. It will be a duplicate of the Senate print, paper and all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to change this from a concurrent resolution to a House resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 590 (H. Rept. No. 1084).

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Address of Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE, in honor of Theodore Roosevelt," before the Congress of the United States, Sunday, February 9, 1919, be printed as a House document, and that 11,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House to be distributed through the folding room.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I present Senate concurrent resolution 32, pertaining to the same matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed and bound, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, 14,100 copies of the proceedings and the eulogies delivered in Congress on Theodore Roosevelt, late a President of the United States, with illustration, of which 4,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 8,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senators and Representatives of the State of New York, and 100 copies, bound in full morocco, for the use of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt: Provided, That there shall be included in such document the proclamation of the President and the proceedings in the Supreme Court of the United States on the death of Mr. Roosevelt, an account of the funeral services, and other matters as may be deemed appropriate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOURNAL OF THE FIFTY-THIRD NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT OF GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC (H. REPT. NO. 1087).

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I call up House concurrent resolution 69.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-third National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1919, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER AT BARRS FERRY, MISS.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14555) granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at Barrs Ferry in said county.

The SPEAKER. What is the status of the bill?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is a bridge bill; it has been unanimously reported by the committee and was on the Unanimous Consent Calendar yesterday, but was not reached. It is the only bridge bill that was not reached.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 14555, a bridge bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., and their successors in office, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Tombigbee River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Barrs Ferry, in the county of Itawamba, in the State of Mississippi, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the board of superviors of Itawamba County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Barrs Ferry in said county."

On motion of Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DEFICIENCY BILL FOR RAILWAY ADMINISTRATION.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the deficiency bill appropriating $750,000,000 to the Railway Administration may be called up for consideration following the consideration of the fortification bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the fortification bill the deficiency bill for the Railway Administration be in order.

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, this will not exclude conference reports?

The SPEAKER. No. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REFUND OF COTTON TAX (H. REPT. NO. 1017, PT. 2).

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill H. R. 6019 from the War Claims Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to file minority views on the bill H. R. 6019. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. What is the bill?

Mr. FRENCH. To refund the cotton tax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MINING COAL, PHOSPHATE, GAS, ETC.—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1059).

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, before the statement is read, this is a very important bill and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order of no quorum, and the Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point at present.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. This is a very important bill, Mr. Speaker, and it seems to me that the conference report ought to be read. It has never been read in the House.

Mr. FERRIS. I withdraw the request.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, gas, and sodium on the public domain, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment, insert the following:

"That deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas, owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon National Park, and the Mount Olympus National Monument, but excluding those in other national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities.

"COAL.

"SEC. 2. That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union, including the Territory of Alaska, not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands where the same shall be situate more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad, and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair: Provided, That improvements or development work of the aggregate value of not less than $8 per acre upon the coal lands so entered shall be made or done upon the lands annually for two years after such award, when patent shall issue therefor. Upon failure to comply with the terms of this section within the required period said lands shall be subject to entry by any other qualified applicant.

"No such person, association, or corporation shall own coal lands entered after the passage of this act in excess of said area, at any one time, nor be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, and no member of such association or corporation, or stockholder of such corporation, shall own any other coal lands or be interested, directly or indirectly, in any other coal lands or coal taken therefrom, or in any other association or corporation owning or controlling any coal lands: Provided, however, That any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held two years after its acquisition and not longer, and in case of minority or other disability such time as the court may decree.

"That any person, association, corporation, member of such association, or stockholder of such corporation who violates any of the foregoing provisions shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a felony, and punished by a fine of not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of not exceeding two years, or both.

"That if any of such coal lands entered after the passage of this act shall be owned, leased, trusteed, possessed, or controlled by any device permanently, temporarily, directly, indirectly, tacitly, or in any manner whatsoever, so that they form part of or in any way effect any combination, or are in anywise controlled by any combination in the form of a trust, or the subject of any contract or conspiracy in restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, or of any holding of such lands by individuals, copartnerships, association, corporation, mortgage, stock ownership, or control, in excess of 2,560 acres, the title thereto shall be forfeited to the United States of America by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General in the courts for the purpose.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to, and upon the petition of any qualified applicant shall, divide any of the coal lands or the deposits of coal, classified and unclassified, owned by the United States, including the Territory of Alaska, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act, into leasing tracts of 40 acres each, or multiples thereof, and in such form as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will permit the most economical mining of the coal in such tracts, but in no case exceeding 2,560 acres in any one leasing tract; and thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, from time to time upon the request of any qualified applicant or on his own motion, offer such lands or deposits of coal for leasing, and, upon a royalty fixed by him in advance, shall award leases thereof through advertisement, by competitive bidding, or, in case of lignite or low-grade coals, such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, to any qualified applicant, unless previously entered under section 2 of this act: Provided, That no railroad or other common carrier shall be permitted to take or acquire through lease or permit under this act any coal lands or deposits of coal in excess of such area or quantity as may be required and used solely for its own use, and such limitation of use shall be expressed in all leases or permits issued to railroads or common carriers hereunder. That such a railroad or common carrier may be permitted to take under the foregoing provisions not to exceed one lease hereunder upon and for each 200 miles of its line in actual operation. The term 'railroad' or 'common carrier' as used in this act shall include any company or corporation owning or operating a railroad, whether under a contract, agreement, or lease, and any company or corporation subsidiary or auxiliary thereto, whether directly or indirectly connected with such railroad or common carrier, but shall not include spurs, switches, or branch lines operated by any lessee and necessary to connect the mine with the line or lines of any railroad or other common carrier.

"SEC. 4. That any person, association, or corporation holding a lease of coal lands or coal deposits under this act may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, upon a finding by him that it will be for the advantage of the lessee and the United States, secure modifications of his or its original lease by including additional coal lands or coal deposits contiguous to those embraced in such lease, but in no event shall the total area embraced in such modified lease exceed in the aggregate 2,560 acres.

"That upon satisfactory showing by any lessee to the Secretary of the Interior that all of the workable deposits of coal within a tract covered by his or its lease will be exhausted, worked out, or removed within three years thereafter, the Secretary of the Interior may, within his discretion, lease to such lessee an additional tract of land or coal deposits, which, including the coal area remaining in the existing lease, shall not exceed 2,560 acres, through the same procedure and under the same conditions as in case of an original lease.

"SEC. 5. That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest will be subserved thereby, lessees holding under lease areas not exceeding the maximum permitted under this act may consolidate their leases or holdings through the surrender of the original leases or holdings and the inclusion of such areas in a new lease of not to exceed 2,560 acres of contiguous lands.

"SEC. 6. That where coal lands aggregating 2,560 acres and subject to lease hereunder do not exist as contiguous areas, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, if, in his opinion, the interests of the public and of the lessee will be thereby subserved, to embrace in a single lease sections or parts of sections which can be operated as a single mine or unit.

"SEC. 7. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the coal in the lands covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed in advance of offering the same, and which shall be not less than 2 cents per ton of 2,000 pounds, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the coal from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter, on the lands or coal deposits covered by such lease, at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the same, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, not less than 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and not less than $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of diligent development and continued operation of the mine or mines, except when such operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his judgment the public interest will be subserved thereby, in lieu of the provision herein contained requiring continuous operation of the mine or mines, provide in the lease for the payment of an annual advance royalty upon a minimum number of tons of coal, which in no case shall aggregate less than the amount of rentals herein provided for.

"SEC. 8. That in order to provide for the supply of strictly local domestic needs for fuel, the Secretary of the Interior may, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in advance, issue limited licenses or permits to individuals or associations of indivduals to prospect for, mine, and take for their use but not for sale, coal from the public lands without payment of royalty for the coal mined or the land occupied, on such conditions not inconsistent with this act as in his opinion will safeguard the public interest: Provided, That this privilege shall not extend to any corporaton: And provided further, That in the case of municipal corporations the Secretary of the Interior may issue such limited license or permit, for not to exceed 160 acres, upon condition that such municipal corporations will mine the coal therein under proper conditions and dispose of the same without profit: And provided further, That the acquisition or holding of a lease under the preceding sections of this act shall be no bar to the acquisition of such tract or operation of such mine under said limited license.

"PHOSPHATES.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease or sell to any person qualified under this act any lands belonging to the United States containing deposits of phosphates, under such restrictions and upon such terms as are herein specified, through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as the Secretary of the Interior may by general regulation adopt.

"SEC. 10. That each lease or sale shall be for not to exceed 2,560 acres of land to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, if surveyed, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys; if unsurveyed, to be surveyed by the Government at the expense of the applicant for lease, in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of public lands, and the lands leased shall be conformed to and taken in accordance with the legal subdivisions of such survey; deposits made to cover expense of surveys shall be deemed appropriated for that purpose; and any excess deposits shall be repaid to the person, association, or corporation making such deposits or their legal representatives: Provided, That the land embraced in any one lease shall be in compact form, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width.

"SEC. 11. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the phosphates or phosphate rock covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as may be specified in the lease, which shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of offering the same, which shall be not less than 2 per cent of the gross value of the output of phosphates or phosphate rock at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the phosphates or phosphate rock from the mine, and an annual rental payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease at such rate as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior prior to offering the lease, which shall be not less than 25 cents per acre for the first year thereafter, 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively, and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for indeterminate periods upon condition of a minimum annual production, except when operation shall be interrupted by strikes, the elements, or casualties not attributable to the lessee, and upon the further condition that at the end of each 20-year period succeeding the date of the lease such readjustment of terms and conditions may be made as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 12. That any qualified applicant to whom the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lease to develop and extract phosphates or phosphate rock under the provisions of this act shall have the right to use so much of the surface of unappropriated and unentered lands, not exceeding 40 acres, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be necessary for the proper prospecting for or development, extraction, treatment, and removal of such mineral deposits.

"OIL AND GAS.

"SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas well and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit, and shall, within one year from and after the date of permit, drill one or more wells for oil or gas to a depth of not less than 500 feet each, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, and shall, within two years from date of the permit, drill for oil or gas to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered. The Secretary of the Interior may, if he shall find that the permittee has been unable with the exercise of diligence to test the land in the time granted by the permit, extend any such permit for such time and upon such conditions as he shall prescribe. Whether the lands sought in any such application and permit are surveyed or unsurveyed the applicant shall, prior to filing his application for permit, locate such lands in a reasonably compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys if the land be surveyed; and in an approximately square or rectangular tract if the land be an unsurveyed tract, the length of which shall not exceed two and one-half times its width, and if he shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought, a monument not less than 4 feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within 30 days after date of said notice, the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified. The applicant shall, within 90 days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby: Provided, That in the Territory of Alaska prospecting permits, not more than five in number, may be granted to any qualified applicant for periods not exceeding four years, actual drilling operations shall begin within two years from date of permit, and oil and gas wells shall be drilled to a depth of not less than 500 feet, unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within three years from date of the permit and to an aggregate depth of not less than 2,000 feet unless valuable deposits of oil or gas shall be sooner discovered, within four years from date of permit: And provided further, That in said Territory the applicant shall have a preference right over others to a permit for land identified by temporary monuments and notice posted on or near the same for six months following such marking and posting, and upon receiving a permit he shall mark the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments within one year after receiving such permit.

"SEC. 14. That upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form and according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims if located upon unsurveyed lands: Provided, That said permittee shall be given a preference right to lease the remaining and unpatented lands embraced within the limits of his permit at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be upon the same terms and conditions as provided for other general leases.

"SEC. 15. That until the permittee shall apply for patent to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for he shall pay to the United States 20 per cent of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of or held by him for sale or other disposition.

"SEC. 16. That all permits, leases, entries, and patents of lands containing oil or gas, made or issued under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands so located, leased, entered, or patented, unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the locator, lessee, entryman, or patentee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata, to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of the provisions of this section shall constitute grounds for the forfeiture of the location, entry, lease, or patent, to be enforced through appropriate proceedings in courts of competent jurisdiction.

"SEC. 17. That all unappropriated deposits of oil or gas situated within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field and the unentered lands containing the same, except, however, those embraced in any prospecting permit during the life of the same, may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior through competitive bidding under general regulations in areas not exceeding 1,280 acres and in tracts which shall not exceed in length two and one-half times their width, such leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, which shall be not less than one-eighth in amount of value of the production, which royalty on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas, and the payment in advance of a rental of not less than $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year. Leases shall be for a period of 20 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods.

"SEC. 18. That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

"Upon relinquishment to the United States, filed in the General Land Office within six months after the approval of this act, of all right, title, and interest claimed and possessed since prior to July 3, 1910, by the claimant hereunder or his predecessor in interest under the preexisting petroleum placer law to any oil or gas bearing land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, and not within any naval petroleum reserve, and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all the oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced, after first deducting the actual and necessary expenses of such production: Provided, That not more than one-half of the area within the geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field shall be leased to any one claimant under the provisions of this section when the area of such geological oil structure exceeds 640 acres. Any claimant or his successor subject to this limitation shall, however, have the right to select and receive the lease as in this section provided for that portion of his claim or claims equal to, but not in excess of, said one-half of the area of such geologic oil structure.

"All such leases shall be made and the amount to be paid for oil and gas produced after the execution of such lease shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate rules and regulations: Provided, however, That as to all such claims situate within naval petroleum reserves the producing wells thereon only shall be leased, together with an area of land sufficient for the operation thereof, upon the terms and payment of royalties for past and future production as herein provided for in the leasing of claims. No wells shall be drilled in the land subject to this provision within 660 feet of any such leased well without the consent of the lessee: Provided, however, That the President may, in his discretion, lease the remainder of any such claim upon which such wells have been drilled, and in the event of such leasing said claimant or his successor shall have a preference right to such lease: And provided further, That he may permit the drilling of additional wells by the claimant or his successor within the limited area of 660 feet theretofore provided for, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"Upon the delivery and acceptance of the lease, as in this section provided, all suits brought by the Government affecting such lands may be settled and adjusted in accordance herewith and all moneys impounded in such suits or under the act of August 25, 1914 (38 Stats. L., p. 708), shall be paid over to the parties entitled thereto. In case of conflicting claimants for leases under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant leases to one or more of them as shall be deemed just.

"Leases granted or compromised settlements made hereunder upon any tract of land shall inure to the benefit of all persons or corporations, except those guilty of fraud, having an interest with the lessee or claimant, by contract or lease, in such land proportionately in accordance with the interest so represented by such existing contract or lease, subject to the assumption proportionately by each such existing interest of the obligations of such lease or settlement so granted or made hereunder, which proportionate benefits and obligations shall be incorporated in such lease or compromise agreement.

"SEC. 19. That any person who, at the time of any withdrawal order, or on January 1, 1918, was a bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas lands not withdrawn from entry, and who had previously performed all acts under then existing laws necessary to valid locations thereof except to make discovery, and upon which discovery had not been made prior to the passage of this act, and who has performed work or expended on or for the benefit of such locations an amount equal in the aggregate of $250 for each location if application therefor shall be made within three months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to prospecting permits thereon upon the same terms and conditions as other permits provided for in this act, or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof: Provided, That such lands are not reserved for the use of the Navy: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of any fraud or who had knowledge or reasonable grounds to know of any fraud or who has not acted honestly and in good faith shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: And provided further, That within one year after the passage of this act where any land has been included within an oil withdrawal or classification heretofore made after bona fide entry upon the same by a qualified homestead or desert-land entryman and where said entryman has complied with the requirements of the law relating to such entries up to the time when said withdrawal was made, said entryman or the patentee under such entry, or his assigns when such assignment was made prior to January 1, 1918, shall be given a preference right to a prospecting permit for the same under the same terms and conditions as prescribed in this act.

"OIL SHALE.

"SEC. 20. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to lease to any person or corporation qualified under this act any deposits of oil shale belonging to the United States and the surface of so much of the public lands containing such deposits, or land adjacent thereto, as may be required for the extraction and reduction of the leased minerals, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as he may prescribe; that no lease hereunder shall exceed 5,120 acres of land, to be described by the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if unsurveyed to be surveyed by the United States, at the expense of the applicant, in accordance with the laws and regulations for the survey of public lands. Leases may be for indeterminate periods, upon such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to methods of mining, prevention of waste, and productive development. For the privilege of mining, extracting, and disposing of the oil or other minerals covered by a lease under this section the lessee shall pay to the United States such royalties as shall be specified in the lease and an annual rental, payable at the beginning of each year, at the rate of 50 cents per acre per annum, for the lands included in the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year; such royalties to be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period by the Secretary of the Interior:

Provided, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products from shales the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any royalty and rental during the first five years of any lease: Provided, That any person having a valid location to such minerals under existing laws on January 1, 1918, shall, upon the relinquishment of such location, be entitled to a lease under the provisions of this section for such area of the land relinquished as shall not exceed the maximum area authorized by this section to be leased to an individual or corporation: Provided, however, That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil-shale bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section: Provided further, That not more than one lease shall be granted under this section to any one person, association, or corporation.

"ALASKA OIL PROVISO.

"SEC. 21. That any bona fide occupant or claimant of oil or gas bearing lands in the Territory of Alaska, or his successors or assigns, who prior to withdrawal had complied otherwise with the requirements of the mining laws, but had made no discovery of oil or gas in wells and who prior to withdrawal had made substantial improvements on or for each location or had prior to the passage of this act expended not less than $250 in improvements on or for each location shall be entitled, upon relinquishment or surrender to the United States within one year from the date of this act, or within six months after final denial or withdrawal of application for patent to a prospecting permit or permits, lease or leases, under this act covering such lands, not exceeding five permits or leases in number and not exceeding an aggregate of 1,280 acres in each: Provided, That leases issued in Alaska under this act, whether as a result of prospecting permits or otherwise, shall be upon such rental and royalties as shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and specified in the lease, and be subject to readjustment at the end of each 20-year period of the lease: Provided further, That for the purpose of encouraging the production of petroleum products in Alaska the Secretary may, in his discretion, waive the payment of any rental or royalty not exceeding the first five years of any lease.

"No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

"SODIUM.

"SEC. 22. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for chlorides, sulphates, carbonates, borates, silicates, or nitrates of sodium dissolved in and soluble in water, and accumulated by concentration, in lands belonging to the United States for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 2,560 acres of land in reasonably compact form: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to lands in San Bernardino County, Cal.

"SEC. 23. That upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of one of the substances enumerated in section 22 hereof has been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting limit, to be taken and described by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys, or if the land be not surveyed by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with the laws, rules, and regulations governing the survey of placer mining claims. All other lands described and embraced in such a prospecting permit, from and after the exercise of the preference right to patent accorded to the discoverer, and all other lands known to contain such valuable deposits as are enumerated in section 22 hereof and not covered by permits or leases, except such lands as are situated in said county of San Bernardino, shall be held subject to lease or sale, and may be leased or sold by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt, and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 2,560 acres, all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease, and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre for the first calendar year or fraction thereof and $1 per acre per annum thereafter during the continuance of the lease, the rental paid for any one year to be credited on the royalty for that year. Leases may be for indeterminate periods upon such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be incorporated in each lease or prescribed in general regulation theretofore issued by the Secretary of the Interior, including covenants relative to mining methods, waste, period of preliminary development and minimum production, and a patentee under this section may be lessee of the remaining lands in his permit.

"SEC. 24. That in addition to areas of such mineral land which may be included in any such prospecting permits or leases, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to a permittee or lessee of lands containing sodium deposits, and subject to the payment of an annual rental of not less than 25 cents per acre, the exclusive right to use, during the life of the permit or lease, a tract of unoccupied nonmineral public land, not exceeding 20 acres in area for camp sites, refining works, and other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the permit or lease.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO COAL, PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, AND GAS LEASES.

"SEC. 25. That the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit, and shall insert in every such permit issued under the provisions of this act appropriate provisions for its cancellation by him.

"SEC. 26. That no person, association, or corporation, except as herein provided, shall take or hold more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease during the life of such lease; no person, association, or corporation shall take or hold, at one time, more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State, and not more than one lease within the geologic structure of a producing oil or gas field; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than such number of leases; and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof which, together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease under this act, or which, together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions hereof, exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres allowed to any one lessee under this act; and the interests held in violation of this provision shall be forfeited to the United States by appropriate proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located, except that any such ownership or interest hereby forbidden which may be acquired by descent, will, judgment, or decree may be held for two years and not longer after its acquisition: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit sections 18 and 19 or to prevent any number of lessees under the provisions of this act from combining their several interests so far as may be necessary for the purposes of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing as a common carrier a pipe line or lines or railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or from the wells of other lessees under this act, or the transportation of coal: Provided further, That any combination for such purpose or purposes shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior on application to him for permission to form the same.

"SEC. 27. That rights of way through the public lands, including the forest reserves, of the United States are hereby granted for pipe-line purposes for the transportation of oil or natural gas to any applicant possessing the qualifications provided in section 1 of this act to the extent of the ground occupied by the said pipe line and 25 feet on each side of the same under such regulations as to survey, location, application, and use as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and upon the express condition that such pipe lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers: Provided, That no right of way shall hereafter be granted over said lands for the transportation of oil or natural gas except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this section. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section or the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior shall be ground for forfeiture of the grant by the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located in an appropriate proceeding.

"SEC. 28. That any permit, lease, occupation, or use permitted under this act shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to permit upon such terms as he may determine to be just, for joint or several use such easements or rights of way, including easements in tunnels upon, through, or in the lands leased, occupied, or used as may be necessary or appropriate to the working of the same, or of other lands containing the deposits described in this act, and the treatment and shipment of the products thereof by or under authority of the Government, its lessees, or permittees, and for other public purposes: Provided, That said Secretary, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided further, That if such reservation is made it shall be so determined before the offering of such lease: And provided further, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

"SEC. 29. That no lease issued under the authority of this act shall be assigned or sublet, except with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. The lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease, and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease, and may with like consent, surrender any legal subdivision of the area included within the lease. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said property; a provision that such rules for the safety and welfare of the miners and for the prevention of undue waste as may be prescribed by said Secretary shall be observed, including a restriction of the workday to not exceeding eight hours in any one day for underground workers except in cases of emergency, provisions securing the workmen complete freedom of purchase, requiring the payment of wages at least twice a month in lawful money of the United States, and providing proper rules and regulations to insure the fair and just weighing or measurement of the coal mined by each miner, and such other provisions as he may deem necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare: Provided, That none of such provisions shall be in conflict with the laws of the State in which the leased property is situated.

"SEC. 30. That any lease issued under the provisions of this act may be forfeited and canceled by an appropriate proceeding in the United States district court for the district in which the property, or some part thereof, is located whenever the lessee fails to comply with any of the provisions of this act, of the lease, or of the general regulations promulgated under this act and in force at the date of the lease; and the lease may provide for resort to appropriate methods for the settlement of disputes or for remedies for breach of specified conditions thereof.

"SEC. 31. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the rights of the States or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have including the right to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee of the United States.

"SEC. 32. That all statements, representations, or reports required by the Secretary of the Interior under this act shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified by him and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require.

"SEC. 33. That the provisions of this act shall also apply to all deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale or gas in the lands of the United States, which lands may have been or may be disposed of under laws reserving to the United States such deposits, with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, subject to such conditions as are or may hereafter be provided by such laws reserving such deposits.

"SEC. 34. That all moneys received from sales, royalties, and rentals under the provisions of this act, excepting those from Alaska, shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, but after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts derived from such royalties and rentals so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are or were located, said moneys to be used by such State or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or for the support of public schools or other public educational institutions, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That any moneys which may accrue to the United States under the provisions of this act from lands within the naval petroleum reserves shall be deposited in the Treasury as 'Miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 35. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment to the title: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title to the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House amendment insert the following:

"An act to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

In order that the specific modifications of the House and Senate bills, as shown in the foregoing, above agreed upon, may be indicated by section and specific amendments, they are set out as follows:

Section 1 of the bill as agreed to is section 1 of the House bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 3, page 1, House bill, strike out "monument" and insert "park."

Line 4, page 1, House bill, after the word "in," insert "other."

Section 2 is section 2 of the Senate bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 9, page 2, Senate bill, after the word "Union," insert "including the Territory of Alaska."

Line 20, insert the word "aggregate" before the word "value." Also strike out "$10,000" and insert "not less than $8 per acre upon the coal land so entered."

Line 21, strike out "within one year" and insert "annually for two years."

Section 3 is section 3 of the House bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 20, page 2, House bill, strike out the words "outside of" and insert the word "including."

Line 21, after the word "Alaska," insert "unless previously entered under section 2 of this act."

Line 8, page 3, after the word "applicant" and before the colon, insert a comma and the words "unless previously entered under section 2 of this act."

Sections 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 are sections 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the House bill without alteration.

Section 9 is section 7 of the Senate bill.

Section 10 is section 16 of the House bill with an amendment, as follows:

Line 8, page 17, House bill, after the word "lease," insert the words "or sale."

Sections 11 and 12 are sections 17 and 18 of the House bill unaltered.

Section 13 is section 9 of the House bill with amendment, as follows:

Line 20, page 9, House bill, after the word "granted," insert "to any qualified applicant."

Section 14 is section 12 of Senate bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 8, page 10, Senate bill, after the word "permit," insert the words "at a royalty determined by competitive bidding at a rate of not less than one-eighth, otherwise to be."

Line 9, after the word "other," insert the word "general."

Line 9, after the word "leases," change the comma to a period and strike out balance of the section.

Section 15 is section 13 of the Senate bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 14, page 10 Senate bill, strike out "or lease to the land selected by him" and insert "to the one-fourth of the permit area heretofore provided for."

Line 15, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty."

Line 18, after "disposition," change the comma to a period and strike out balance of section.

Section 16 is section 14 of the Senate bill.

Section 17 is section 12 of the House bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 15, page 12, House bill, strike out "six hundred and forty" and insert "twelve hundred and eighty."

Line 5, page 13, change colon to a period and strike out balance of section.

Section 18 is a compromise and in lieu of section 16 of the Senate bill and the part of section 12 of the House bill stricken out by the last amendment.

Section 19 is the proviso in section 28 of the House bill, as follows:

Line 17, page 25, House bill, strike out the word "Provided" and insert "Section 19."

Also amend as follows:

Line 5, page 26, House bill, after the word "Act" insert "or where any such person has heretofore made such discovery he shall be entitled to a lease thereon under such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe unless otherwise provided for in section 18 hereof."

Line 18, page 26, after the word "entry" insert "or his assigns when such assignment was made prior to January 1, 1918."

Section 20 is section 14 of the House bill.

Section 21 is section 29 of the House bill with an amendment at the end of the section, as follows: "No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of the fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith."

Sections 22 and 23 are sections 18 and 19 of the Senate bill.

Section 24 is section 20 of the Senate bill with amendment, as follows:

Line 21, page 18, Senate bill, strike out "phosphates" and insert "sodium."

Section 25 is section 19 of House bill unaltered.

Section 26 is section 20 of the House bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 23, page 19, House bill, after the word "phosphate," insert the words "or sodium."

Line 4, page 20, after the word "person," insert the words "or corporation."

Line 23, page 20, House bill, after the word "construed," insert the words "to limit sections 18 and 19 or."

Line 1, page 21, House bill, after the word "of," insert "constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of."

Lines 5–6, page 21, strike out the words "or from constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery."

Section 27 is section 13 of the House bill with amendments, as follows:

Line 16, page 14, after the word "lands," insert "including the forest reserves."

Line 2, page 15, strike out the words "the public" and insert the word "said."

Sections 28, 29, and 30 are sections 21, 22, and 23 of the House bill unaltered.

Section 31 is section 27 of the House bill with amendment, as follows:

Line 7, page 25, House bill, after the word "have," insert "including the right."

Section 32 is section 24 of the House bill.

Section 33 is section 25 of the House bill with amendment, as follows:

Line 24, page 23, House bill, so as to include "sodium."

Section 34 is section 26 of the House bill with amendment, as follows:

Line 5, page 24, House bill, after the word "from," insert the word "sales."

Section 35 is the first part of section 28 of the House bill down to the proviso on page 25 of the House bill.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to S. 2812, to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed to by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

There are no material changes in section 1 of the House bill.

The House conferees accepted in substance section 2 of the Senate bill, with the amendment including the Territory of Alaska and placing the improvements on an acreage basis, which in effect doubles the requirements on the larger acreage and relieves the smaller operator from a prohibitive burden.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the House bill, embracing the coal-leasing provisions and regulations, were accepted by the Senate conferees without amendment.

All of the provisions of sections 15, 16, 17, and 18 of the House bill, pertaining to phosphates, and now consisting of sections 9, 10, 11, and 12 of the agreed bill, were accepted by the Senate conferees with an amendment authorizing the sale of phosphate deposits within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and upon competitive bidding.

Section 13 of the agreed bill, dealing with the general oil provisions, was accepted by the Senate conferees without a change. It was section 9 of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 14 of the agreed bill makes one substantial modification to the bill as it passed the House, to wit, it provides for a patent to one-fourth of the permit as distinguished from a lease to one-fourth as was provided by the bill as it passed the House. In both the House bill and the agreed bill a preference right was allowed to the applicant to lease the remaining three-fourths of the permitted area. It will be observed that in making this change the conferees provide an additional safeguard in compelling the Secretary of the Interior to lease the remaining area at competitive bidding, thereby insuring a proper preservation of the Government's interest. It will also be observed that the royalty may be not less than one-eighth and it may be as high as the competitive bidding and other conditions warrant. This corresponds to section 10 of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 15 is a section not found in the House bill. Its insertion was made necessary by the modifications to section 14.

Section 16 of the agreed bill is accepted as it passed the Senate, being made necessary by the provision allowing a patent to one-fourth of a claim as a bonus to the locator. Otherwise the sections are substantially the same. The corresponding section of the bill, as it passed the House, was section 11, and section 14 of the Senate bill.

Section 17 of the agreed bill is a literal copy of section 12 of the House bill down to the proviso, with the exception that the area of land which may be leased through competitive bidding is raised from 640 acres to 1,280 acres. The provisos as contained in section 12 of the House bill are now inserted as a separate section and is in substance reenacted in section 18, and is a substitute for section 16 of the Senate bill.

Section 18 of the agreed bill is the so-called relief section. It embodies the substance of the provisos in section 12 of the House bill and sections 16 and 17 of the Senate bill. Section 18 preserves intact the naval reserves, subject to the pumping of wells already opened, which might be destroyed by the seeping in of water and other perils known to be damaging. It preserves all the oil intact unless the President, in the public interest, provides for the drilling by Executive order. The proviso to section 18 provides against monopoly in this: That no claimant shall be permitted to have a lease for more than one-half of any geologic oil or gas structure of a producing oil or gas field. The royalty for all oil and gas removed from the land prior to the passage of this act is fixed at one-eighth; for all subsequent production the amount is to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and in no case may be less than one-eighth and is without any maximum limitation whatever. Drastic provisions against fraud are incorporated and the legislation specifically provides that no claimant found guilty of fraud in any way shall participate in the benefits of this relief section.

Section 19 of the agreed bill deals with the subject matter provided for in section 28 of the House bill and section 17 of the Senate bill and is in substance the same as section 28 of the House bill with one or two amendments. Section 19 of the agreed bill is the same as the provisos of section 28 of the bill as it passed the House with two unimportant amendments. The first seven lines of section 28 in the bill as it passed the House is now inserted in the agreed bill as section 35 without change.

Section 20 of the agreed bill is identical with section 14 of the bill as it passed the House.

Section 21, pertaining to Alaska, is identical with section 29 of the House bill, save and except one amendment providing against fraud and specifically providing penalties therefor.

Sections 22, 23, and 24 of the agreed bill, pertaining to sodium, are the same as the provisions of the Senate bill. The House bill did not contain anything on the subject of sodium.

Sections 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, and 34 of the agreed bill are identical with sections 13, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27 of the House bill, the Senate receding from all the corresponding provisions of the Senate bill.

Section 35, it will be observed, is identical with the first seven lines of section 28 of the bill as it passed the House and is a mere transposition. It deals with another subject, and it was thought advisable to make it an independent section.

SUPPLEMENTAL STATEMENT DEALING WITH SALIENT FEATURES OF THE BILL.

Your conferees feel it their duty to make a general statement for the benefit of those who do not desire to make a critical examination of the several amendments. We feel such a statement will be helpful to those who want to arrive at a conclusion regarding this measure and who are not able to take the time to go into it in great detail. This bill makes possible the leasing, in whole or in part, of approximately 700,000,000 acres of public land, approximately 365,000,000 acres of forest reserve, 35,000,000 acres of coal land, 6,000,000 acres of oil land, 3,500,000 acres of phosphate land. Under present law all of this land may be passed to patent without Government regulation, without Government royalties, and without the receipt of any remuneration by the Government, excepting such purchase price as may be provided for the patenting of the same.

Sharp differences of opinion have existed as to the advisability of installing leasing legislation of any kind. But for many years the West has been practically tied up and no development had, due to the antiquated land laws that have been on the statute books and the strict interpretation of them, which has rendered them valueless, unworkable, and utterly impracticable.

The legislation provided for herein, it is thought, will go a long way toward the development of the West and of the natural resources of the West, and at the same time reserve to the Government the right to supervise, control, and regulate the same, and prevent monopoly and waste and other lax methods that have grown up in the administration of our public-land laws.

In addition thereto, royalties and rentals are provided, so that the Government may not be passing to title the national resources without receiving something in return therefor.

Drastic provisions against fraud are provided in the legislation. No one found guilty of fraud can participate or take advantage of any provision under the proposed law.

This legislation is made necessary by certain withdrawals made by President Taft during his administration and later by President Wilson during his administration. Both Presidents Taft and Wilson and the Secretaries of the Interior under them have felt the necessity of passing this legislation. President Wilson has urged its passage in his annual messages, but due to differences of opinion between the House and Senate and to the inadvisability of adopting a leasing law it has been forced to wait until this time. The bill in substance as agreed upon has passed the House during three Congresses. It has had the support of Republicans and Democrats uniformly in the House. It has been fashioned with great care. The committee have had the benefit of assistance and counsel of the Departments of the Navy, Justice, Interior, and Agriculture. The committee has had written reports and personal presentations of it from the several departmental heads. Your managers on the part of the House feel that every interest of the Government, including the Departments of the Navy, Interior, and Justice, have been carefully conserved and protected. Your managers on the part of the House feel that, while they have not been able to grant all the oil claimants feel they are entitled to, the claims of each and every one have been carefully considered, and that they have been afforded all the relief they are entitled to consistent with the public interest.

It is the thought of your conferees and they are firmly of the belief that the legislation is progressive legislation, that it is in the public interest, that it is along conservation lines, that it will help open and develop the West, and that it will break the deadlock that has existed in the West since the withdrawals of 1909.

The bill as agreed upon is the best judgment of your conferees, after six years of effort to secure its adoption, and is the best compromise that can be obtained.

The royalties accruing under this legislation are disposed of in the same manner and in the same form as in the legislation which has three times passed the House.

The House has unanimously passed this bill three times, and its provisions have not been criticized by the public. The Senate has each time heretofore refused to accept either the policy or the substance of the House bill, but now, with the exception of a few amendments, which your conferees believe are eminently fair and which do not take out of the hands of the Government the right to preserve its interests, the Senate has accepted the House bill.

SCOTT FERRIS.
EDWARD T. TAYLOR.
JNO. E. RAKER.
W. L. LA FOLLETTE.
N. J. SINNOTT.

Mr. JUUL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of opposing the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has the floor.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to yield the gentleman some time a little later on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for an hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to state at the outset that it is my desire to yield some time to those who are opposed to the conference report equally with those who favor it. At the end of the hour in my control, if anyone feels that we have not fully explained all that is in the conference report, then I think we ought to go on further. There is no disposition to have a single paragraph passed that is not fully explained and understood. There has been some controversy about this bill and there is some opposition to it in the House and some outside. There is one class of people who think we have not given the West enough and there is another class who think we have given them too much. The committee feels that we have hewed along the line that is fair in order to get the legislation. I want every paragraph fully explained. Has anyone on the other side of the aisle any suggestion to offer?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident that we can not dispose of this in an hour.

Mr. FERRIS. I think probably that is true, although there is quite a pressure here to get us out of the way as soon as we can.

Mr. MANN. I do not know where the pressure comes from just now. I thought we were killing time.

Mr. FERRIS. They expect to be back in before we get through. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. I have no suggestion to make except that clearly it will take more than an hour's time.

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is true. Would an hour and a half equally divided between those who are opposed to and those who favor the conference report be satisfactory, then to have the previous question ordered at the end of that hour and a half?

Mr. MANN. I think an hour on a side would be the very least that would be needed.

Mr. FERRIS. Perhaps that is right. Then, Mr. Speaker, acting on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent that there be two hours given to the consideration of this conference report, one hour to be controlled by those who are in favor of it and one hour by those who are opposed to it, the hour to be devoted to those in favor of it to be controlled by myself. Whom does the gentleman suggest to control the time on the other side? The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is in favor of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the time be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. FERRIS. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I make that request, and that at the end of that time the previous question to be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate upon this conference report shall be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask whether the speeches are to be confined to the conference report?

The SPEAKER. They are.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the rules of the House they must be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. WALSH. To renew the point previously made. I think we should have a better attendance here to hear the statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who is in charge of the conference report upon this most important matter. Therefore I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 326 Members, a quorum, answered to their names. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for an hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, this is the conference report on the bill S. 2812, the general leasing bill for the Western States and for the western lands only. It applies to coal, oil, gas, phosphate, sodium, and some other of the western minor minerals. This bill, substantially in its present form, has three times passed the House with some modifications. It passed the House in the Sixty-third Congress under the very vigorous support of the leaders on both sides of the aisle and was known as one of the conservation bills. It proposes to supplant the old, antiquated system of patenting the public land without any control by the Government and with no royalty to the Government, and install in lieu thereof a leasing bill, whereby the Government leases in small tracts to individuals under strict supervision, with royalty to the Government, or rental, so that the Government Treasury and the people in general may realize something out of it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How will this royalty be fixed?

Mr. FERRIS. It will be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Entirely within his discretion?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; for all future production; also by competitive bidding and under such rules and regulations to be provided by him as may seem wise and just.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For how long a term?

Mr. FERRIS. There are different terms. The oil shale is given an indeterminate lease. The oil lands proper are given a 20-year lease, with succeeding 10-year periods——

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I should prefer to go on with a connected statement.

Mr. CRAMTON. This is simply a preliminary question. I would like to know whether the gentleman can advise me whether there is available any print of the bill in the form in which the House passed it?

Mr. FERRIS. As the gentleman from Michigan knows, the rule of the House is very peculiar in that regard. After the Senate passes a House bill we do not have a reprint, but the committee has the reprint with parallel columns of the Senate. It is not available in large numbers, but the gentleman is welcome to what we have. It is also printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where everyone can read it and go carefully over it.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman this bill, coming up as it does this morning, comes as a surprise to some of us. I have been for three days trying to get a print of the bill in the form in which it left the House in order that I might compare it with the conference report and see what the changes were. Yesterday on the floor of the House, in response to the gentleman's query, the leader of the majority gave us to understand that this question was to follow the Army bill.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, and the reason it does not follow it is that the Military Committee was before the Rules Committee in reference to a rule with regard to a provision that went out on the point of order, and so they allowed us to come in at this time. The bill has been printed in the RECORD for several days, so, of course, no one could be taken by surprise.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall be glad to avail myself of the privilege of looking at the print to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman will be very welcome to anything we have.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman understands without that the conference report does not give a great deal of information.

Mr. FERRIS. When the Senate bill passed and came over here the House struck out all after the enacting clause and put in a new bill. We inserted the bill on which all were agreed; also the one that had twice passed by unanimous consent. The agreed bill has been printed in the RECORD since February 11, and it has been available for anyone to read. I desire now to go on with my statement, if I may. The first eight sections of this bill deal with coal provisions. The sections from 9 to 13 deal with phosphate minerals. Sections 13 to 20 deal with the lease of oil on the public lands of the United States. Section 20 of the bill deals with oil shale, which is a rock from which oil is gleaned after crushing it, and that has not yet proceeded very far. Section 21 is a provision relating to Alaska. Its terms only apply to the Territory of Alaska, and we make the rule a little more liberal for Alaska, because oil has not as yet been discovered there in large quantities; hence greater inducements are necessary there to secure development. Section 22 of the bill deals with sodium or salt; that is, salt beds which are found on the plains of this western country where there are salt beds. From section 25 to 35 it provides the administrative features of conducting this leasing system.

Now, one word regarding the differences of opinion. I repeat that when this bill passed in the Sixty-third Congress, with scarcely any opposition, there were some Members here who felt it ought to give larger concessions to the West. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has always been one of those, ex-chairman of the Public Lands Committee, and is entitled to great weight, and he always thought that we were not doing justice to the West and so expressed himself on different occasions. Again, in the Sixty-fourth Congress we passed the same bill, still hoping to get some intelligent legislation for the West. Again, in the Sixty-fifth Congress we passed it, each time with very great consideration, each time with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, each time with the approval of the Geological Survey and the bureaus that have to administer these particular lands and minerals. Now, there were those in the Senate, there were those in the House, who contended there should not be a leasing bill passed at any time; did not believe in it, did not want the Federal Government to lease the land at all; wanted the western people to get the lands without paying anything for them at all, as the law now provides they may do. Now, I do not think the bill is perfect; I have not everything in the bill that I would like to have in it. I would be as great as the Saviour if I had sat in the Senate conference for six years and came out with the idea that I could get everything I wanted, but without being boastful on behalf of the House conferees, and all five of them have signed the report and are in agreement about it, out of the 35 sections we have got substantially 28 of the more important sections as the House wanted it. Now, I think it is proper to debate for a few moments just where we have departed from the House bill, inasmuch as the House bill has three times passed this body.

We provided in this bill as it passed the House for a kind of dual system as to coal. We left the coal land laws intact and as they were, and provided in addition thereto a leasing law, so that the operator could avail himself of it if he desired to do so. In the Senate they insisted on a new coal provision going in which enlarged the present law, insisting that the present law had always been unworkable, and insisting that it should be enlarged, and it is on that amendment that I think the House yielded further perhaps than on any other. Still, the matter was in conference, and not pretending to know very much about coal-land leases myself, and feeling that we were departing somewhat from any law that the House had passed, I insisted that we have again the written opinion of Secretary Lane after he had consulted with the bureaus on this particular, identical provision. He did report on it. He did recommend it just as it stands. He did say he could protect the Government's interests, and I feel sure he can. I hold in my hand this letter of February 1, 1919, signed by himself, and sent up to us after he had in conference examined this identical provision on coal, and after which we made no change, indorsing it. I will print it in the RECORD so that the House may have the benefit of it. I have not the time to read it now, passing from that to the bill.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I was going to say that is evidently on a point that many of us have been receiving letters upon, and I would like to have it read. There is a difference as to that clause in the bill that permits the sale of coal.

Mr. FERRIS. I will read it. I was afraid I would take too much time and not have any left for the other Members. The letter says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: On December 10, 1917, you transmitted copy of resolution passed by the Cordova (Alaska) Chamber of Commerce with reference to the pending general leasing bill, and particularly with reference to deposits of coal and oil.

One of the matters urged was that the pending bill be modified so as to make the provisions relating to the sale of coal land applicable to Alaska. In my reply of January 4, 1918, I advised you, in effect, that the reason this provision was not included was that there is now a special leasing law applicable to that Territory, enacted October 20, 1914 (38 Stat., 741), and that this law had not been in operation long enough for the department to determine whether it will be successful and adapted to the development of Alaskan coal lands.

Since the above letter was written there has been further opportunity to learn whether the Alaska coal-leasing bill is suitable to conditions in the Territory, and I have concluded that it is not entirely so. There has been but little inquiry for these lands and only limited development. Four leases were granted under the present law and but two of them were able to finance the small operations that had begun.

After further study of the situation I have come to the conclusion that perhaps the field would be more inviting to coal operators if title were granted as in the States, especially since Alaskan operations are so far away from the bases of labor and supply.

I therefore recommend that Alaska be placed on the same footing as the States in the pending bill, and that operators in that field have the same choice of lease or purchase as granted elsewhere; otherwise, Alaska coal lands will remain in a disadvantageous position.

The Territory of Alaska is now included in the oil provision of the bill, thus giving it the same law as the States, which will be an advantage in the administration of the law, because the same rules would apply both to the States and the Territory and will obviate the necessity of administering and construing two different laws on the same subject.

I am therefore of the opinion that not only would it aid in the development of Alaska coal lands to have the provisions of the pending bill made applicable to Alaska, but that it would also be conducive to good administration of the laws.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

And we made that amendment. So that as the coal provision now stands the only amendment that we made to it was the acceptance of the so-called Shafroth amendment, which we submitted to the department and had the benefit of the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey, and a positive letter from Secretary Lane approving of the identical provision we put in the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the gentleman defer to a question on that point? I would like to ask him, in view of the statement just made, if it is not true that in section 2 the conferees have extended the language so as to make it possible for a corporation to acquire coal lands, whereas neither the House bill nor the Senate bill made that possible? The House bill expressly had a prohibition of it.

Mr. FERRIS. That was in the Senate bill. We made no change in the Senate bill on that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Not as I read that which I have before me.

Mr. FERRIS. I think you will find we made no change in it.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Senate bill says that any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law, and so forth. To make it clear, the gentleman will remember when in committee we put in language that made it expressly impossible for the corporations——

Mr. FERRIS. That was in the Senate bill. On page 2 of the Senate bill we find this language:

That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union not otherwise appropriated by competent authority—

And so forth.

So the gentleman will see it was in the Senate bill and in the provision that was submitted to Secretary Lane.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is a radical change, however, from the House provision.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true. This bill makes some material changes in the existing law, but coal men everywhere insist there should be changes made; also Secretary Lane approves the changes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the first place, a corporation can acquire the land; and, further——

Mr. FERRIS. He can not be a stockholder in any other company, as Secretary Lane explains in his letter. If he is, he can not hold any other lands or be a stockholder in any other company at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. When you come to permitting a corporation to acquire these, it is possible to organize a great number of corporations.

Mr. FERRIS. We have a very strong prohibition that the gentleman helped us put in the bill in the House, which precludes that, and we still have them in this agreed bill. Let me hand the letter over to the gentleman, so that he can read it.

Mr. CRAMTON. It would seem, in a matter of this great importance, that we might have had an opportunity to know when it would come up.

Mr. FERRIS. As the gentleman knows, conference reports are subject to be called up after laying over for one day. I have tried to get it up. It has been lying here ever since February 11. So I think the gentleman will agree I have not taken advantage of anyone on that. Everyone interested had ample time; it was reported from the floor, and everyone had notice.

Let me turn to the oil provision. That is a provision on which the big row has always been waged, and you will find those sections in the bill, from 13 to 20.

If there is any controversy about phosphate, I do not know it. I do not think there is. The sections on oil and gas will be found on page 12 of the bill, and they run from sections 13 to 21, inclusive. Section 13 is what is known as the permit section. They issue a permit to a prospector. He goes out on the public domain and drills for oil. If he gets oil, he gets a lease and pays the rent and royalty for the oil that he takes out. The largest amount of acreage they can get is 2,560 acres in wildcat territory, a territory on which no one knows that there is any oil, and 640 acres in any known producing field. Now, down in Oklahoma, on the Indian lands, the Interior Department now allows 4,800 acres in known oil fields. So I think your committee has been very conservative in holding that acreage down. But, as has always been my thought and contention, though many of the oil people and many of the conferees have disagreed with me keenly at times and have felt discouraged with my efforts, I have tried to hold the acreage down simply so that no one concern could gobble up all of that oil land. And I think we have succeeded in that.

Further down in section 13 it provides they must use diligence, they must keep on drilling, and they must keep on developing, so that none of this land can be held long at a stretch for speculation purposes, and none of it monopolized and bottled up for the purpose of practicing extortion on the public or annoying the people and practicing a monopoly. Over on the next page it has to do with some provisions about Alaska, and later Alaska is dealt with again.

Now, section 14 of this bill is the one against which criticism has been made, because there is a provision in there for patenting one-fourth of the land. I hope the Members of the House on both sides will give very careful attention to that, because criticism has been made of that in a circular that has been sent around quite widely. If an oil prospector gets a permit on wild-cat territory, that is, territory that has not previously been explored, and gets out on the public domain more than 10 miles from any known oil fields and takes out a permit for 2,560 acres and digs ditches, puts in water works, establishes tanks, machinery, roads, etc., and sinks a shaft and brings in a well and, in short, pioneers that country, he then gets a patent for one-fourth of the entire area as his bonus for discovery, and three-fourths of it is left to the Government, so that you provide a reserve of oil territory for the Navy on a royalty basis and for any other purpose that may be desirable. This House has been circularized as to that provision, and a complaint has been made because we allow the prospector one-fourth of the land. Why, great heavens, under the law now in force he gets four-fourths, and the Government gets nothing. The committee has saved for the Government three-fourths of all the land that is brought in as oil land, and we only give the prospector one-fourth for his prospecting and development. The House does not seem to understand the inadequacy of the old law.

I know that this bill does not please those who want the Government to take a pick and shovel on its back and go out and dig for this oil. It does not please some men in the West, who want us to give this land away carte blanche, without any regulation, royalty, Government supervision, or anything else. But I repeat that I think the conference committee is to be commended for having been able to mark out a line whereby every Government interest can be subserved and at the same time giving the prospector or oil miner a modest reward for developing the country. This method of allowing bonuses to the pioneer for his efforts, his zeal, and his expenditure are as old as the hills about us and will, I assume, go on to the end.

Now, let us proceed a little further. We provide in section 15 of the bill a penalty on 20 per cent of the oil if the prospector does not come in and turn over three-fourths to the Government. Section 16 provides for offset wells, so that the land may not be drained, so that the naval oil reserves and land that we hold may not be drained of their supply; and Dr. Manning and the Director of the Geological Survey, Mr. George Otis Smith, and Secretary Lane have all said that that was necessary, and it has already met their approval.

On page 16, in that same section, we provide against waste. We keep these wells and these claims under Government supervision, so that if a wasteful or slothful man permits oil not to be properly cased off and not properly protected, the Government can take the well away from him and case it up, so that the oil may not be wasted. Under the present law that now exists all of the land goes to patent, and we have no control whatever over it. The Government gets nothing.

Section 17 provides outside of Government fields, and they have a radius of 10 miles from a Government field that may have an area of 1,280 acres. In Oklahoma and on Indian lands they now give them 4,800 acres, so that if your committee has erred at all it has been on the side of safety and conservation and on the side of trying to preserve to the Government something which under the law is not now being preserved at all.

The gentleman from Michigan, or perhaps the gentleman from Illinois, asked me some time ago how long the leases run. They run for 20 years. If the oil is not pumped out in 20 years, they have the right to take out a permit for 10 years more. A man ought to have the right to pump that oil out until it is all gone. That is the only systematic way to do it and the only business-like way, and that course is followed everywhere. The oil developer that opens the well is always permitted to pump out all of the oil. That is the only intelligent way to handle it.

Section 18 is the relief section. In 1909 oil was discovered out in the West. They were then operating under what is known as the placer law, where men could take up the oil land without the payment of a farthing and acquire absolute title to it. President Taft placed a withdrawal order holding them up until Congress could act. Immediately the oil claimants and the Government got into a dispute and got into the courts as to whether or not President Taft had the right to make that withdrawal order, their rights having already been attached. A number of the lower courts held that he did not have the right, and it was a question whether the President had the right to vacate an existing law under which oil was being produced until Congress could act. They fought that to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court finally held that President Taft had the right. That left many oil men who had acted in perfect good faith in bad shape.

That left some men who had spent their fortunes out in the West with no relief and no title to their property. They came to Congress and asked Congress to give them some relief. This bill deals with these cases. To show you how important this is, the Attorney General has brought some 55 suits out there, and 2 in Wyoming, and under the impounding system they have stored up $15,000,000 worth of oil, or, rather, they have obtained $15,000,000 in cash from royalties impounded while these suits were being settled. The Attorney General wired out for me yesterday and said they had the figures up to February 1, and that they had impounded $15,000,000 worth of these oil men's property.

What is proposed in this section is to give the Government a fair royalty in the oil taken out and let these men have a lease for the property, retaining the fee title in the Government, and thus abandoning their rights to the wells and obtaining instead only a lease. It has been claimed by some that we ought to take the oil and the wells and everything away from these oil pioneers. Thank God, the Constitution says that you can not take the suit off a man's back without paying him for it. It would be impossible to get the Committee on Appropriations to buy a pig in a poke, to buy all these oil lands. Some have been advocating that. I do not believe in taking men's property without giving them a square deal. This bill has been very carefully considered. It has long been before Congress. This gives the best compromise we could arrive at.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. As a matter of fact, in the majority of the court decisions the claimants have succeeded, have they not?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, in part. There have been victories on both sides, as I now recall.

Mr. ELSTON. Yes; but there have been a large number of decisions along that line.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 25 minutes. He has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to have the gentleman explain the reason why the committee adopted a preferential consideration for these oil owners in California by not granting to the Government one-eighth of the gross proceeds, as is customary in the operation of oil wells, but fixing this condition after deducting the actual and necessary expenses of such production?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes, they did that; but there is no maximum, so that they can take as much as they like above that. It is open at the top. There is no limit—they can take what they like.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would take away part of the one-eighth royalty which the Government would receive, and in the other cases you do not append that condition.

Mr. ELSTON. Where in the conference report is that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Page 8 of the conference report, four or five lines below the middle of the page.

Mr. ELSTON. That not only takes one-eighth of all the oil they have produced up to date, but for all future production the sky is the limit.

Mr. STAFFORD. After deducting the actual and necessary expenses for such production. You do not insert that provision in any other instance.

Mr. FERRIS. That is only true of the oil already developed. That is not true as to future oil.

Mr. ELSTON. That is not true as to the future oil.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is only as to the past.

Mr. FERRIS. As to the compromise, what the gentleman says is true, because three members of the Supreme Court of the United States said these men were entitled to their patents, and most of the lower courts thought they were entitled to their patents, and the Assistant Secretary of the Interior rendered a decision that they were entitled to their patents, and most lawyers in the West said they were entitled to their patents, but the Government has held them up and impounded $15,000,000 of their money; they are now made to pay the usual royalty, which is one-eighth out of the lands they have always thought their own in fee. They are also compelled to surrender their claim to patent. Now, for all this leasing in the future, and for all the leasing in the country, as the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] says, the sky is the limit. They could take 95 per cent if they wanted to.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from California says this provision as to one-eighth after deducting expenses of production applies only to the oil already produced. I deny that. It applies to all.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It applies to all the oil that will be produced on these claims. I will read it and show the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman can read it in his own time. He has an hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have read it just now, since the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] made that contention, and his statement is not a fair construction of it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman has an hour, and can discuss that in his own time. Now, we have one section dealing with Alaska, and I understand that is satisfactory to all parties concerned. We have another section dealing with oil shale, which is a new method of producing oil. Then we have general provisions against fraud and monopoly, and we wind up with a provision that the Secretary of the Interior may make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out this act and to protect the Government and any public interest. That fixes it so that the Secretary of the Interior can make rules and regulations so drastic that producers can hardly get scant justice. If Secretary Lane was not both an able and a just man some of these provisions would be too drastic and might interrupt the West. I hope the Secretary of the Interior will do justice to the Government and I hope he will do justice to these oil men. I hope the Department of Justice and the Secretary of the Navy will help in doing justice all around. No one wants the Government to lose one cent, but, at the same time, no one wants the Government to bankrupt its citizens who are trying to develop the West.

Now, one word about the naval reserve. This bill authorizes the pumping of the wells that are now open and producing in the naval reserve. It does not provide for the opening of any additional wells unless the President of the United States by Executive order says that they shall be opened. The reason we put that in was because during the war the Bureau of Mines and the oil administration came down and made known to us that they could scarcely get oil enough out in the West to run the railroads and other industries out there, and we thought we had better give the President the power to issue an Executive order on his own responsibility to open some additional wells if the public interest required it, and that is the only reason that even that provision got into the bill. We had been keeping the naval reserve intact in keeping with Secretary Daniels's wishes.

Now, this bill is not satisfactory to those who want to give the land all to the West, and who believe that the lands ought to be turned over to the States and given away to them in patents. The bill is unsatisfactory to the men who want the Federal Government to dig the oil wells and dig the coal and dig the phosphates with its own pick and shovel. It does not suit them because it does not do that; but what I do say is that it carefully preserves the interests of the Government along the usual method of leasing on a royalty basis. It does dispose of that long-drawn-out litigation. I think it does justice to the oil men. I think it is a fair compromise at the end of six years' hard work, and I hope it may be adopted, and I hope this may be the end of this long-drawn-out matter. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask the Chair to notify me when I have used eight minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report departs radically from the position that the House has taken in this Congress and in two prior Congresses. It is an abject surrender of the leasing principle and of the conservation of our natural resources, and a triumph of the principle that these resources shall be appropriated by the exploiters of the public domain. This is particularly true so far as the coal provision is concerned. That is section 2 of the conference report. Under existing law, section 2347, an individual has the right to enter upon 160 acres and an association to enter upon 320 acres of coal land and to pay for it at the minimum rate of $10 if it be beyond 15 miles from a railroad and $20 an acre if it be within 15 miles of an established railroad. This conference report adopts in toto the view of the Senate and of the western Representatives, who believe in exploiting the resources of the country by permitting one individual association or corporation to enter upon 2,560 acres of coal land—more than the Cunningham claims in Alaska aggregated, more than the Matanuska coal fields in Alaska amount to—and thereby enable one corporation to get control of virtually all the coal supply in Alaska, and exact the highest price from the consumer that the conditions will warrant.

Worse than that, under the existing practice the Government fixes the appraised value of the coal lands, and they will not be sold for less than the appraised value, and the appraised value has run up as high as $400 or $500 an acre. A novel departure is established by the Senate provision which the conferees adopt, something that has never been recognized in our mining legislation before. It is this provision, section 2:

> And the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding, reserving the right to reject any and all bids which he may deem to be unfair.

The bidder is not limited to the appraised value. These lands will be open to competition and how many competitors will there be? This provision is but a blind, it is to enable the large corporations to have their stool pigeons enter upon these lands in the West and in Alaska, and then, instead of being bound by the appraised value, have the 2,560-acre tract put up at auction and have sham bidders bid for the land. This provision can only redound to the great advantage of the coal operator.

I have known men who have been sent to the penitentiary because they formed an association under cover to get control of more than 320 acres, because it was considered under the policy of Roosevelt and Taft violative of the fundamental principle of conservation. In prior conferences the conferees have stood pat in favor of the House principles. They now desert the House principles and surrender to the Senate policy of a sale outright, with a camouflage arrangement providing for leasing, which will be rarely utilized, certainly not as to any coal proposition that the large interests believe valuable to lay hold upon and develop.

Yes; there is a leasing principle carried in this bill, but it is carried for show purposes, as a blind, for everyone knows that any coal proposition will be appropriated outright under fee rather than developed under a lease with a string attached to it.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. At the conclusion of my statement I will. But there are other objectionable features in the conference report. When the bill left the House, so far as the principle of leasing is concerned, it was bottomed on the theory that we would not give an absolute fee to any of the oil properties, but have them operated purely on the leasing system. Again the House conferees have departed from the policy fixed by the House in prior Congresses and have adopted the absolute grant of one-quarter of 2,560 acres, or such less-sized tract on which an oil prospect has been granted, this without any limit on the right in the grantee to take all the oil on this one-quarter of the land upon which they may have filed. Naturally the oil interests who were fighting the leasing principle are well pleased with this absolute grant of one-fourth of the land included in the limits of their prospect.

But now I wish to direct your attention to the joker in another item in this bill that I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to during the discussion, which was attempted to be brushed aside by the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON], who is deeply interested in the passage of the bill. He controverted the position which I took, that in this relief provision, section 18, page 8, that as far as the millions and hundreds of millions of oil property the Government has withdrawn from entry under the reservation order of President Taft, that the one-eighth royalty prescribed was not conditioned upon the deduction of all the actual and necessary expenses of such production. The gentleman from California stated that that merely applied to past production. I again assert my statement and read the whole paragraph referring to these oil properties withdrawn by Executive order under date of September 27, 1909, in which the Southern Pacific Railroad and other large corporations have claims valued, if good, at hundreds of millions of dollars.

It reads as follows:

> And upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to the value at the time of production of one-eighth of all oil or gas already produced and saved from such land, the claimant or his successor in undisputed possession of any such claim shall be entitled to a lease thereof from the United States for a period of 20 years, at a royalty of not less than one-eighth of all the proceeds of oil or gas produced, after first deducting the actual and necessary expenses of such production.

That applies to all the oil that is produced, not that which has been but also all in the future that will be produced. I am advised by gentlemen acquainted with oil production that that will virtually take away from the Government any royalty, because under that authorization they can deduct all the expenses of operation and maintenance before the Government is entitled to its royalty.

In Oklahoma and in every oil country the royalty is based on the gross output, but here these California oil producers have sneaked in a joker which will relieve them from the payment of any royalties, where they had no right, under the position taken by President Taft, to these properties.

The question before the House is whether we shall, after we have stood pat for three different Congresses, abandon the policy of the House, which spelled real conservation, under a true leasing system, and accept the policy of those who believe in giving away virtually the public domain, particularly so far as the coal fields are concerned, as provided in section 2 of the bill, and as also provided in the oil sections, whereby you grant one-quarter of the amount of the land under prospect. These are too valuable possessions, saved after a hard fight, to be now sacrificed under the old régime of exploitation. Now I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman whether the appraisals will be abolished if this law is passed?

Mr. STAFFORD. I hardly think they will be. The language of section 2 is identical with existing law, other than the condition to which I have just referred and which I shall read again—> and the Secretary of the Interior shall offer such coal lands and award the same through advertisement and competitive bidding.

They will not be bound by the appraised value, as at present, but will be bound by the bids of the competitors, and everyone knows they will be few. Community of interests will prevail, with the mighty having the upper hand. The Government will have surrendered control as to yield and price and the coal operators will be reestablished to charge what they will.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not. My time is all taken. I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I approach the consideration of this conference report with conflicting emotions. Frankly, if the conference report could be defeated and there was hope of securing better legislation in the near future, I should want to see it defeated, but I doubt whether conditions are such as to render a better piece of legislation possible of enactment any time in the near future. As what I shall say with regard to the conference report will be in the main critical and very much milder in its criticism than my real feeling in the matter, I want to preface that criticism by saying this, that all gentlemen who are proposing to oppose this conference report because they think it does too much for the individual, that all gentlemen who are proposing to oppose it upon the theory that the bill gives opportunities beyond those necessary for proper development, that all gentlemen who think of opposing it because they believe it too liberal either as regards present claimants or future operators, are opposing it on grounds that in my opinion, and with some knowledge of the situation, are not tenable. My criticism of the legislation is not that it is too liberal, that it provides for the operation of these properties along too liberal lines, but that the committee in the Senate and the House and the conferees have evidently been so fearful of the criticism that they were not following the lines of so-called conservation that they have gone to the other extreme, and given us a bill that does scant justice to those who are affected by its provisions, and do not give a fair opportunity to those who may seek to develop the coal and oil resources of the public domain. The law as it has been agreed to does not contain provisions that deal fairly with present claimants or sufficiently liberal to encourage a fair and reasonable development of the oil industry of the country. That is my criticism of the bill, and it is quite different from that of some gentlemen.

With regard to the matter that has just been referred to, the little controversy between the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] as to section 18, my opinion is that the gentleman from Wisconsin is mistaken in his interpretation of the provisions of that section. The provisions of the section are perfectly clear. First, as to the sums now impounded the Government is to receive one-eighth, and on future operations in those cases there is to be a royalty of not less than one-eighth after deducting the cost of operation. In other words, a royalty that the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON] has referred to as having its extreme limit on the sky line. I have not felt that it was my duty or that I was called upon to spend my time in trying to work out the provisions of that remedial section. I felt that the people who were interested and involved were well qualified to handle their case before the committee, and I have not argued that feature of the case before the committee or the House. I want to say with regard to that section that I am somewhat surprised that the people affected by it are willing to accept its provisions. I think it does scant justice.

My objections to the bill are so numerous, they relate to so many provisions of it, that it will be utterly impossible for me to refer to them in detail in the very limited time I have. I can only refer to two or three features of the situation which I feel are especially important.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Regarding the relief provisions in the bill, now section 18 of the conference report, the gentleman's contention is that the conferees have not given the oil developers in Wyoming and California and other places the relief that they ought to be given under the law under which they started to do their work.

Mr. MONDELL. I said the conference report did them scant justice. In the majority of those cases those men were entitled to a patent, in my opinion, and that opinion is based on some considerable knowledge of the facts surrounding those claims. Patent has been withheld, and I think that the provisions of the bill do not give those men all of the relief to which they are entitled, and particularly with regard to their future operations.

With regard to other features of the bill, features of the bill that affect thousands of present claimants and investors, and multiplied thousands of people who would be interested in these enterprises in the future, I shall not have much time to speak. Before going to the oil sections of the bill, I want to say just one word with regard to the coal sections. I came to believe some years ago that whether the people of the West liked it or not a leasing system relative to coal and oil was inevitable, and I accepted the situation as I found it or felt it existed, and have tried to aid in the development of fair workable leasing legislation. Having started on the pathway toward the establishment of that system, I think that we should follow it, and the conferees in surrendering the position of the House, fixed on three different occasions, relative to coal, have, in my opinion, made a mistake. I do not know, no one knows, just how the coal provision now agreed to will work.

The acreage granted is none too large for a large operation. There is no criticism upon that ground. It was the same acreage proposed as the basis of a lease, but we are retaining the old principle of a fee title—not objectionable in itself, but objectionable as a part of a bill which claims to be a leasing bill. I do not know how those lands will be sold, whether or not they will be sold at the price bid or at a price fixed by the Secretary, providing he can find some one willing to bid that price. In my opinion it was an unwise compromise, but I do not know that we should criticize the House conferees for compromising on that provision. There are many people in the West who believe we should continue the sale of coal lands, and there is much argument in favor of it.

With regard to the oil features of the bill, and particularly as they affect the men already on the ground——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman desire any more time?

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have about 10 minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not give the gentleman 10 minutes; I yield him 5 minutes. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma can yield him some.

Mr. FERRIS. I am very much pressed, but the gentleman is the ex-chairman of this committee. Would three minutes do the gentleman any good?

Mr. MONDELL. The State I represent is more affected by this bill than any of the other States in the Union, and I should like to have more time.

Mr. FERRIS. Suppose I give the gentleman five minutes; we will make it up some way. The only reason I hesitated was I am pressed for time.

Mr. MONDELL. Under the placer act men generally located in associations of eight. Under the provisions of this bill in an entirely new and wildcat section an individual can secure 2,540 acres as a leasehold. On many parts of the public domain are associations of eight people who have gone out, and under the placer act have located a considerable number of claims. That number of people operating as individuals could under this bill in a wildcat field locate approximately 20,000 acres. In some cases under the placer act such associations may have located as much as that acreage, spreading it out over hopeful fields, with the view of securing somewhere within the boundaries of their claims land which might prove to be profitable for development. What happens to those pioneers who have gone out under those circumstances under the provisions of this bill? In the first place they are only given three months after the passage of this bill to determine what they shall do, altogether too brief a period. Within three months they must decide what they are to do, either contest the Government under circumstances that preclude hope of having a fair adjustment of their rights, or agree to take a prospecting permit for from 640 to 2,560 acres. If no one has been fortunate enough to develop a commercial well within 10 miles of their lands they may hold 2,500 acres among the thousands which they have located, but if they or anyone else have developed a well within 10 miles they must surrender their holdings down to 640 acres.

If they succeed in finding oil on that 640 acres of land, they may get a patent to 160 acres at the most. As to the balance of the 640 acres, they must enter into competition with all the wide world as to the royalty they shall pay to secure a lease. Those people in many instances have spent tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars, not only their own money but that of their friends and relatives and investors generally. These drilling operations are carried on with money contributed by a very great number of people. Anywhere from $10,000 to $100,000 may have been invested in one of these operations. All must now be centered on the 640-acre area taken at random in the hope that out of all their efforts they may get a title to 160 acres of land and the opportunity in competition with all the world to lease the remaining 480 acres. They are compelled to bid, after all their expenditure, which may run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, against the man who has not invested a penny and who may by bidding a high bonus secure the benefits of their expenditure. And gentlemen call that a fair provision of law affecting the interests of men who have gone out on the public domain where the presence of oil was not known and with courage and enthusiasm attempted to develop the resources of the country.

Now, with regard to the future—and this is the most important feature of this bill—it is true in a section that is not known or believed to contain oil, and more than 10 miles from a producing well, as much as 2,500 acres can be secured, but anywhere in the areas where men may have any reasonable hope that oil may be found the maximum is 640 acres. If conditions are favorable and men are lucky in their efforts, they may finally secure patent to 160 acres and the opportunity to compete against all the world for a lease on the remaining 480 acres.

These, in brief, are the principal provisions of this bill as they apply to the present locator and the future prospector. Liberal, giving away the public property, paying the spendthrift with the Federal resources! Why, the most parsimonious miser the world ever developed could not have drawn more illiberal provisions than these to which I have referred. There is one feature of this bill I find it difficult to discuss in parliamentary language. Imagine, if you please, that 100 years ago the Federal Government had reserved from sale and taxation title to all the coal and oil lands in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and provided that for the future no taxes would be levied or collected on any of the limitless values of those lands, that the State must seek elsewhere for the funds with which to provide schools and roads and maintain government in the industrial region built up around those valuable mineral deposits. What would have been the condition of Pennsylvania to-day? What would have been the condition of Illinois to-day if she did not have the right to tax the coal values of her land? People of that western country, accepting the principle of perpetual Federal ownership and lease, did at least expect that they should be compensated out of the sums taken in the form of royalty for the millions that will be kept from their treasuries in the running of time, because they will not be allowed to levy taxes on the values of their mineral lands.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. As long as the land is in Government ownership it is not taxed. Now, is not that the fact?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, if it is to be assumed that the public lands are always to be tied up and reserved and never developed unless we pass a leasing bill, then it may be true that the conditions under this bill are no worse than they would be with the lands so tied up and reserved, but I do not make and will not make an argument with the gentleman on any such absurd assumption as that. I have assumed that the country would be developed. If developed under fee title the lands would be taxable, but if leased they are not taxable, and my contention is that the people of these States are entitled to at least half the royalties in lieu of the taxes they lose by reason of the lands being developed under a Federal lease. It has been said that nothing is settled until it is settled right. In the truth of that maxim I still have faith that if this bill pass in its present form justice will eventually be done in this regard by a change of the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL].

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, Senate bill No. 2812, an act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, might well have come as a gift in response to a prayer running something like this:

> God bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four, and no more. Amen.

So, if you will take your conference report and follow me through the first 8 or 10 lines of page 6, I will show you that at times there is some very clever bill drafting done in the city of Washington. Section 13, headed "Oil and gas," says:

> That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such necessary and proper rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any applicant qualified under this act a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas upon not to exceed 640 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are located within 10 miles of any producing oil or gas field and upon not to exceed 2,560 acres of land wherein such deposits belong to the United States and are situated more than 10 miles from any producing oil or gas well and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field.

There never will be an individual who will go out prospecting and get one drop of oil under this law.

Mr. RAKER. Why?

Mr. JUUL. He can be kept off his little prospecting field just as effectively as if he had never entered it. Now, if he goes out prospecting and does not find anything, he is let alone. If he goes out prospecting and finds something, and that is what he started out to do, then you come with a clause that reads that he may develop his claim provided that "his lands are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field." That is the finest piece of law construction I have ever seen in my life, and I have seen some pretty poor law drafting in my day.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JUUL. Yes; I will be glad to do so.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman understand that that means——

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask if the gentleman is talking in my time or his own?

Mr. RAKER. I will not take your time.

Mr. JUUL. I understand this bill, and I can read it as well as anybody.

Now, what these gentlemen want is this, that the moment a man taps a well and has struck oil they want to be able to come to him and tell him in the exact language of the bill, "You are within the known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field. Get off of here."

What would you gentlemen say if a man were to come and say to you, "Here is a stream flowing over my land; after it leaves my land and flows over your land I want to retain the privilege of stopping the stream so far as its use by you is concerned. I want to stop you from using the stream before it enters my land and I want you to stop using it after it leaves my land." In other words, a large corporation in possession of one oil field possessing the clause that I am objecting to can invoke the clause that no man can locate "within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field," and the little prospector would have to be prepared to show the geological structure of the earth a hundred or a thousand feet down in the earth. The chances are after he had drilled a well and succeeded in locating oil the main thing he would have secured would be an injunction restraining him from taking his oil, all because, forsooth, he was "within the known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field" belonging to the big fellows.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUUL. I have only five minutes. Get me some more time and I will be glad to talk to you.

You gentlemen want to say to a lot of little men that they may go out and prospect, and when they find something and there is a mighty big corporation owning oil wells running 100 miles above or below, such corporation may say to the little fellows that they are tapping its stream. Let the prospector go anywhere he pleases and the burden is upon him to prove that he is not tapping the geological strata already selected by gentlemen who get the land on the prayer which I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman submit to a question now?

Mr. JUUL. If you can get the time for me.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Do you not know that that is identically the way it passed through the House and that there is no change in it at all?

Mr. JUUL. I do not know where it was passed, but it is bad law. I want to tell you that if you have some poor little man that proposes to go out into the wilderness and find oil, he will never get a pint of it under this bill.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman know that all the "poor little fellows" were represented here and insisted on that themselves and this other provision? They know better about it than the gentleman does.

Mr. JUUL. I have had men come to me in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the State of Illinois and ask for legislation which, if they had gotten it in the form demanded, would have made them sadder and wiser men.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON].

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be well in testing the effect of this act to realize what would be the situation if the act were not passed at all. At the present time any unwithdrawn, unappropriated Government land can be prospected and located for oil under the placer-mining law.

There is no limit to the amount of territory that can be got under present conditions. The present situation as affecting oil claims is such that a man can spread his operations all over the country and take practically anything he pleases, and when he discovers oil he can patent his whole claim and the Government gets nothing.

Under the pending act no such liberty is allowed. In effect all unappropriated Government land bearing oil or other minerals is withdrawn from location. Prospectors will be given permits to explore certain limited areas not to exceed 640 acres in proven territory, or 2,560 acres in wildcat territory, and if discovery is made the permittee gets patent to only one-fourth the extent of the claim and the Government takes profit out of the balance. This House must understand that every known geological structure in the United States that has any possibility of producing oil and gas has been prospected over and over again, and that all this bill does is to give persons out in the uttermost parts of our public domain the right to go out and spend their money and get nothing, perhaps, but disappointment.

When it comes to prospecting for oil under this permit to go on the public land nearly 90 per cent of all such ventures are doomed to failure according to statistics. As to oil, it takes about an average of $20,000 to $30.000 to put down a discovery well, so that under this bill the permittee takes all the chances and the Government has a sure thing.

Now, when those people get something of value, what happens? The Government says, "You must put it right into my hands. I will take all that any ordinary owner gets by way of royalty, and I thank you for going out and taking all the risk of discovery."

Now, as to what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] says about California, the gentleman from Wisconsin must know that there is practically only one kind of oil-producing land affected by this bill in California, viz, land in the naval reserve. The section that the gentleman refers to does not touch California in any appreciable degree. It touches Wyoming almost altogether. As to naval reserves, California has been doubly prejudiced. They do not give us the benefit of the provisions that the gentleman from Wisconsin speaks of as applying to California. We get only the mere bare wells that we drilled.

We are not only restricted to the wells, but they say, "We will limit you to the wells and take one-eighth of everything you have produced therefrom in the past. You may have spent it. We do not care. Give us one-eighth of everything you have produced from the beginning." Then they say, "We will take what we please of future production." That, in short, is the situation. We acquiesce in the provisions of the bill only because we want to get certainly out of a situation that is now working intolerable hardships to California. Our industrial life is dependent on oil, and we are forced to accept anything that is meted out to us. It is laughable to hear that we are getting more than we are entitled to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the question of conservation, as discussed by the last gentleman, is not really involved in this bill, as is contended. The truth of the matte is that under the present law we permit the taking up and disposition of all our public domain for homesteading, for desert-land claims, for the purpose of homes, the timberlands, the coal lands, and all the mineral lands, which involves the oil lands. The President withdrew certain lands for development. Congress then passed an act authorizing the President to withdraw additional lands for the purpose of seeing what disposition and use should be made of those lands, specifically reserving all claims of prior applicants to the lands withdrawn. The purpose of this bill now is to open up the lands withdrawn. The lands not withdrawn, amounting to hundreds of millions of acres, are not affected. The present laws applicable to the disposition of the public lands are in force as to them, including the placer-mining law as to oil and gas, as to gold, and all the other minerals, as well as to homesteading and to timberland and desert-land entries, as well as for all other development in the way of reservoirs, rights of way, and so forth.

The question involved here, and the particular question around which the controversy has been waged for the last eight years, is the land within these withdrawals, namely, where they discovered oil particularly, and, second, where lands were classified and withdrawn as naval reserves.

Most of these men have been upon the land for years, and prior to the withdrawal of the lands had developed them and had brought in producing wells at the time of the first withdrawal and at the time of the naval withdrawal; and the question is pending now not only in the courts but in the Department of the Interior, all of these men contending that they have a right under the laws to a patent to these lands. That contest is being waged. Their funds are being impounded, their resources are being wasted, their substance is being wasted, the proper development is not being had; and the purpose of this bill is, in the first instance, to open up the coal fields of this country and of Alaska, to the end that they may be developed.

The second proposition, in regard to oil and gas, is that the remaining public lands not within the reserves may be opened up to any man for development under a leasing system, in addition to the patent system that we now have; that the phosphate lands of this country, which are estimated at many millions of acres, may be developed for the purpose of advancing the general interests of the United States, and the same thing in regard to the oil shale lands lying idle, unused and unoccupied by anyone; that there may be a law enacted under a leasing system so that these lands may be developed, and the remaining coal lands, oil lands, phosphates, sodium, and shale lands may be developed under a leasing system as provided in this bill, reserving and protecting the rights of all those who have valid claims at the present time.

The contest has been acute and keen, having been participated in by private individuals, by the various officials of the departments, by those with imaginary ideas of conservation, and they have all been heard not only once but repeatedly before the Committee on the Public Lands, and their testimony has amounted to volumes. The same is true before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. This conference report should be adopted. As a member of the Public Lands Committee of the House, I have given consideration to this legislation for over six years and have worked for months on the conference and believe we have reached the best that can be had.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I will ask the gentleman from Oklahoma for three minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. I am sorry, but I have not the time to yield.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under such circumstances I will have to ask leave that I may revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BAER].

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, in war time I felt that we should develop all the natural resources that would help in any way to increase supplies of phosphates, nitrates, and other minerals which were imperatively necessary to win the war. The American people, however, are beginning to wake up as to the value of these great sources of wealth. We should not vote them away wholesale in peace times. I realize more vividly than anything else what the farmers of this country are going to be up against. We are going to need fertilizer in our fields in the Northwest as you are using it in the East. If we turn it over to private enterprise, we are going to have to pay $38 and $40 a ton when it is only worth $12 per ton.

And a more serious condition than that confronts us. Do you know that this bill is unconstitutional, according to the superconstitution drawn up by the peace conference at Paris for the new league of nations? Let me read to you from article 8:

> The high contracting parties agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions * * * of war lends itself to grave objections, and direct the executive council to advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of these countries which are not able to manufacture for themselves the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

The league of nations, with its new constitution, is going to prevent the exploitation of these great natural resources for purposes of warfare. These industries are going to be nationalized for the making of munitions of war. I agree with them in that. I believe it is a good provision, but we are passing legislation here to-day to prevent the President from carrying out his plan according to this proposed constitution—which we are not allowed to discuss until he comes home. [Laughter.]

In the face of this provision we are passing a bill which will allow these private interests to exploit and exhaust these resources. Do you know that England, France, and every other allied country, as well as the central powers, have vast reserves of phosphates and nitrates which they have not developed. They have been buying munitions from the United States, and if we are drawn into another war 20 or 30 years from now we shall not have a pound of these nitrates and phosphates left, providing you let these men go in and buy them up by wholesale, as you propose to do according to one of the provisions of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there have been three great outstanding conservationists in this country—Theodore Roosevelt, Gifford Pinchot, and JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, the minority leader. I want the Clerk to read a postscript of a letter from Mr. Pinchot, because there is not time to read the entire letter. Mr. Pinchot regards this bill as vicious. He says, "I believe that incalculable injury will be done to the public by its passage."

The Clerk read as follows:

POSTSCRIPT TO LETTER OF GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Postscript: The statement of the House conference report that "Presidents Taft and Wilson and the Secretaries of the Interior under them have felt the necessity of passing this legislation" is certainly not true as to Taft and Secretary of the Interior Walter L. Fisher with respect to the matters above criticized. And if the committee has any evidence that it is true with respect to President Wilson they should produce it. The statement that "the bill in substance as agreed upon has passed the House during three Congresses" is not true with respect to several matters referred to in the foregoing letter.

The statement that the committee "have had the benefit of the assistance and counsel of the Departments of the Navy, Justice, * * * and * * * has had written reports * * * from the several department heads," together with a statement that the House managers feel that every interest of the Departments of the Navy and Justice have been carefully conserved and protected, is grossly misleading. The relief this bill gives to trespassers in the naval reserves has been scathingly denounced by the written reports of the Navy Department and the Department of Justice The latter department has included the relief provisions as to trespassers on other lands in its denunciation.

The final statement that "the House has unanimously passed this bill three times and its provisions have not been criticized by the public" is astounding. It has not been passed three times by the House as to the matters herein criticized. The public has criticized it severely, I myself having criticized its relief provisions as to trespassers on the naval oil reserves by statements given to the press and by pamphlets distributed to every Member of the House and Senate, wherein I reproduced some essential parts of the severe criticism by the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy of this inexcusable permission for public plunder.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I ask that the entire letter be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LETTER OF HON. GIFFORD PINCHOT.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 16, 1919.

Hon. GEORGE M. YOUNG,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: I would like to direct your attention to certain specific defects in the so-called mineral-leasing bill lately reported from conference which are so serious as to demand its radical amendment or defeat.

As to coal, this bill pretends to put the selling and the leasing system to the test of practical experience by giving the developer his choice. In coal mining on private land the developer really has such an option and seldom fails to choose leasing, because he would rather pay a royalty when his coal is marketed than pay the supposed fair value of the deposits before he begins to sink his mine.

Before 1906 public coal lands were sold at nominal prices, substantially given away. President Roosevelt withdrew them from sale and submitted to Congress a bill to authorize the leasing of them. Congress refused to pass the bill. Thereupon Roosevelt caused the lands to be classified by the Geological Survey and offered for sale at their fair value, which was generally very much higher than $10 or $20 per acre, the old selling price.

The bill under discussion abolishes this system of classification by value and returns to sale at the old nominal prices, with competitive bidding above the minimum, a device easily workable by bidders to depress the price to the minimum. Nominally, it gives the developer the option to lease or buy. But by requiring the Government to fix the royalty before putting any area up for bidding it forces the bid into the form of a bonus.

Now, a bonus, so far as it goes, is as objectionable to a small operator as is the system of purchase, and for the same reason—that it requires a large initial investment involving heavy tribute to the money lender and a large initial risk. If the operator must make a large payment in either case he will, of course, choose to purchase rather than to lease. The bill deprives him of the advantages of a leasing system and gives him the opportunity to deprive the public of those advantages. It is, in fact, therefore, as to coal, a patenting and not a leasing bill.

As to oil and gas discovered in the future, it compels the Government to give absolute patents to the discoverer, leaving a small area adjacent to the lands so patented to be leased to others. The existence of these numerous alienated tracts in an oil field will go very far toward destroying that unified public control which is the main purpose of the leasing system as applied to oil and which is essential for the prevention of waste and for proper compensation to the public.

Most of the discoveries of oil and gas deposits on public lands not yet patented to the discoverers were made by trespassers in violation of Taft's withdrawal order of September 27, 1909, issued to give Congress opportunity to pass a real leasing bill, and many of them are now within the naval oil reserves. The known oil deposits in the United States will not last more than 23 years at the present rate of consumption. The only way to make sure of an adequate supply of oil for our future naval defense is to keep it in these naval reserves and in the ground.

Trespassers have attempted to seize these naval oil reserves. They are being prosecuted in the courts by the Department of Justice and are there facing defeat. The Navy Department has asked authority to buy out all honest private claims at their fair value. This bill denies the Navy's request. It relieves the trespassers on the naval reserves by granting to each of them who has a flowing well a right, in effect, to lease the 31 acres surrounding it, upon which he may be authorized to drill additional wells. The Government may lease the rest of his illegal claim, but the trespasser is given preference right to such lease. The Government is forbidden to inquire into the fraudulent character of any claim unless it can be shown that the corporation which has bought it and applied for a lease had actual notice of the fraud.

These provisions apply also to fraudulent claims on withdrawn oil lands outside the naval reserves, which means all unpatented public oil lands of proved value within the United States and Alaska. As to these, the bill expressly allows any single claimant to monopolize one-half the oil and gas producing area of any field greater than 640 acres and the whole of such area of any field smaller than that acreage. The Attorney General says that this means the Standard Oil Co. and other great corporations. Not content with this, the bill also gives blanket authority to the President, which means the Secretary of the Interior, to compromise any of these trespasses on the naval reserves or other withdrawn lands by division of land or division of proceeds, at his discretion.

Under the recent special act giving authority to make arrangements for continuing the operation of the wells of the trespassers during the suits against them, the Interior Department abused its discretion by giving to every trespasser seven-eighths of the oil wrongfully taken by him. It should not be trusted again.

Still another section of the bill gives these trespassers another method of getting what belongs to the public. This section is obscure, but seems to be for the benefit of some claimant who for some occult reason is not satisfied with the prodigality of the general relief provisions.

As to oil shale (rock from which, after crushing, oil can be distilled by an expensive process), the bill gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to establish a genuine leasing system, perhaps because no plunderer of the public at present thinks it worth his while to grab any lands of this character.

As to phosphate and sodium, the bill gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to make a fair trial of the leasing and selling system on equal terms. With a vigorous administration earnestly and courageously bent upon securing the value of these deposits to the public it is probable that a leasing system would result. With a weak administration it is likely that the lands would be patented to exploiters without fair compensation to the public or safeguards against monopoly.

As to national forests, the Secretary of Agriculture should have authority to impose conditions on mining operators and on pipe-line rights of way to safeguard forest interests, and especially to exact payment for all timber taken, damaged, or destroyed. The granting and administration of leases in national forests (there should be no patents for these purposes) should be wholly in his hands, and not in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, where this bill places it.

I have taken the liberty of setting these matters before you because I believe that incalculable injury will be done to the public by the passage of this bill.

Sincerely, yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Postscript: The statement of the House conference report that "Presidents Taft and Wilson and the Secretaries of the Interior under them have felt the necessity of passing this legislation" is certainly not true as to Taft and Secretary of the Interior Walter L. Fisher with respect to the matters above criticized. And if the committee has any evidence that it is true with respect to President Wilson they should produce it. The statement that "the bill, in substance, as agreed upon has passed the House during three Congresses" is not true with respect to several matters referred to in the foregoing letter.

The statement that the committee "have had the benefit of the assistance and counsel of the Departments of the Navy, Justice * * * and * * * has had written reports * * * from the several department heads," together with a statement that the House managers feel that every interest of the Departments of the Navy and Justice have been carefully conserved and protected is grossly misleading. The relief this bill gives to trespassers in the naval reserves has been scathingly denounced by the written reports of the Navy Department and the Department of Justice. The latter department has included the relief provisions as to trespassers on other lands in its denunciation.

The final statement that "the House has unanimously passed this bill three times and its provisions have not been criticized by the public" is astounding. It has not been passed three times by the House as to the matters herein criticized. The public has criticized it severely; I myself have criticized its relief provisions as to trespassers on the naval oil reserves by statements given to the press and by pamphlets distributed to every Member of the House and Senate, wherein I reproduced some essential parts of the severe criticism by the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy of this inexcusable permission for public plunder.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I can not do very much damage in two minutes. This is a mischievous bill. This is an attempt at public plunder in the expiring days of a session. As it passed the House the bill permitted the leasing of these valuable lands. The conference report contains a provision for the sale of the most valuable portion of the public domain. Instead of preserving and safeguarding the Nation's treasures we are to fritter them away. It is a surrender of the people's wealth to private interests. The conference report should be rejected. It can be defeated and should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. LONDON had leave to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, one of the most striking commentaries on this bill has just been read from the Clerk's desk, when one of the leading conservationists in the United States, Gifford Pinchot, makes the statement that this is a bill for public plunder. He says that the communications given out by the committee in regard to general satisfaction with the bill are misleading. He puts it even stronger than that, and says such statements are false. He denounces the bill as "public plunder." If it is, I am opposed to it.

I am particularly interested in the statement that this bill represents a few thousand claimants, as I understand the gentleman from Wyoming to declare, whereas the people interested in these coal and oil lands and in our natural resources number many millions, and the question is whether the conference report should be forced through at this time during the closing hours of this session, with no opportunity given here for amendment or discussion.

I was very much interested in a statement of the gentleman from Oklahoma a day or so ago that we should not criticize an appropriation bill of $1,000,000,000 then before the House—the military bill. On the second page of this report we find the Government is going to get an astounding revenue, under the recommendation of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], of 2 cents a ton on all the coal that is mined under the provisions of this bill. The lessee pockets a dollar for every penny he gives to the Public Treasury.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the minimum.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, yes; 2 cents per ton is the minimum. The gentleman in charge of this bill is proposing to spend hundreds of millions of dollars and billions of dollars, on the one hand, and he has saved to the Government from this bill 2 cents a ton on coal mined on Government lands to meet that expense. The gentleman from Oklahoma took the floor the other day and lectured the rest of the House, particularly the Republican side, because we were questioning some of the reckless expenditures contained in the $1,000,000,000 military bill, and, I suppose, for criticisms aimed at extravagant bills for waterways, public buildings, and other expenditures which the gentleman supports and which are being rushed through the House at this time. He is, of course, as Democratic national chairman, occupying a position of a good deal of prestige and is in a position to criticize those who differ politically; and I am very much interested to find—and I ask him to correct me if I am misinformed—that the gentleman who is chairman of the Democratic national committee from one Western State and also the gentleman who is chairman of the Democratic national committee from another State, who are both paid attorneys, have been in Washington working day after day for the passage of this coal and oil bill, which Gifford Pinchot declares is "public plunder." The gentlemen of the House know to whom I refer.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does the gentleman mean to say that I am a paid attorney?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; the gentleman is not chairman of any national Democratic State committee. I am not criticizing any Member.

If I am wrong I ask to be corrected. I am informed that the chairmen of the Democratic national committees of two States have been paid attorneys interested in the passage of this bill which we find is also being pushed through by the national Democratic chairman of the congressional committee, and he is the one who on this floor lectured us on criticisms against useless expenditures a few days ago.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman discusses many things on the floor and takes a good deal of time, and I hope he will let me have a minute undisturbed.

Mr. RAKER. I just want to say——

Mr. FREAR. No, I can not yield; the gentleman can get his own time. I was much interested in the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JUUL] a minute ago in regard to page 6, where he complains of the phraseology of this bill. I find fault with that phraseology but for a different reason. The bill provides for 640 acres which may go to one lessee. Ten rods distant the lessee may take 2,560 acres, or four times as much if the limited distance is crossed. That is the judgment of men who bring in a bill with that provision as to adjacent leases.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to misjudge or misstate anything in regard to anyone, particularly my friends on the other side of the Chamber. It would never have occurred to me if it had not been for the fact that the chairman of the national Democratic congressional committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma, who is a very popular man personally on both sides of the aisle, does not gather the correct understanding of the people for appropriations which he approves. Last fall you had a lesson, taught at the ballot box, of what the people thought of waste and extravagance, and I can assure you that propositions of this kind are not popular with the people. A few claimants comparatively want this bill, but when Gifford Pinchot, the leading conservationist in this country, tells the people of the country and this House of Representatives that this is a bill for public plunder, I can not understand how the average man will want to support the bill which takes from the people the coal and oil interests on public lands and turns them over to private interests.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is rather amazing to me that the gentleman should get politics mixed up with this bill.

Mr. FREAR. Over there.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; not over there; it is on both sides of the aisle. I am a Republican, and I am for this conference report. I am for it as the representative of Alaska. Alaska has more than one-half of all the public lands carrying coal, oil, and other resources of that kind in the United States, and we in that Territory want something done to give us release from the private interests which now control us. The bill for leasing Alaska coal lands now upon the statute books has resulted in monopoly in Alaska, has turned our coal resources over to one single great corporation, which controls our transportation, our copper, and our fisheries, and now threatens to take over our coal—the Kennecott Copper Corporation, the incorporated Alaska syndicate. Whoever fails to support this conference report now submits control of the coal, copper, and transportation in Alaska to the Kennecott Copper Corporation, the Guggenheims. This is the only chance we have to get relief. This bill does not go far enough; it is illiberal; it is not fair to Alaska. But it is the best law we have been able to get since 1906, when Alaska was bottled up by an Executive order made by the President of the United States. Then came the years when radical conservation ruled the Congress, and there was a tightening of the reins upon all of the resources of our Territory, and they were entirely withdrawn from development. One reservation after another was made upon our resources and our public land, until to-day the people are being driven out of Alaska as a result of this and other bureaucratic mistakes, and if this bill does not pass, God only knows what will happen to that great Territory even with all its wonderful undeveloped mineral and other resources.

I wish I had time to discuss the bill and its relation to the situation in Alaska, but I have not. All the laws that Congress has passed for Alaska with respect to coal and oil and gas since 1906 have resulted in a single monopoly by one great interest. Here is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to me, which I want at this time to read to the House:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, January 6, 1919.

Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WICKERSHAM: Your letter dated November 20, 1918, requesting information relative to Alaska coal-land leases has been referred to me for reply.

You are advised as follows: (1) There are three coal-land leases in force in Alaska at this time; (2) three tracts are either being mined or prospected under the leases; (3) one lease of 2,420 acres of land in the Bering River field, two leases of 1,400 and 1,440 acres in the Matanuska field, and none in the Nenana field, are being worked or prospected; (4) names of lessees: Bering River field, Falcon Joslin, assigned to Bering River Coal Co., New York Building, Seattle, Wash.; Matanuska field, Oliver La Duke and associates and Lars Netland, who assigned to the Chickaloon Coal Co., Alaska Building, San Francisco, Cal. The first-named lease was made June 8, 1918, and embraces blocks Nos. 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, and 24 of the Bering River field; and the other leases were executed as of February 1, 1917, the first embracing blocks Nos. 2 and 3, the second embracing blocks 10 and 11 in Matanuska field.

I have no extra copies of any of these leases, but you will find the form, which was substantially followed, printed in the inclosed circular, containing coal-land leasing law and regulations. I also inclose a circular regarding the part of the Nenana field which has been surveyed and offered for lease. One application to lease lands in this field was filed, but was withdrawn after publication of notice of the same.

My present information is that the La Duke et al. lessees have mined some coal but that mining is temporarily suspended. Their mine is distant a few miles from the Government railway, necessitating a haul by wagon or sled which adds to the cost of mining. The Chickaloon Co. has not progressed beyond the prospective stage in development under its lease, although I am told that considerable money has been expended by it in the work. The Bering River lessee is engaged, as I understand it, in prospective work preliminary to opening up a mine on the land.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
Commissioner.

Upon the basis of that letter, which is official, and I happen to know the facts myself, I am permitted to say to the House that in the Bering River field, after all these years from 1906 to date, we have only one lease of coal land made and that lease is now held by the Bering Coal Co., a subsidiary of the Alaska Syndicate crowd. The Kennecott Copper Corporation is the corporate Alaska Syndicate; it owns the Kennecott copper mines on the Upper Copper River which made a net profit of more than $22,000,000 in 1916 and has been selling its copper to the Government at 400 per cent profit. It is the owner of the entire stock and property of the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad from Cordova to its mines; it is the majority owner and in control of the Alaska Steamship Co., which does the carrying trade from the ports of Alaska to Seattle. This same financial interest organized the Bering River Coal Co., and is now financing and opening to development the single coal lease in the Bering River coal fields. If the lease does not cover the exact Cunningham claims it covers better claims nearer to the railroad which the Kennecott Copper Corporation is now preparing to build from Mile 39, on its Copper River & Northwestern Railway line, to its leased coal mine, about 35 miles away.

So after all the talk we have indulged in from 1906 to date, a period of 13 years, the Alaska Syndicate has now actual control of the Bering River coal fields under a contract lease signed by the Secretary of the Interior under the coal-leasing laws passed by Congress for the conservation of the coal fields of Alaska. It is a Government monopoly of the Bering River coal fields, signed by the Government of the United States, and made a monopoly by location and the control of transportation in the hands of the great corporation of which the Bering River Coal Co. is a subsidiary.

Your attention is also called to the statement in the Secretary's letter with relation to the Matanuska coal field. Here the only lease is one to the Chickaloon Coal Co., a San Francisco corporation, and whether it is a subsidiary or under the control of the Southern Pacific Railroad the evidence is not certain, but the statement to that effect is repeated on all sides in that vicinity.

Unless this House shall now support this conference report and give life to the legislation indorsed by it, we will remain under the old coal-leasing law in Alaska with a Government monopoly in the one great field in the hands of the Alaska Syndicate corporation and in the other field, with our $35,000,000 railroad to it, in the hands of a San Francisco corporation. Both these corporations have leases for 50 years with a 2-cent royalty for two years, and a 5-cent royalty thereafter for a period of years. There is no limit upon the power of either corporation to increase the selling price of the coal as they please, and the result under the lease which they now hold will be that they will add the royalty which they pay to the Government to the selling price of the coal, and add whatever profit they please to that, and then charge what they please for transportation and make the dear public pay for it. In my judgment, those men who call themselves "conservationists" and who are responsible for this situation in Alaska are enemies to that Territory and not its friends.

I also read to the House another letter from Secretary Lane, dated February 1, 1919, addressed to the chairman of the Public Lands Committee, which gives further light upon the situation in Alaska. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1919.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Public Lands Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: On December 10, 1917, you transmitted a copy of resolutions passed by the Cordova, Alaska, Chamber of Commerce with reference to the pending general leasing bill, and particularly with reference to deposits of coal and oil. One of the matters urged was that the pending bill be modified so as to make its provisions relating to the sale of coal lands applicable to Alaska. In my reply of January 4, 1918, I advised you, in effect, that the reason this provision was not included was that there is now a special leasing law applicable to that Territory, enacted October 20, 1914 (38 Stat., 741), and that this law has not been in operation long enough for the department to determine whether it will be successful and adopted to the development of Alaska's coal resources.

Since the above letter was written there has been further opportunity to learn whether the Alaska coal-leasing bill is suitable to conditions in the Territory, and I have concluded that it is not entirely so. There has been but little inquiry for these lands and only limited development.

Four leases were granted under the present law, and but two of these were able to finance the small operations thus far begun.

After further study of the situation, I have come to the conclusion that perhaps the field would be more inviting to coal operators if title were granted as in the States, especially since Alaskan operations are so far away from the bases of labor and supply.

I therefore recommend that Alaska be placed on the same footing as the States in the pending bill, and that operators in that field have the same choice of lease and purchase as accorded elsewhere. Otherwise Alaska coal lands will remain in a disadvantageous position.

The Territory of Alaska is now included in the oil provision of the bill, this giving it the same law as the States, which will be an advantage in the administration of the law, because the same rulings would apply to both the States and the Territories, and will obviate the necessity of administering and construing two different laws on the same subject.

I am therefore of the opinion that not only would it be in the interest of the development of the Alaska coal lands to have the provisions of the pending bill made applicable to Alaska, but that it would also be conducive to good administration of the laws.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

The House will notice that the Secretary of the Interior is at last persuaded that the present coal-leasing law in Alaska is a failure. He requests that Alaska be placed on the same footing as the States in the bill now before Congress, because he knows better than any other official that the present coal-leasing law is a rank failure, and has resulted in the worst sort of monopoly.

For the reasons stated in these letters, and upon my own information with respect to the conditions in the want of development of the coal lands in Alaska, I strongly favor the adoption of this conference report, and I beg every friend of Alaska on the floor to vote for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill passed the House we were in the midst of war and many of us waived many objections to its provisions, because of the pressing need for oil development. Now the war emergency has passed, but notwithstanding that fact the conferees have extended it far beyond what the House at that time approved. They have put in a provision for the sale of coal lands, and, notwithstanding the letter purporting to give the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, it is apparent that it is a most grudging approval, and that he fears it will result in monopolistic ownership of the coal fields.

He says:

I do not think that the bill itself as a leasing measure should be imperiled because of the insertion of this provision regarding sales. * * * Furthermore, the great trouble with the selling of the lands is the danger of monopoly, and that has been guarded against about as closely in this bill as possible.

"The danger of monopoly * * * has been guarded against about as closely as possible"—truly, that is but grudging commendation. It sounds more like a reluctant surrender of a conservation Secretary at discretion in the face of superior numbers of gentlemen who know what they want.

As to coal, this bill throws into the discard the leasing plan. It gives free rein to sale of the people's deposits of coal to the wealthy individuals and corporations who can win them by bidding or by stifling competition, and who, having secured control of the most available deposits, may develop them or not. It is only those lands not "previously entered under section 2," that are to be open to lease. And while "diligent development and continued operation" are required as to leased lands, the preference is to be given the interest that will buy, spend $8 per acre per year in improvements for two years, and may then shut down and stop development, play "dog in the manger" if it suits him to do so. As to coal, this bill throws conservation into the limbo of things forgotten.

The time permitted me allows only the briefest reference to the great issues involved in this report. I will only refer further to the so-called relief provisions as to oil and gas lands.

A matter that has had particular attention throughout the course of the contest of several years over this legislation is the relief provision as to oil and gas claimants who were hit by the withdrawal orders. Although the House prides itself upon being somewhat more strict than the Senate in some of these matters pertaining to conservation of public resources, you will find that in the Senate bill there is a very stringent provision to guard against fraudulent claims. It puts the burden of proof upon the claimant who is an assignee to show that he was clear of fraud. It reads:

That no claimant who has been guilty of fraud in the location of any oil claim or gas-bearing lands shall be entitled to any of the benefits of this section, nor shall his assignee be entitled thereto unless he affirmatively shows that prior to the passage of this act he purchased such lands in good faith, for a valuable consideration, and without actual knowledge of such fraud.

In the bill reported by the conferees there is nothing like that. There is a provision which is called drastic by the conferees, but really amounts to nothing, for it simply provides that the successors of a fraudulent claimant may secure relief unless the Government is able to prove they had notice of fraud, putting the burden on the Government. It reads:

No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith.

When we are going into fields of equity to extend relief to those who are injured by the harsh regularity of the law we should be careful not to open the door to fraud. That is especially true when the interests at stake are valued at millions and when dealing with a subject where fraud has so often been practiced or attempted. But here the door is thrown wide open, and he who comes into the court of equity, however soiled his hands, may keep them deep in his pockets and say to the Government, "Prove my hands are dirty or give me the millions."

Further, there is in this relief section a provision so sweeping in its provisions as to be most amazing and, in my judgment, most dangerous. It opens the way for grossest favoritism and makes possible grave scandal. I refer to the opening paragraph of section 18, the relief section, which is as follows:

That whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum placer claim under preexisting law to land embraced in the Executive order of withdrawal issued September 27, 1909, has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months after the approval of this act to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, to be carried out by an exchange or division of land or division of the proceeds of operation.

For several years Congress has struggled as to the terms of the relief to be granted these claimants. Section 18, as presented by the conferees, outlines fully the procedure to give relief to these claimants, and specifies the minimum requirements to be insisted upon by the department administering the law, leaving beyond that reasonable discretionary action. But that is not all. So wide and far-reaching is the first paragraph, this new paragraph evolved by the conferees, that the balance of the section, long and complete as it is, becomes either surplusage or camouflage, or both.

In that paragraph Congress throws up its hands and gives plenary powers to the administration to settle these claims without restriction and without any minimum requirements or safeguards whatever. It is a most striking provision and it is an example of the power of habit, of what Congress can do since it has the habit of giving power to the administration.

It provides that "whenever the validity of any gas or petroleum claim, * * * has been or may hereafter be drawn in question on behalf of the United States in any departmental or judicial proceedings, the President is hereby authorized at any time within 12 months * * * to direct the compromise and settlement of any such controversy" in any way he wants to. We turn it all over to the President to settle these claims "upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon" with the claimants. That means that underlings of the department, unknown and in quiet, are to enter into negotiation with divers claimants, many with devious ways and diverse methods of appeal, and settle claims and asserted claims, not along lines prescribed by the Congress, but such only as the administration and the parties interested may "agree upon."

Throughout, the paths of the claimant have been made easier, the interest of the general public has been given less consideration, and the interest of the individual greater consideration. In the keen desire to pass something, Congress is passing into law provisions it does not want, and the people at large do not want, and are passing into law other things it knows not of. The bill should be sent back to conference to meet the standards that have all these last several years been fought for in this House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CRAMTON was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the gentleman from Oklahoma that we have only one more speaker on this side.

Mr. FERRIS. And we will only have one on this side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time in opposition, 10 minutes, I believe, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this has been a rather long drawn out controversy, yet I am inclined to think it is being settled a little too soon. I have stood here for years, with many others in the House, maintaining that the whole people were interested in the special deposits which we often call the natural resources, and I thought it was to the interest of the country that men should not become inordinately wealthy merely through the accident of finding something that was hidden in the ground, when somebody was sure to find it sooner or later, and when a large share of the work of finding it is done by the General Government, through the Geological Survey. We have passed in several Congresses this leasing bill. I think a majority of the House, a large majority of the House have been very well satisfied with the provisions of the leasing bill as it passed the House. There have been some gentlemen specially representing what they thought were the interests of their own State, benefiting the State as against benefiting the whole Government, who opposed the bill, and I respect them for their position and acknowledge that their reasons have considerable weight. Now, the bill comes back to us from conference, with the leasing provision in the main fairly satisfactory and if the leasing provisions were not accompanied with some other provisions of the bill providing for sale of the property and in some cases restricting the leasing provisions as passed by the House, it would be, I think, entirely satisfactory now. I appreciate also that the Senate has been opposed to the position of the House, and that in order to enact legislation it probably would be necessary in the end to have something of the spirit of compromise actuate the members of the conference committee, and I am not sure but that the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], chairman of the House conferees, is entitled to a good deal of credit for even bringing back provisions as good as they are, because I doubt very much whether the other conferees from the House have felt inclined strongly to support the position which the House has taken heretofore, and I have no criticism of those gentleman because they have openly expressed their opinion in the House when the bill was under consideration. Now, let us see what this conference report does. Under existing law a man can only acquire title to, I believe, 360 acres of coal land. That he gets by purchase now by paying the appraised value of it, and while formerly, when I first came to Congress, the value at which it was sold was taken at $10 an acre as the minimum amount, I believe subsequently they have really appraised the coal lands and sold them at the appraised value. Now, here is the first provision in this bill, which provides for the sale of 2,560 acres of land.

Well, some little fellow somewhere without much means may take a lease of 2,560 acres of land, because he does not have to put up a large amount of capital, but the big fellow will buy the land, and then it is wholly without the control of the General Government. Just as an illustration, for years we had here a controversy about what was called the Cunningham claim in Alaska. Men were, I was going to say, turned out—I believe one man left the Cabinet, and there was a great furor, and it was almost the unanimous opinion of Members of this House, at least, that the Cunningham claim should not be allowed, because it provided for a monopoly in the mining of coal in the richest coal field, it was said, in the world, and yet under the provisions of this bill two men can buy the Cunningham claim. That is not very far from one may buying it. Twenty-five hundred and sixty acres. The gentleman from Alaska seems to imagine that the people of Alaska will get relief from what they call the Guggenheim extortion. Why, gentlemen, when somebody makes a claim on any of the Guggenheim claims up there, what is the process? Anybody can ask to have the Secretary of the Interior give him a chance to buy 2,560 acres of that for not less than $10 an acre, maybe $20 an acre—I do not know how far it is from the railroad—and then the Secretary of the Interior has to advertise it and sell it to the highest bidder. Well, I can imagine some time—it may be when I have a nightmare—that some little fellow up there will be able to buy that claim of the Guggenheims. Oh, yes [laughter]; yes. Under this bill the Guggenheims will buy it. [Applause.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest they now have it under a 50-year lease?

Mr. MANN. Well, he may suggest it, but I think the gentleman is mistaken, notwithstanding his statement. It does not correspond with the one he just made to the House, either. The same thing will occur everywhere. Under existing law you can get 360 acres of coal land by paying the value of it. Under this bill you can get 2,560 acres for $20 an acre if you do not have competition at the bidding, and there are a thousand and one ways to strangle or prevent competition. That is one feature of the bill, and I am sorry I have not got more time to discuss that with more information and more facts to give to the House. Here is another illustration: For years there has been going on a contest as to the legality of certain oil claims in California. The claimants said that they were entitled to patent; the Government said they were not entitled to patent. That controversy has not yet been settled. The claimants have repeatedly proposed a settlement on a division of the oil, and the value of the oil has been deposited as it is sold under an arrangement with the Government in the litigation that has been pending.

Now, we propose to do what? And you can hardly believe it. When it was first suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin a distinguished Member of the House indignantly denied it. He could not believe it, although he was strongly in favor of the bill. It proposes to settle with these claimants for all of the oil they have produced in the past by the Government taking one-eighth of the oil and giving to the claimants all the oil rights in the future on the payment of one-eighth after they deduct all their expenses. If we are entitled in a settlement of the claim to one-eighth of the oil they produced in the past, why are we not entitled to one-eighth of the oil for what they produce in the future? Can anybody tell me? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope I do not have to use it all, because I want to get through.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] very fairly, and very squarely, and very fully, and very plainly, as he always does, presented the very crux of the situation. I want to reply to the things he said, passing over many other things to which I would like to reply.

The gentleman made criticism of the coal provision. Part of his criticism was just, part unjust. I did not get the coal provision exactly as I desired it, but the Senate was insistent on its coal provision. I think in his universal fairness he should have added to all that he said that there is at all times reposed in the Secretary of the Interior the absolute right to reject any and all bids which he may deem unfair. Now, that is the only thing he left out. This power so reserved leaves with the Secretary ample power to protect every interest of the public—yea, every interest of the Government. Without this I would share much of the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois. We did enlarge the coal-leasing law in this bill in the conference report. The Senate insisted upon it, and the Senate conferees insisted upon it. This legislation could not become a law without enlarging it some. In my opinion, after a lot of study and reflection, I think it ought to be enlarged.

The coal development is not a barefooted homesteader's game. It is a rich man's game. You can not locate a successful coal mine and operate it on 320 acres of land. More area is required. The men in the House who know about mining coal, I think, will corroborate that statement. That is undoubtedly the view of all the departments, and all coal men, and all of the geological surveys we have had before us. I think the gentleman from Illinois understands that to be true. What I would like to have written in this law would have been a hard-and-fast appraisal, but the best we could do was to get the right at all times imposed in the department to reject any and all bids after first offering it on competitive bids and getting all they could for it. Of course, it is true that it has been appraised so the Government will know the value without a new appraisement and can intelligently reject, also can intelligently dispose, both of which are essential.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] feared monopoly. Of course, there is always danger of that. We should ever be on guard. On the other hand, the coal and natural resources should not be so handled as to fix the grasp of monopoly that already prevails. Write into the law what you will, and there is always some danger. Monopoly has been with us from the start. I hope by the passage of this intelligent bill we may loosen its grasp by competition. It might also be well for the House to recall that there are 70,000,000 acres of coal lands in the United States and in Alaska. These are the latest figures on the subject from the Geological Survey. To let the House know what an estate this is, to let them know what an undeveloped estate it is, I may call to your attention that if this 70,000,000 acres of coal land be divided into tracts of 2,500, you will find there will be coal enough for all who want to develop coal. We might add that this will be true for many generations yet to come. It has been calculated by those who are better at figures than I that at present rate of consumption the present coal supply will last for 7,000 years. Whether these figures are true or false the fuel supply is not in danger.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will let me go on.

We passed through the House in this bill, and in every bill we passed—and we passed this one three times—a dual provision in the law of sale or lease. That has always seemed best. That has always seemed necessary. We left the old coal law intact. We supplemented it with a lease even where that seemed more workable and feasible. We did not enlarge it; we did not diminish it as we passed it through the House. We left it absolutely intact. Now, this provision in this conference report enlarges the coal law. There is not any question about that. And the coal experts, both in and out of Congress, think it makes it better, and the department thinks it makes it better. And to make sure during the pending conference I made an inquiry as a sort of an additional guaranty from the Secretary and later after reading that provision, and after having consulted with the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Mines, he said he could protect the Government in all things in that. He gave us a written opinion on it in its present form.

I want to pass from the coal provision of this bill to the oil provisions, which are the two main proposals. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] goes squarely to the point, as he always does, and he dealt with the part of the bill that is intensely important. In the oil provisions we have not departed materially from the House provision. It is true we have liberalized it some. On the past production, where these oil claimants were entitled to patents, as they thought, and as the lawyers and everybody else who had advised them thought they were entitled to, they fought in the courts and scrambled and had lawsuits for years, and had their property impounded. And we thought if we took one-eighth of prior production and gave it to the Government, where controversy had been so keen that the ablest lawyers in the country had advised them they were entitled to their patents, we were only doing justice and scant justice. One-eighth is quite the customary royalty even if they had no equities or claims to patents of any sort.

Now, what is the first thing one of these claimants must do before he can even get a lease at all? He must file a surrender and a full relinquishment to every claim he has for a patent. Then the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations, may put anything into the lease that he wants to. And there is an antimonopoly provision, a safeguarding provision for both the public and the Government. He can write anything in it he desires, according to section 34, I think it is, of this bill.

Now, as to the future production, where the oil men start out with a fair and square chance, we allow them to mine and lease in small tracts under Government supervision; and we provide that the Government can take a minimum of one-eighth, which is the usual royalty, and as much more as they want to take. So, summed up, Mr. Speaker, it all amounts to this, that the Secretary of the Interior leases in small tracts under Government supervision, subject to the rental that he fixes in the leasing of this oil property.

Now, one word more. It is said that this land will be sold and none of it leased. If any part of that statement were true, it would be very interesting. If the oil men thought that was so, they would be very happy. They think and they know what is in Secretary Lane's mind is not to sell at all, but to lease altogether; and it is within his power to write into the rules and regulations, which he is given ample authority to do, provisions which will keep every acre from being sold if he wants to do it; and not only that, but the specific provision is written in that he can reject any and all bids without rhyme and without reason. This affords safeguards that ought to settle this hysteria that is floating around on this subject. Secretary Lane can be trusted to do right on all of these matters. He has both vision and knowledge to deal wisely and well with these matters.

Let us go up to Alaska for a moment. If anyone seeks to monopolize the Cunningham claim or any other claims in Alaska, all the Secretary has to do is to write across the bid "Rejected." I do not know; I can not believe that Secretary Lane, the Bureau of Mines, and the Geological Survey and the people that stand behind him and have studied this question so much more than we—I can not believe they would approve it unless they thought it was for the best interests of the country. I am sure they would know what was for the best interests of the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what will happen if we do not pass this bill? There is only one alternative. If we kill this bill, what happens? I do not say this bill is perfect. I am a critic of some parts of this bill myself. I do not claim that it is perfect. But after six years of patient effort it is the best we could get. What happens if we do not pass this bill? This oil property, under the placer law, goes on to patent and we do not get anything.

What is the situation on oil? Eight men can go out and take up an oil claim, and they can take up one after another until they take up the whole country. What do we get? Nothing. What royalty? Nothing. What power to regulate? None. So, as distinguished from the old and obsolete and antiquated land laws that are unworkable, I believe that the House would do itself proud to-day, notwithstanding the objections of some very good men here and elsewhere, to go on and adopt this leasing system and make it a little stronger and a little better as the weak places show up in the legislation. Of course, for men who do not know anything about it, who have not studied it, I suppose it is easy to vote against it. It does not affect an acre of land in my State. It is a hard job, for which I have gotten nothing but kicks. It does not affect my State or any persons in my State and no near friend that I have; but I have felt that it is better than the existing law, and I signed the report believing that it is better than the existing law, and I defend it here, believing that the good men who oppose it are mistaken in their opposition. After they study it and Secretary Lane begins to make his leases and these men are developing the bold prairies of the West and allowed to go on with their work, and when part of this money is given to the schools and the reclamation fund and to the Public Treasury, I think that both Democrats and Republicans will be proud of the legislation. I know that it is easy for one man to sit on the fence and tell the other man how to plow corn, but it is a little harder to plow it; and if you put up a man against those Senate conferees, you have given him a hard job. I have had this hard job on this legislation for six years. It is the best we could do. It is better than existing law. We will make it better as we go along. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum in connection with the vote.

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it; and the gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-four gentlemen are present—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the conference report will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 109, answered "present" 2, not voting 85, as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENTS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 593.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the Committee on Military Affairs shall be discharged from the further consideration of S. 5279, "An act to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes," and the House shall immediately resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of said bill; that there shall be not to exceed one hour of general debate, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and one half by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]; that at the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the end of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and amendments to final passage without intervening action, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if we can agree upon time for debate upon the rule.

Mr. SNELL. I think we can get along with about 30 minutes on this side.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the resolution may be concluded at the end of one hour, one-half of that time to be controlled by myself, one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and at the end of that time the previous question may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution shall not exceed one hour, half the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and that at the end of the hour the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on February 3 it was reported to the House that the Senate had passed S. 5279. The effect of that bill was to repeal certain provision of law that had been passed theretofore which prevented enlistments. Substantially the Senate bill provides that there can be enlisted 175,000 men.

Mr. GORDON. By voluntary enlistment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. By voluntary enlistment. Subsequently a similar bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, H. R. 13548. The language of the House bill is precisely the same as the language of the Senate bill, therefore the meaning is exactly the same. The House bill is upon the calendar. The Senate bill upon coming here was referred in regular order to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The reason for the resolution that has just been reported is that the Committee on Military Affairs may be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill in order to expedite its passage. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. The purpose of this bill being the same as the language found in the military bill, why did not the resolution make it in order to keep the language of the military bill in that bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This does not relate to any provision of the military appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the gentleman to say that the purpose was the same as one of the provisions in the military bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I said that the purpose of S. 5279 and of House bill 13548 was the same. So far as the legislation that is proposed in the military appropriation bill is concerned the Committee on Rules have that under very careful consideration. This is not called up as a rider on the appropriation bill. This is called up as an independent proposition.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I was not present when the rule was read. Does the rule discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from further consideration of this Senate bill and pass it?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, it throws it open for consideration.

Mr. WINGO. That would be the fact if the House approved of it. It allows voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; it restores the right of enlistment.

Mr. WINGO. The parliamentary situation is that you are not supporting something as a rider on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. This resolution does not refer to the appropriation bill in any way. It makes in order a bill already adopted by the Senate, and the substance of which has been approved by the House Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINGO. You are going to consider separate legislation embodied in a Senate bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; a Senate bill, a similar House bill being upon the calendar.

Mr. WINGO. And you propose by the rules to consider legislation proposed and embodied in the Senate bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Precisely; it has no technical connection with the military appropriation bill.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Tennessee is always very frank with the House, may I ask him if it is not a fact that the Committee on Rules has reported a rule for the consideration of this bill S. 5279, providing for the enlistment in the Regular Army, as an answer to the request of the Committee on Military Affairs for a rule on the legislation providing for enlistment in the military appropriation bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has been kind enough to say that I am always frank with the House. I try to be. Therefore I will say that I can not interpret the feelings in the hearts of various gentlemen of the Committee on Rules who voted upon the resolution.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman's committee had a request for a rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; that is pending and still under consideration.

Mr. DYER. If this passes, I take it that that will be satisfactory to the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know about that. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee were unanimous in this proposition that some rule should be presented to the House that would make in order legislation that it is absolutely necessary to consider at this time in connection with the present military bill. After some discussion it narrowed down to two propositions before the Rules Committee, whether we should present the rule presented by the gentleman from Tennessee which makes in order the consideration of the Senate bill No. 5279, which simply provides again for voluntary enlistments, the same as before the war, or whether we should present to the House the rule asked for by the majority members of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. There was no vote taken by the Committee on Rules, however, on the proposition to embody this provision that is in the Army bill in a separate rule.

Mr. SNELL. I was just coming to that. There was no such vote taken in the committee, and the sentiment of the committee was not tested on the question. They were unanimous that we must have some proposition before the House, and it was a question which rule should be presented. The rule as asked for by the Committee on Military Affairs was a much broader rule than the one here presented.

The only contention that I have is that the rule presented to the House is not broad enough to take care of all the legislation that is absolutely necessary to be considered at this time in connection with the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. If the rule is passed and the Senate bill is passed which the rule makes in order, would not men who enlisted in the Military Establishment be required to enlist for three years and go into a reserve for four years?

Mr. SNELL. It would if passed without any amendment. We have already in this appropriation bill made provision for 500,000 men through the coming year. There is not a man in this House but who knows that there will be an average of more than 500,000 men in the United States Army for the next year. Now, as long as we have done this why should not we go along and complete the legislation that goes with it? That is all I am contending for.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, the gentleman is including in the 500,000 men the men in the military service of the United States under the draft law. There will be some of them left, but this bill is intended to provide an Army after the 1st of July.

Mr. SNELL. My statement was that there would be more than an average of 500,000 men in the Army for the year ending July 1, 1920.

Mr. GORDON. That is the reason we appropriated for 509,000.

Mr. SNELL. Then you and I agree.

Mr. GORDON. I do not know whether we do or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. SNELL. The only question for us to decide at the present time is whether the rule as presented by the Rules Committee covers all the legislation necessary; whether the act that will be made in order for consideration is wide enough to permit enough amendments to take care of all the necessary legislation that is absolutely required for us at this time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman understands perfectly that this is not related technically to the military appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And any germane amendment is in order on this bill. We ought not to confuse our minds with the thought that this is connected with the military appropriation bill in a technical way.

Mr. SNELL. I admit that what the gentleman says is partly correct, but, on the other hand, it is understood, and everyone in this House knows, that this rule was brought in to take the place of the rule asked for by the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. SANFORD. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says that this rule is not technically connected with the other. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if, as a matter of fact, this measure is not strategically so related to the other that it is hoped that this will make it easier for the majority, acting through the Rules Committee, to present their proposition in such a way as to prevent full consideration by the House of the whole proposition.

Mr. SNELL. That is entirely what I tried to make clear to the Members of the House at this time. The only objection that was brought up in the committee against the rule that was asked for by the Military Affairs Committee was that if we adopted that rule we would commit this country to a standing army of 500,000 men as a peace-time proposition. I maintain that has nothing to do with it. It is simply a question of whether we want to consider at this time the legislation that the Military Affairs Committee brings to our attention, and we suppose they know what it is necessary to consider and what should be brought before the House at this time. I am informed that Senators who presented S. 5279 at the other end of the Capitol say at this time that this bill does not cover the entire situation, and it will be necessary, in consideration of the regular Military Affairs Committee appropriation bill, to go back to the Rules Committee and ask for a further rule to provide for legislation that is actually necessary. So what is the use of spending time on this when it does not meet the conditions confronting us as the present time?

Mr. GORDON rose.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, just a moment. What I want to do is to take up the whole proposition at one time and consider it fairly and squarely, and let the Members of the House get information from the Military Affairs Committee and decide what is right and proper to do. I am not for an Army of 500,000 in times of peace, but I want the information to go before the House, so that the House may consider it fairly and squarely and do what they think right. It is no more than fair that they should have that opportunity at this time. When we come to that provision in the appropriation bill on page 58 which provides for an enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men, if it be made in order to consider it, you can reduce that or raise it as you see fit. This does not commit you to any sized Army, but it simply commits you to considering the proposition fairly and squarely at this time, and I feel that it would be much better to not adopt this rule, but to adopt the rule requested by the Military Affairs Committee and throw the proposition open to the House and let them consider it upon its merits.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand the gentleman, he says there was unanimity of opinion that the pending Senate bill should be passed.

Mr. SNELL. Then the gentleman misunderstood me, or I misspoke myself. I said that I understood, from the other side, that certain Senators said——

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not understand my query. As I understood the gentleman in his opening remarks, he said that the Rules Committee were unanimously in favor of the passage of the Senate bill, which is proposed to be made in order by this rule.

Mr. SNELL. Not at all. I said that they were unanimous in the opinion that some rule was necessary to provide for legislation that was necessary to be considered at this time.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman thinks that the Senate bill is necessary legislation, and he only differs upon the extent to which it goes?

Mr. SNELL. I would not want to put it that way. I think there are certain things in connection with this bill that must be considered, and I want to open the question up to the House, get the information from the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, who are better informed than I am, and let the House form its own judgment.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has made that clear. The point I want to get at is this: Does the gentleman approve resuming voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army?

Mr. SNELL. I do.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know of anyone who is opposed to it?

Mr. SNELL. No.

Mr. WINGO. If that be true, that is an undisputed proposition. Why not pass that, as is proposed to be done by this rule, and then take up as a separate proposition the disputed proposition of a separate new Army?

Mr. SNELL. You may just as well do it all at one time. That is the only contention. It would be better, in my judgment, to do it all at one time, and not be forced to go back to the Rules Committee and ask for another rule, which will be necessary.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I am very sorry, but I have not any more time. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New York [Mr. SNELL] covered the point, I think, in a sufficiently discriminating way so that every Member can see just how this alternative is presented for us to vote on. The Committee on Rules had presented to it a proposition to make in order the matter of legislation on the military appropriation bill that will go out of the bill on a point of order. That was the matter that was presented to us. One of the items of the many that are in the legislative provision that had most meaning to us was that which pertains to the size of the Army and how it was to be enlisted, and one of the features that is of importance was that the enlisted force for the Regular Army should be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years, and that the additional forces therein authorized should be raised by voluntary enlistment for the period of one year. That is different from the law of 1918, which this second resolution that is before us intends to carry out, and the question was up to us whether we would make in order this legislation on the appropriation bill and leave it open for amendment, so that if you did not agree with the size of the Army here you could amend it and change it in accordance with the wishes of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is still pending before the Committee on Rules, is it not?

Mr. FESS. While it is still pending before the Committee on Rules, it is very distinctly understood that if this substitute is agreed to it will not be pending before the Committee on Rules. That was offered as a substitute, and it is clearly understood by the members of the committee that if this alternative is made a law there will be no occasion to bring the other up, for the reason that the alternative that is offered is limited to one thing, and only one thing—a peace army, fixed in number, the manner of enlistment fixed, and also the time of enlistment. The Army allowed is 175,000, enlisted for seven years—three with the colors and four in the reserve.

That being decided, the thing that we wanted to make in order was this legislation, so it could be modified by amendment in case the Members did not accept it as written. If we wanted to make the size of the Army large or small, it could be done. It would allow the House to fix the manner of enlistment and the time of enlistment, and it seemed to us that it would be better to let the military appropriation bill come in with this legislative feature made in order and open for amendment, so that whatever the House wanted to do in the way of change it might obtain it rather than fix at this time distinctively upon a peace basis of 175,000 men. That is the whole thing in this matter; and while I will join with Members on either side of the House to hold for a smaller Army, for I do not believe in a large Army, I want that matter fixed not in time of war; the war is still on, and I do not believe we ought to close up matters now so as to give the Military Department an excuse to say we can not demobilize because Congress did not agree to pass a law permitting us to demobilize. That is why we wanted to bring it in and let the Military Affairs Committee legislate with this legislative feature made in order.

Mr. SHERWOOD. This is a change from the system of conscription to the voluntary system—is that right?

Mr. FESS. No; that is not right.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I am utterly unable to understand why the Committee on Rules has sought to evade the question at issue by reporting this mere fragment of what the Military Committee asked of it. By majority vote the Committee on Military Affairs yesterday morning decided that it was of the utmost importance that the legislation asked for in their bill be made in order by the Rules Committee, so that the House should have an opportunity fairly to express its opinion in regard to that legislation. For some reason the Committee on Rules has decided not to give the House that opportunity to express itself——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on Rules has not decided that.

Mr. ANTHONY. In my opinion the Committee on Rules has so decided. This resolution as submitted is not open to amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, yes; it is open to amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. How far?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To any germane amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. What does the gentleman construe a germane amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman can draw his own amendment; I am satisfied with the bill as it stands.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman construe as a germane amendment the legislation which the Committee on Military Affairs asks?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would have to think about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman would, indeed, have to think about it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield further, I will take some of my time——

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman can draw an amendment to this Senate bill that will shorten the terms of enlistment if he desires to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And can increase the number of men if he desires to do so.

Mr. ANTHONY. It will be utterly impossible, in my opinion, to add other vitally necessary legislation for the Army by way of amendment——

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. KAHN. The amendments which the gentleman may offer under this rule refer only to the Regular Army.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. Now, what will be the result, gentlemen, if we pass the appropriation bill with only this piece of legislation? It means that we will pass up to the Senate, if it passes an Army bill, the entire responsibility for putting on all of the necessary Army legislation. It will come over to the House in the shape of a conference report, and we will have to swallow that conference report without having opportunity properly to consider or digest it. That is the legislative situation which the Rules Committee has put up to the House in this proposition.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that the only objection to this Senate bill is you can not amend by drafting men in time of peace?

Mr. ANTHONY. That may be true, but I go a little further, and we must understand that whether we want it or not we are going to have an Army not of over 500,000 men, such as the gentleman from New York suggested for the next year, but, in my opinion, we may have an Army on our hands of 1,000,000 men, whether we want it or not. We are going to have a million men left in France at midsummer, and it will be impossible for us to transport them over here and for them to be demobilized as rapidly as some people plan. We can not demobilize them in France. We have not got the bottoms in which to bring them back to this country. Now, if the President chooses to defer the time of the issuing of his proclamation of the state of peace, it simply means that under the power of legislation that we have already conferred upon him he can redraft those men and keep them in the service as long as he wishes, and instead of this House taking steps to assist in the demobilization of the Army by the passage of the meager legislation which the Committee on Rules will permit you are liable to continue an Army of great size for a longer period than you have any idea of doing.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

Mr. WINGO. I may have misunderstood the gentleman, but I understood him to favor the drafting of men in peace time.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I did not favor drafting men in peace time, but you may see that very thing being done next summer if you fail to try and remedy the existing situation. I will say to the gentleman that we are confronting a condition and not a theory. We are going to have a large Army on our hands whether we want it or not by reason of the physical impossibility of getting them back from France, and the Committee on Military Affairs believes it wiser to try and limit not only the size of the Army but the way it shall be officered by necessary legislation. Now, there is another thing. If we stop at this little bit of legislation regarding enlistments, what is going to happen? We are going to have a continuance of a top-heavy force in the various staff bureaus, which are now largely overofficered in time of peace, and further we are going to see certain very necessary special corps which are now in existence, such as the Tank Corps and the Air Service, which are not authorized under the law of 1916, pass out of existence entirely unless we pass needed legislation for their maintenance after the treaty of peace.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I thought there would be only one speech when I made the statement a few moments ago, but I think there will possibly be more than one.

Mr. SNELL. Then the gentleman had best use some of his time now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this proposition should pass the House, and pass immediately. I congratulate the Committee on Rules for bringing it out. I would favor its passage individually if I were heartily in favor of every provision carried in the legislative rider to the appropriation bill. Senate bill 5279, or its equivalent, which the adoption of the rule under consideration will make in order, was recommended by the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War, and they urged the necessity of the early enactment of the legislation.

Now, if this Senate bill passes, it becomes a law and the department can resume voluntary enlistments even in the event of the failure of the appropriation bill in another body. It has been whispered around that the military appropriation bill and the naval appropriation bill, and probably some others, may not be enacted into law at this session of Congress. So if this matter is made to depend solely upon the passage of the Army appropriation bill, and that bill shall fail to become a law, then this legislation fails. But if we pass this Senate resolution—and it should be passed with very little discussion, because the War Department has recommended it, the committee reported it out unanimously, and I believe that every Member of the House is for it—the department can resume voluntary enlistments whether the Army appropriation bill passes or not. So, then, if the military appropriation bill fails we will have this important legislation.

Now, what situation do we find? The Military Establishment tell us that many men are asking for readmission to the Military Establishment. Men have been discharged who want to remain in the service or who want to come back to the service, but they can not reenlist them, because they have no authority to do so. While that condition prevails on the one hand, on the other hand men who were drafted into the service are being kept in who desire to be released. So it is necessary to pass this legislation, and pass it immediately. And I hope that the rule may be adopted and the legislation passed.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FIELDS. I wanted to advance another thought.

Mr. HARDY. Is this separate legislation to that contained in the military appropriation bill?

Mr. FIELDS. This is separate legislation—legislation that the War Department has asked for, that the Senate has passed, that the House committee has recommended unanimously; and, as I said a moment ago, the entire membership of this House is for it.

Now, in the discharge of officers the Military Establishment divides them into three classes. They submit a list of questions to each commissioned officer. First, they want to know whether he desires to remain in the military service. If he desires to remain in the service, he is put in class 1 and kept under the emergency act just as long as he can be kept. If he desires to go into the reserves, he is put in class 2. If he desires to be immediately separated from the service, he is put in class 3 and discharged first.

I have contended with the military authorities that they could apply the same rule to the enlisted personnel and release men who desire to be released and retain to the last day of demobilization under the emergency act those who desire to remain in the service. But they differ with me and others who have advocated the application of that rule to the enlisted personnel. Therefore, differing with us on that proposition, the enactment of this legislation is necessary; and by its enactment you make it possible, gentlemen, for men who are now in the service and who desire to remain there to reenlist, or for men who have gone out of the service and desire to reenter to reenlist, therefore making it possible to discharge men who are in the service and who desire to be separated therefrom. That is the force of the proposition; and I hope the rule may be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I inquire how the time stands, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has 20 minutes remaining and the gentleman from New York 11 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield 3 minutes of my 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. I yield the three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCCULLOCH].

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss this rule, but my purpose in asking for this time is to find out about it if possible. As I understand, if this rule is adopted the legislative features of the Army bill will not be considered, and if there is no legislation at all except that made in order by this rule the soldiers will remain in France indefinitely, which means as long as the General Staff wants them to remain, or so long as they can keep them under the provisions of existing law which provides for demobilizing the Army four months after the proclamation of the treaty of peace.

Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, a rule is necessary in order to have the legislative features of the Army appropriation bill considered. The gentleman from Tennessee contents himself with the statement that the Rules Committee is considering a rule to make the legislative features of that bill in order but gives no assurance that it will be reported. If this rule is adopted and the bill passed, the Army can reach a maximum strength of 175,000 volunteers, but if it appears to be necessary in the judgment of the General Staff to have an Army of over 175,000, or if they are unable to raise the 175,000 volunteers, they can hold the conscripted Army over there until they get ready to send them back. I do not want them to be authorized to do that indefinitely. Therefore, I am against this rule. I believe it should be voted down and I believe a rule should be brought in which will make it possible for the House to consider all the legislative features and amendments that may be proposed, including an amendment providing for the demobilization of the conscripted Army, so that we will know something about when those boys are going to be brought back. I believe that it will be necessary to vote this rule down in order to get a chance to consider such proposed amendments, unless the members of the Rules Committee will assure the House we are going to be given an opportunity to consider the legislative features of the Army appropriation bill and offer amendments. And, to my way of thinking, the qualified statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is not sufficient. Now you authorize the House to consider a bill that will limit the Army to 175,000 men.

That is the effect of it, and to that extent it is all right, but the trouble is the General Staff can hold all of the men that they say they will need out of the Army now abroad, no matter if it is a million or two million, indefinitely. They do not have to raise the Volunteer Army of 175,000, and the chances are that they will not, for it is much easier to hold all the men they need from the present Army. That is the effect of the situation as I view it.

Mr. DYER. How can they hold them after four months?

Mr. MCCULLOCH. They can hold them until four months after the proclamation of the treaty of peace, and, as I read the law, for four months after the emergency has ceased to exist.

Mr. DYER. They had better not try it.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. I say it is the duty of Congress to see that they do not do it.

If Congress fails to provide specifically for the demobilization of the conscripted Army and leaves the law in such shape that the General Staff can hold those boys indefinitely, we will have broken faith with our own soldiers and it will be inexcusable. Definite and certain provisions should be made for demobilization.

According to the figures presented by the gentleman from Alabama some days ago, we now have an Army totaling approximately 2,500,000 men. Most of these men were secured under the so-called selective-service act. There are over a million and a half of these men in Europe. The only provision under existing law for the demobilization of the Army, if my information is correct, is the provision contained in Public Law No. 23, Sixty-fifth Congress, page 41, section 4, which reads:

> That the service of all persons selected by draft and all enlistments under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. Whenever said war shall cease by the conclusion of peace between the United States and its enemies in the present war, the President shall so declare by a public proclamation to that effect, and within four months after the date of said proclamation or as soon thereafter as it may be practicable to transport the forces then serving without the United States to their home station, the provisions of said act, in so far as they authorize compulsory service by selective draft or otherwise, shall cease to be of force and effect.

This bill provides, in effect, for the raising of a force by voluntary enlistment of not to exceed 175,000 men. It has been stated by members of the Committee on Military Affairs that the War Department hopes to be able to demobilize the conscripted Army, by the end of the next fiscal year, or by July 1, 1920, and to substitute therefor a volunteer force. It is very clear to me that if the War Department can not secure the requisite number of men by voluntary enlistments that they intend to hold the conscripted Army until such time as they can secure the necessary force by voluntary enlistments. There is no provision, except the one I have referred to, providing for the demobilization of the present Army, and it is left entirely to the War Department to demobilize it or not, as they see fit, and it is admitted by everyone who presumes to speak with any degree of familiarity as to the intention of the War Department that its purpose is to substitute by voluntary enlistment new men for the old men or to induce the old men to volunteer and remain in the Army.

They talk about demobilizing "as speedily as possible," but there are two or three strings to that "as speedily as possible." One, they claim, is transportation facilities, which, to my mind, it has been clearly shown to be a captious argument, because if we would show one-half as much interest in getting the boys back as was shown in getting them over they could all be demobilized by the beginning of the next fiscal year, or by July 1, 1919. But the real purpose of the War Department is disclosed by the statement that they expect to substitute the volunteer for the conscript and to hold the conscript until such substitution can be arranged, which means tying the present Army men up under an indefinite arrangement which may mean that they will have to remain in the Army at least until four months after the promulgation of the proclamation announcing the treaty of peace. Those who are familiar with the War Department's activities and with its methods and with the attitude of the General Staff, which is made up largely of men who make a business of the Army game, know that if they can hold the present Army they are not likely to make any great effort or any great progress in the substituting process. If they were forced within a specified time to secure volunteer enlistments, we might expect more satisfactory results, but if it is left to them to take their good time about releasing the conscripts and securing the volunteers, I despair of the boys getting home or away from the Army for many long months to come.

I suggested the other day that there should be a provision in the Army bill providing a definite date for the demobilization of the present Army. The amendment I will propose, if I get a chance, fixes a definite date, and I believe that this legislation should not be one-sided and should not add to the burdens of the men who have thus far made the supreme sacrifice by leaving their business and their homes and entering the Army, but that instead of extending further powers to the War Department by permitting them to raise this volunteer army and making no provision for the demobilization of the present Army that we should provide specifically for the raising of the Army needed and then make a provision specifically for the demobilization of the old Army.

Now, I am against a large Army. I made my position clear on that point the other day; and I think that Members are likely to be deceived by the parliamentary situation. If Members are for a small Army they should vote against this rule, for, as I see it, if this rule is adopted and the bill it would make in order is passed the result will be a large Army, just as large, in fact, as the General Staff want, for they will hold for service as many men now in the present Army as they want or claim they need. If you vote this rule down, then the Rules Committee must bring in a rule making the legislative features of the Army bill in order. Members can then offer amendments and you can not only provide for a small Army, but you can provide for the demobilization of the present Army. As I see it, if this rule is adopted we who favor a small Army will be beaten by a parliamentary trick, and instead of authorizing a small Army we will be making it possible for the General

Staff to maintain as large an Army as they want; and so long as the emergency exists they can hold the boys in the Army.

Now, I am not willing by my vote to place in the hands of the General Staff, without limitation or reservation, in time of peace—and that is what this is—the power to hold or demobilize as they see fit an Army of two and a half million men. Outside of the interests of the boys themselves, which are primarily involved, there comes the very important interest of the taxpayer, who must pay the bill for the maintaining of this Military Establishment.

The House should meet this situation squarely and consider the legislative features of the Army bill and provide for an Army, and I favor a small Army; but above all we should keep faith with our soldiers and provide definitely for demobilization and not leave them entirely to the mercy of the General Staff, since the war is over.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I shall not undertake to discuss the parliamentary situation, as that has already been fully developed. However, I am heartily in favor of the measure as it is reported by the Committee on Rules.

In my judgment this is not the time to settle a permanent peace-time military policy. The times are not normal, the conditions are unusual, and no one can tell what the developments of a few months might indicate. There are now in the military forces of the United States about 3,000,000 men. According to the War Department it will be many months before all of the soldiers will be finally returned from overseas.

The shipping facilities are so limited that it is impossible to return them within a short period of time, even though it has given assurance that every foot of space will be utilized for this purpose. I may add that I sincerely hope they may be returned with all possible speed. In view, therefore, of the estimate of the War Department that for the next year we will have a great many men in the Army, I can see no good reason for establishing an additional army of 537,000 men. It would seem that to permit enlistments for the present under the regular prewar Army provisions would be far more preferable. In the meantime events may shape themselves in such a manner as to enable this country to determine much more satisfactorily the nature and extent of the Army to be maintained.

The advisability of not at this time authorizing a great Army is further evidenced by the uncertainty as to the final provisions of the peace conference. Were we to undertake at the present time to provide a standing Army of a half million men, it might conflict utterly with the international agreement for disarmament in which all the people are interested. In fact, no one issue before the world compares with this one in importance.

You may go 20 miles east of Paris, France, and then you may go in any direction north or south or east, and you are never out of sight of a grave—the little wooden crosses that mark the last resting place of the men who have fought in the battles of freedom. Nearly a million English, more than a million French, and more than a million Germans have been buried in northeastern France. Every one of those graves, every one of those crosses, is a protest against the military system. [Applause.] Every drop of American blood that has been mingled with the soil and the lilies of France is a crying protest against great armies. [Applause.] America, the greatest of the nations, can well afford to set the example; and if she breaks faith with those men who have died and with the mothers who have sacrificed their sons in this war she is unworthy of the cause for which she has fought.

Now, in my opinion, there can be no such thing as a military republic. It is contrary to the genius of a free government. You place that weapon in the hands of any authority, and there is a temptation to its use and finally to its abuse.

I am glad that the President has sought to embody in the terms a provision for disarmament. Of course, this can only be done safely by a concerted effort on the part of all the leading nations. However, for us to declare in advance of the peace treaty our intention to maintain a great military establishment is to show a lack of faith in our spoken ideals.

We have had in this country 100 years of the richest experience that was ever crowded into a single century, and I would hate to see this country desert the policies that have made it great.

This legislation, as I understand it, has nothing to do with the present appropriation bill. I take it that every man is anxious to take care of the present Army. But the adoption of this bill will not in any way affect the legislation with reference to the present Army or its maintenance.

Mr. Speaker, we are passing through a period of transition. For thousands of years the earth has trembled beneath the tread of giant armies and mankind has been engaged in a continual strife. Every great issue upon which the nations have hitherto differed has been settled beneath the smoke of battle. But I hope that we have learned, or that the world has learned, through bitter experience that the way to settle rivalries between nations is for each to build up its own resources rather than tear down the neighboring commonwealth, and that the contests of the future will be creative and constructive rather than destructive. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, this bill affects only the Regular Army of the United States. Before we got into the war our Regular Army was of the strength of about 110,000 men. Before the war we never were able to get under voluntary enlistment that force of men. This bill would enlist 175,000 men of the line with the colors for a period of three years and four years with the reserves. In other words, it would tie a man to the Army of the United States for seven years. That was the condition of enlistment that prevailed before we got into the war.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I have only six minutes, but I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. GORDON. This bill will be open to amendment?

Mr. KAHN. But it has not been amended, and I am calling attention to its provisions if it passes as reported by the Committee on Rules.

Now, suppose you do not get the force that you believe you can get under this bill. You will have to keep the men who are in France until the emergency that exists shall have passed away. In other words, you will be redrafting the men who, at the conclusion of the war and the signing of definitive terms of peace, are over there to do that share of policing that this country will probably have to do under the terms of the treaty of peace.

Now, that is all there is to it. The Committee on Military Affairs went to the Committee on Rules and asked for a broad, comprehensive rule that would allow the legislative provision in the Army bill to be considered. The Committee on Military Affairs asked that that legislative provision be open to any amendment that is germane, and let the House express its views as to the number of men we want.

Now, there is no doubt but that by voluntary enlistments, such as were proposed in the House bill, you can gradually bring back the men from the other side. Every time a man volunteers for one year under the provisions of the Military Committee bill you demobilize a man who is over there with the existing Army. You will give those boys an opportunity to come home as fast as we can get the ships to bring them home.

This bill does nothing of that kind. This bill simply establishes a Regular Army—men enlisted for a period of three years under the provisions of the national-defense act. It seems to me that you will have more difficulty than you have ever had to get men to enlist for that period. I do believe that there are a great many men in France to-day who are over there with our forces who will be willing to remain under a voluntary enlistment period of one year to see this thing through. That is what happened in the Spanish-American War. In the Spanish-American War the National Guard organizations were sent to the Philippines to put an end to the war.

Before they had finished their work the Philippine insurrection broke out. Then peace was made with Spain. Those State volunteer regiments were entitled to come home. The Congress of the United States realized the seriousness of the situation. They passed legislation to allow voluntary enlistments in so-called United States regiments of volunteers, and from the men who were in the Philippines they secured a sufficient force who enlisted voluntarily to put down that insurrection and bring about peace there.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. My time is brief, but I yield.

Mr. IGOE. The gentleman says some of these boys may want to stay. Now, when the emergency ends what is the use of keeping them over there? [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman recognizes the fact that when we got into this war we assumed responsibilities not only for ourselves but toward the world. Now, the final peace terms will decide exactly what we will have to do in maintaining some of our forces over there to see that the terms of peace are enforced. We can not get away from these things. We can not get away from our international obligations.

Mr. IGOE. I do not want to get away from them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House for a few minutes I hope to give some reasons why if this law is enacted further legislation will be unnecessary.

The immediate question before the House is the adoption of a rule which makes in order Senate bill 5279 which repeals that part of the draft act limiting the period of enlistment in the Regular Army under what is known as the national-defense act of 1916. The fight is made here, however, that the Rules Committee should not have reported a rule making this bill in order, but should have reported a rule making in order on the Army appropriation bill legislation as reported by a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. I shall, therefore, discuss briefly the merits of the two bills, hoping thereby to show that the action of the Rules Committee was the practical and proper thing to do.

This bill which the rule proposes to make in order, if enacted into law, as soon as the declaration of peace is made puts the Army, as to control and size, under the national-defense act of 1916 and authorizes voluntary enlistments in the Army as provided by that act, under which we all, on both sides, agree we can raise 175,000 men in the line of the Army in peace times, which with the other branches of the service will amount, in all, to about 250,000. Furthermore, if the emergency continues, or if there is an emergency existing of any character which in the judgment of the President requires more men, we can enlist an Army of 400,000. In addition to that we have whatever force of National Guard there may be existing at the time in the States. Therefore if this bill is passed there will be authority to raise and organize an Army for peace-time purposes of 250,000 men, and if, as I have just stated, an emergency exists or arises, the Army may be increased to 400,000. So by adopting this rule making this bill in order we are simply removing the limitation imposed on the period of enlistments under emergency legislation and authorizing the War Department to raise an army as I have just stated. Not only will you do this but also you will force, on the date the proclamation of peace is made, a return to a peace-time status and to a Regular Army of not exceeding 175,000 men in the line. I submit that this is all the legislation that is necessary at this time, and that an Army of that size is large enough under peace conditions; and it must be remembered that the appropriation bill and this legislation has reference to peace-time conditions and is to provide for an Army in times of peace.

I desire to call attention to some of the provisions of the legislation which our friends here who are opposing this rule and this bill, if made in order, insist should have been made in order. It provides first "that in addition to the Regular Army as now authorized under the national defense act as amended, there shall be raised and organized, under what is known as the draft act, a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 men," making a total in round numbers in the Army for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1920, of 540,000 officers and men.

With reference to the first portion of the proposed bill, as recommended by a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, and which they insist should have been made in order by the rule, at best, I submit, is of doubtful construction as to whether it means an army of only 500,000 officers and men or whether it means an army of that size in addition to the Regular Army as now organized, and I might emphasize the fact that the language used in the very first part of the same is that "in addition to the Regular Army as now organized" there shall be raised a force of 28,579 officers and 509,909 men. And I might also emphasize the fact that it refers to the Regular Army as now organized, and that it is not now organized under the national-defense act of 1916, but that it is now organized under another act by which it is increased very largely. In other words, as I understand it, there is now organized, at the present time, an army of practically 400,000 men in the Regular Army, and if the legislation proposed should be construed as meaning that the Army therein provided for should include the Regular Army "as now organized," and in addition only a sufficient force to make 500,000 in all, there would only be a difference of 100,000 men between the Army as it now exists and the Army they propose. And what would 100,000 men amount to in war now?

I will not discuss in detail the other provisions of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, but they are conflicting and all susceptible of more than one construction. Another proposition contained in the proposed amendment is that it repeals what is known as the Overman Act, under which the War Department is operating at the present time. By express language this is repealed, and immediately following the repealing clause is language which authorizes the President "to form or continue such corps, including the construction corps, field or tactical units or organizations as he shall deem necessary, to be organized as he may prescribe." In other words, in one paragraph or sentence they repeal the Overman Act and in the very next sentence they continue the same and enlarge it and extend it, because the Overman Act was for the period of the emergency, and the proposed legislation continues as much power, vested in the President, in effect during the entire fiscal year 1920.

It is expressly declared by this amendment, following the provision to which I have just called attention, "that the provisions of this law shall not go into effect earlier than the 1st day of July, 1919, and expire not later than the 30th day of June, 1920, except that the provision relating to voluntary enlistments shall become effective upon the approval of the act." Therefore, under the proposed law, giving it the most favorable construction of which it is capable, it would provide for an Army of 500,000 men during the next fiscal year, 1920, but the same could not be organized before July 1, 1919, except men might be enlisted before that time, although it does not seem to me that it would be possible or practicable to enlist men between now and the 1st of July under this provision when they could not be organized into an Army before the beginning of the fiscal year.

This is a fair statement of the two propositions, and it will be readily seen that the real fight and the real issue here is whether we want a peace-time Army of 175,000 men or an Army during the entire fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, of 509,909 men and 28,579 officers.

Why do they want an Army of 500,000? I state a few facts which may throw some light upon that. The General Staff of the Army submitted a proposition to the committee to raise and provide a permanent peace-time Army of exactly the number of officers and the number of men provided for in this amendment—28,579 officers and 509,909 men. The committee unanimously refused to adopt the suggestion, and it was then proposed to raise an Army of that size for one year. In other words, if they could not get such an Army permanently established they will take it for one year. It should also be borne in mind in considering this matter that during the war officers who had been serving as captains and majors were rapidly promoted, and some of them are now colonels and generals—a very great and rapid increase in rank. If we do not adopt additional legislation as to size and organization of the Army, we will go back automatically upon the proclamation of peace under the national-defense act, and those officers who are holding these temporary ranks will be returned to their original status; if you provide this additional legislation for an Army of 500,000 men and make that Army permanent, then, of course, there will be places for these officers and most of them will retain their present temporary rank.

Now, I do not blame the Regular Army officers for wanting to do that; I give them credit for being honest, and I think they conscientiously believe that we should have an Army of that size. They are in the Army; it is their profession, and the Regular Army in times of peace is a professional Army; naturally they want to see it enlarged, and of course the fact that an increase in the Army would necessarily increase the rank of some of them, at least, would not be objectionable to them. I do not believe we need a regular standing Army of half a million men in times of peace, but I am convinced that the Army as provided by the national-defense act of 1916, of not exceeding 175,000 men, with the necessary officers, would be ample for all our needs and to meet any peace-time situation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you adopt this rule, what becomes of the balance of the legislation that does not refer to enlistments?

Mr. WISE. The other legislation is not essential. We do not have to enact the balance of the legislation proposed if a point of order is made against it. If anybody wants to prevent a pension being given to the British soldier who lost his eyes while serving here helping us to train our Army, let him make the point of order; I will not. We can enact that in another way. If anybody wants to make a point of order aganst the provision which provides that you shall not by regulation compel the wearing of distinctive marks on the uniform, let him make it. It is not necessary to have that in order to maintain an Army. None of these other provisions is necessary. The real moving purpose behind this proposition of such an Army for one year or five years is to give time largely to take care of rank; and instead of having 10,000 officers, as the national-defense act provides, you will take care of 28,000 officers.

It has been intimated that we will not be able to get an army by voluntary enlistment. You can get as many men by voluntary enlistment under this bill, which the rule we are now considering proposes to make in order, as you can under the bill which proposes to raise an army of 500,000 men. You can adopt, if you see proper, the very same provisions with reference to enlistments in this bill by amendment as is provided by the bill which it is insisted should have been made in order here, besides all of the other legislation on the same. As to whether or not we can get the volunteers, whatever may be our opinion, the Chief of Staff and the department having in charge enlistments state that they believe an army for peace times can be raised by voluntary enlistment in this country.

I want to reply to another suggestion which has been insisted on, and that is that this peace-time Army of 500,000 men is necessary for the purpose of relieving the boys in France so that they may be brought home and demobilized. This sentiment appeals to all of us; we all want them to come home, the sooner the better; but let me say that this additional authority to raise a temporary Army of 500,000 men, if given, will not relieve one single boy in France. You can not raise this Army of 500,000 men in France, for the hearings show—the statement of the Chief of Staff himself—that practically every man in the Army in France and in this country also is anxious to be discharged. Therefore you will not get many recruits for this proposed army about which you hear so much for the fiscal year 1920 from the men now in the service in France, or the United States, either. An enlisted man with the American Expeditionary Forces, anxious to be discharged, hoping every day to receive orders to return home, and with good prospects of returning at most within the next few months, certainly will not be inclined to obligate himself by reenlisting and joining this proposed army in France, to stay there at least another year and do police duty. You certainly will not get any volunteers from over there, and I may say that there is not a word in the hearings on which to base a statement that you can; on the contrary, it is clear that they are all anxious to be returned home. The hearings also show that you can not enlist them from the men who are in the Army in this country.

The same thing applies to them as to those in foreign service; they are all anxious to be discharged. You will not get these 500,000 men from those in civil life who have had no experience and who have not been in the Army during the war. You may ask, then, Where will we get the men for this peace-time Army? I quote the Chief of Staff and rely upon his statement and judgment, and believe it is true, that the experience of the department has been that after the men have been discharged, go home and see their people, find things are not just as they expected them to be, positions are not open for them, and after they have been there 30, 60, or 90 days, having had some experience in Army life, and liking many features of it, a great many of them want to reenlist. The opinion of the Chief of Staff and others is that from this source they will be able to get the number of men they want in times of peace; and this is a peace-time proposition. Now, this being true, does anyone mean to say that they expect to enlist men in this country and send them back to relieve the boys in France? We all know that not a single one will be sent across to take the place of a boy there. [Applause.] No one in the War Department intimated such a thing; on the contrary, it was distinctly stated that this proposed Army was a peace-time Army that they want for this country. They now have the Army in France with which they expect to wind up the war with Germany. It is my judgment also that there would be very few men who would enlist in this country now, after being discharged from the Army, for the purpose of going back to France to do police duty, and it is absurd to talk about reenlisting men from the source I have mentioned in the United States, to send them back to France, so that some one now in France could be discharged and sent home. We know that is practically impossible. There are thousands of our soldiers in France now who have been put on priority and are waiting for ships to bring them home, and sending more men across would not provide any additional ships with which to bring back those now in the service abroad.

Once you authorize an Army of 500,000 men you may rest assured that you will have that Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, because we have the officers now, and when they get the men they will keep them, as they would be authorized to do. If you do not authorize such an Army, automatically on the proclamation of peace we will return to the national-defense act, under which the Army would have to be organized on a basis of 175,000 men; and they could, and would, demobilize the present Army and bring the soldiers home. The adoption of this new proposed Army would not hasten the demobilization, about which the War Department has been so severely criticized. I am not much in sympathy with this talk that they are not trying to demobilize and are not doing their best. I believe they are; there is no good reason why they should want to keep men in France who have already been ordered home and are waiting for ships to bring them. I know that the department—at least they say so, and I believe it—is doing its utmost to get transports and additional facilities for the purpose of bringing soldiers home as rapidly as possible, and I believe that by the beginning of the next fiscal year, at which time, under the terms of the bill proposed, we would only be beginning to organize this Army of 500,000 men, a majority of our soldiers will have been returned to the United States and demobilized. Of course there are no real facts to sustain an argument that by adopting this bill for a great Army we would hasten the return of the boys in France.

The truth is, and the real question is, Do you want an Army of 500,000 men in peace times, or do you believe that an Army of 175,000 is enough? I am firmly convinced that when peace comes we should return to the national-defense act and thereby force a reduction in the size of our Army and the demobilization of all those now in the service. We have heard a good deal of talk about unscrambling and returning to peace conditions. Here we have a situation whereby if you enact this bill, as proposed by the Committee on Rules, you force an absolute unscrambling of the War Department upon the proclamation of peace and a return to peace-time conditions and a peace-time Army. If you adopt the other suggestion, as embodied in the legislation proposed, you contine war-time conditions until at least June 30, 1920. Our expenses have been enormous, the burdens of taxation are heavy, and we ought not to continue them by maintaining a large standing Army in times of peace; and I do not believe that this House has any desire to adopt the provisions contained in the legislation proposed by a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. I will.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Does the gentleman say that is the proposition before the House, whether we shall have 175,000 or 500,000 men?

Mr. WISE. That is the real issue, and for that reason I want the legislation recommended by the Committee on Rules to pass, because it would authorize us to enlist under the national-defense act an Army of only 175,000 men. I do not want, and I do not think the House wants, to enact the other legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let us see of we can get the situation clearly in our heads. The military appropriation bill carries a legislative item providing for enlistments in the Regular Army and providing in the national-defense act also for a temporary Army composed of men enlisted for one year.

The rule now before us provides for the consideration of a bill proposing, practically, to repeal certain provisions—section 7 and section 14—of the act of May 8, 1917. Section 14 merely suspends the operation of existing law which conflicts with that act. Section 7 of that act provides that enlistments in the Regular Army shall be for the period of the emergency. If these two sections to that extent be repealed, the national-defense act comes into effect again, providing for enlistments in the Regular Army for three years with the colors and four years with the reserves, or a total of seven years. The enlistments now are for the period of the emergency. No one has yet defined by law the meaning of the word "emergency" in this connection. I think that it is quite impossible for a good many months to come to bring all of the American Army out of Europe and leave no portion of the Army there. I take it that it is certain that the President will not recall all of the American Army from Europe for some months to come. He will have a definition of the word

"emergency." He can discharge men from the Army now in the service when he pleases. It does not end with four months after peace is declared under the law, because any construction which may have been made by the Army is subject to reconsideration by the President.

Now, what is the situation. We want the boys who were drafted given a chance to come home. [Applause.] They will not be given that chance unless there is some way to provide for some American Army in Europe. The President will not have them brought home until he has somebody there to take the place of a portion of them. Under this bill, if it passes, and to the extent that it goes, it is all right. Under this bill, if it passes, men must enlist in the Regular service for seven years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; I can not. Under the proposition for a temporary Army this will enlist them for one year's service. It is believed, notwithstanding the gentleman who last occupied the floor, that there are a good many boys in Europe who would be willing to remain on a one-year enlistment, but who are not willing to remain for an enlistment of seven years—three years with the colors. If this bill passes, of course the proposition is that the provision in the Army appropriation bill will go out. It is not intended that there should be any further legislation if this bill passes.

If this bill passes, the only provision for an army in Europe will be by enlisting men for a period of seven years, and it can not be done. The result will be that the President will declare that the emergency continues, and the boys who were drafted will continue in Europe under the draft, instead of having there those who would like to remain on a one-year enlistment. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I tried to explain in the beginning that this was a resolution merely to consider a bill, and that it was wholly unrelated, so far as the parliamentary situation was concerned, to the Army appropriation bill. This authorizes enlistments to the extent of 175,000. Let me be perfectly frank about the matter. There is pending before the Committee on Rules a resolution to make in order a proposition to enlist 500,000 men. If this House shall vote down a proposition to enlist 175,000 men, as a member of the Committee on Rules I shall hesitate somewhat to vote for a rule to enlist 500,000 men.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to my colleague from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Is there any definite proposition before the Committee on Rules to vote on a proposition whether we would have 500,000 men or not?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. My colleague did not; but gentlemen on that side have chosen to connect this resolution up with the legislation that is pending in the Army appropriation bill. This is a proposition to consider a bill wholly independent of the Army appropration bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Did the gentleman from Illinois desire to ask me a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether there is anything of record to indicate that this proposes to make in order a bill for the enlistment of 175,000 men?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, well, that is the law. If this passes, then they will be authorized to enlist 175,000 volunteers in the Regular Army.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be three years with the colors and four years with the reserve?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; but amendments are in order on this proposition to make it one year or three years.

Mr. FIELDS. And if the gentleman will yield, I state that an amendment will be offered to do away with the four-year reserve and make it one year with the colors and two years with the reserves.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. This Senate bill simply will repeal certain restrictions that were placed on the national defense act by the act of May, 1917, with reference to the term of enlistment, but not in any way touching the size of the permanent Regular Army, and in that event how would any amendment be in order to change the size of the Regular Army as fixed by law?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If this shall pass as it stands it will then be in order, if I am correctly informed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to enlist 175,000 men under what is known as the national defense act.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the gentleman, in the beginning, if I did not misunderstand him, stated that an amendment to make it 500,000, or to reduce it from 175,000, would be in order on this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it would.

Mr. BARKLEY. I can not see how it would.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I could draw such an amendment, but I am not in favor of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (while the House was dividing). Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 162, answered "present" 2, not voting 93, as follows:

Mr. KINCHELOE with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. TAGUE with Mr. SWIFT.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. DEMPSEY.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report and statement of the managers on the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 13308) for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENT IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 5279, with Mr. HUMPHREYS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 5279, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of sections 7 and 14 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, as imposes restrictions upon enlistments in the Regular Army, are herewith repealed in so far as they apply to enlistments and reenlistments in the Regular Army after the date of approval of this act.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I think I may state very briefly that no Member of this House opposes the proposition of restoring the system of voluntary enlistment as it existed prior to the declaration of war and the adoption of the conscription bill. All that this bill does is to restore enlistments voluntarily in the Army of the United States under the national-defense act of June 3, 1916. I had hoped that we could take care of that situation without any rule under the legislative features in the Army appropriation bill. Personally I went before the Committee on Rules and asked to bring in a rule that would make in order the legislative features of the Army appropriation bill as reported by the committee subject to any germane amendment, so that the House might fight the whole thing out and we could decide exactly what ought to be done under the present situation. Now, I am sure, absolutely sure, that there is not a Member of this House who opposes the proposition that the law in regard to voluntary enlistments in the Military Establishment which existed prior to the declaration of war and the adoption of the act of May 18, 1917, which is the draft act. I am perfectly sure nobody opposes that legislation. The only question left is, What should be the period of enlistment? Under the law which existed prior to the adoption of that act all enlistments were for the period of three years with the colors and four years in the reserve. A suggestion has been made that under the present circumstances it would be a wise idea to allow that act to be amended so as to provide for a voluntary enlistment for a period of one year, and I wish to state to the House that, so far as I am personally concerned, I shall support any amendment which authorizes the enlistment for the period of one year. [Applause.] I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, like all men who are disposed to accede to the philosophy which ought to govern good American citizenship, those of us who were opposed to the rule must accept the order of the House and abide by its decision. However, I can not help but express my regret at the action this House has taken to-day, because I am as firmly persuaded as any man can be who has tried to give some serious attention to Army legislation—more particularly during this crisis which has confronted us in the last year and a half, and which is by no means over—that the House will some day come to the conclusion that this action was hasty, abrupt, and not well founded. I am afraid we are going through that experience which is characteristic of human nature, and that so often, after periods of long tense stress and superheightened energy along some line of great consequence, leads us to relax and relapse and to subside in our energies and in our purposes, when we begin to think the strain is about over, and to go sometimes just as far the other way in mischievous reaction as patriotically and purposefully we were inclined to go in a better way before. I am afraid we are going through that pendulum sway which is so characteristic of human nature, and that our reaction may make us just as much difficulty during this period of quasi peace as our failure to go through under the tension of war might have brought us into another set of difficulties at that time.

The Army legislation now on the bill that was under discussion in the House had no direct relation to foreign policy. That was simply the regular annual Army appropriation bill. It could not have any such relation to foreign policy, and all you gentlemen of experience on this floor know that it is not part of the practice of this House to write any foreign policies into an annual Army appropriation bill. It was, however, very manifest from the state of the world's affairs and from the foreign policies that our Nation is already engaged in, that in making the annual Army appropriations we should make a provision for an army sufficient to tide us through this emergency, whatever it may be under the existing circumstances. How long that emergency indicated in the law raising emergency troops will last as a fact or in law no man in this House can guess. No man in the world would presume to guess. But we do know one very significant thing, that when the peace table comes to some determination and decision as to what shall be the terms of peace, and when the various Governments involved shall have ratified that decision and we shall have a legal peace, then, and then only, the President can issue his proclamation declaring that peace a fact; and the emergency under which all this large army was raised will be declared officially to be at an end. If we do not enact something like the legislation proposed in the Army bill, then, as if it were yesterday's snow before to-day's sun, all the great existing emergency army will melt out of existence, and we will be left with a paltry 175,000 enlisted men under the national defense act.

Now, suppose the terms of the peace table do provide that we are to take some part in guarding peoples and properties and interests in Europe while the normal condition of peace is being restored there. How are you going to divide the 175,000 soldiers, which is the limit of the terms of the national-defense act in time of peace, between this country with its home military garrisons, our insular possessions, and their normal garrisons and the force that we shall be required to keep in Europe? How are you going to do it? Can anybody figure it out mathematically and leave any respectable force in any place?

Not only that, my friends, but here is, I think, a part of the situation we can not afford to blink at, although no one can sum the situation up in a mere five-minute talk. All that has been said on this floor heretofore has been in relation to a so-called emergency existing in Europe. I ask you in your calmest moments of thought to question yourselves whether the emergency is in Europe alone or whether it is not also right now in our own country, and whether it may not continue to be a most serious and threatening emergency in our own country for months after the President has issued his official proclamation declaring that the emergency in Europe is over.

That is the proposition that you and I may be called upon to face some day, perhaps before many months. I do not believe that the American people will ever be satisfied with our going away to-day, leaving them only with a bare defense of 175,000 men in the Regular Army when some great emergency in this country may possibly come in the course of these anxiously troublous times. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is no need of any of us trying to deceive ourselves about the matter that we are now considering. We have the plain, barefaced proposition before us for voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, under the national defense act of 1916, in peace time. What strategic relation this act may have to the military appropriation bill remains to be seen. The question that we have just passed upon in voting for the rule, making in order this legislation and the real question we are facing on this bill, is whether or not the Congress of the United States in time of peace wants a greater Army than 175,000 men in the line, with officers and other units bringing it up to more than 200,000, and in case of emergency or threatened public danger, to which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] has referred, should occur, the President in his discretion could bring the Regular Army up to 400,000 or whether or not we, the Congress of the United States, are in favor of a standing Army in time of peace of 500,000 men. That is the plain proposition, and we need not try to deceive ourselves. I, for one, am absolutely opposed to a large standing Army in time of peace—to be supported by our already overburdened taxpayers.

Now, a great deal has been said here in the last few minutes about the boys that we have sent over to France. God knows, gentlemen, we all want the boys to come home from across the seas, and come now; but who sent the boys to France? The distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] stands upon this floor and weeps that the boys may come back from France, when he was the princely knight that led in the selective-draft fight that sent every one of them to Europe. [Applause.]

Now, then, the same law that the gentleman and the rest of us supported upon this floor that sent the boys to France gave the President of the United States the power to keep them there until the emergency was over. Many of the men on the floor of this House opposed lodging that discretion with the President or anybody else, but the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], and, if I remember correctly, likewise the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], said they were willing to trust the President with the Army of the United States until the emergency was over.

What is the matter with you here to-day that you are not willing to still trust him? What has the President done that does not entitle him to the same confidence and trust that you imposed in him before the armistice was signed? What has come over you men? I will tell you, gentlemen. We are playing the baby act. We are trying to shift our own responsibilities to the shoulders of others. What we ought to say now, and what we should have said several days ago, is that when this war was over with Germany that every soldier boy who wanted to come home and finish his education; that wanted to come home and take up the job that is being held for him; that every farmer's son that wants to again take up the plow he left in the fence corner should for these reasons and upon their own applications be discharged, and discharged now. [Applause.] Yet when that proposition was offered here to the appropriation bill a point of order was made against it.

Now, what do we propose to do in this bill? We propose to go back to the peace Army plan as provided by the national-defense act, and until that time, gentlemen, you have all the Army you want until this emergency has passed. Let me tell you, gentlemen, you need not be uneasy. There is not going to be any more fighting in Europe, so far as our boys are concerned, with Germany. Germany has been whipped to a frazzle, and the American soldier did it. [Applause.] And I want to tell you another thing—no such Army as ours has ever been marshaled on the field of conflict. They have gone through the valley and shadow of death in "no man's land" and suffered ten thousand agonies that the rights, honor, and freedom of our own country should be forever preserved and maintained and that peoples everywhere should be free from military autocracy for all time—they have covered themselves with imperishable glory and will have the gratitude of our people forever.

We have to-day this great Army to take care of our every need until the emergency is passed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the proposition now before the House is to repeal sections 14 and 7 of the selective-draft law, by doing which we will revert to section 27 of the national-defense act, which is the enlistment section of that law, and which provides that men enlisted in the Regular Army of the United States shall be enlisted for seven years, three years with the colors and four years in the reserves.

Now, I hope if any amendment is offered in this House to this bill, although it may not be in order, to change that enlistment period, that no man will make the point of order against it, but let us change that part of the law. [Applause.]

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that so far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, we went to the Committee on Rules and asked for bread and, in a sense, they gave us a stone. The Committee on Military Affairs for days and weeks, I may say, have been struggling with the legislation that is attached to the appropriation bill. I want to say, further, in order that you may understand clearly the position of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the officers of the Regular Army, the Secretary of War, and the Chief of Staff submitted a proposition to us, asking us to make permanent a Military Establishment in this country by giving them 28,579 officers and 509,909 men, as a permanent fixed peace-time Military Establishment in this country.

I think I speak truthfully when I say that there is not a single member of the Committee on Military Affairs that believes in a large peace-time Regular Army. Therefore we denied it, and we brought in a substitute proposition, which simply provides that the Regular Army may be enlisted up to its full war strength, and that an additional force sufficient to bring it up to 500,000 may be enlisted for one year.

That is the proposition that we brought in to submit to this House. I want to say to you that so far as I am personally concerned I would not favor that proposition in time of peace, but I realize, as you realize, that it would be the part of wisdom to provide at least an Army of 500,000 men, with such safeguards thrown around it as would disband the same at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCKENZIE. I regret I can not. I have not the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MCKENZIE. And that the officers commissioned to officer this special and distinct force would go out at the expiration of the period; in other words, hold temporary commissions.

Now, realize this, that you can get rid of an army that is enlisted. Enlisted men enlist for a period of one or more years, and when the expiration of that time comes they go out; but the officer who is commissioned in the Regular Army becomes a fixture on this Government and has a vested right to hold his commission for life as long as he behaves himself, unless he is discharged for physical disability.

Now, my friends, there was one other thing that influenced us, and that was this, that we did believe there were some men in the service who would be willing to reenlist, and I had an amendment to make it possible for them to reenlist in this special force, part of which might be left in Europe. I have not been deceiving myself about these men coming back from Europe. I was one of those who voted for the draft act, along with the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], to take these boys and put them into this war, much as I hated to do it; but our necessities and the national honor demanded it. We are in the war, and I say to you now that so far as I am concerned, having put our hand to the plow, we should not turn back until the job is finished. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to follow this Military Committee since this bill came on the floor, but I confess that they leave me in a very confused state of mind. I do not believe from the report that the War Department knows exactly what it wants for the next fiscal year, but if it does it has not communicated its views to the Committee on Military Affairs. I would prefer to believe that rather than that the Committee on Military Affairs has information that it does not wish to communicate to the House.

When the rule was up here for discussion we learned from the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it was necessary to do one thing for a certain purpose, and now we learn from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] that this army is needed for another purpose.

I want to say that I am in favor of this country keeping its international obligations, and if it is necessary for us to maintain troops in Europe during this emergency I want to see the Government maintain them there. But the gentleman from California starts out by saying that we can not raise 100,000 volunteers in this country, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] replies that these men in Europe are there for the emergency, that the President can return them whenever he wants, and that he will not return them for quite a while; that these men are entitled to come back; that he wants to see these drafted boys brought back, and in order to bring them back he is gong to vote to pass a law so as to enlist men who are over there who want to stay. Now, if anybody can follow that sort of reasoning and talk around and come out anywhere I should like to know who it is.

The fact of the matter is that this legislation is necessary in order that we may have a Regular Army when the emergency ends. I understand that we have probably 20,000 or 30,000 men in the Regular Army whose enlistments will expire when this emergency is over, and unless we reenlist some men at once when the emergency is over we will have no Army at all. Now, as far as this Army is concerned that is over there now or that may be necessary during the emergency, under the draft law these men can be kept there as long as they are needed, and when the emergency ends and the men are not needed then they can come back here, and we do not need anybody to take their places, and if the treaty makes it desirable for us to keep men there after peace is declared I think it will be time enough then to come to this Congress and ask us whether we are willing to vote to send men over there, or if the treaty requires us to do it then we can provide for those men.

Now, I am not a military man, but I have been trying to follow these gentlemen who have been trying to tell us what we need to do, and, in my judgment, all we need to do, as far as the Army in Europe is concerned, is to appropriate enough money to keep the men over there during the emergency, and when the emergency ends, then we can bring them back. If there are men there now who are willing to stay over, we need no legislation. Now, I realize that these boys are entitled to come back. We want to see them back, but if the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is correct, you can not get men in this country to volunteer to go over there to take their places, so the only way you can get men to go over there is to draft some more men. I am not in favor of drafting men now to go over there, for two reasons: In the first place, I do not think it is wise, and, in the second place, we will spend months and billions of dollars in equipping them to go over to take the place of those who are already there, and in all likelihood the new men would not be an effective force until the emergency was over.

Mr. KAHN. Has the gentleman ever heard "the gentleman from California" express a desire to draft men to go over there?

Mr. IGOE. No; but let me tell you what the gentleman from California did say. You said you could not get 100,000 volunteers in this country, did you not?

Mr. KAHN. Under the terms of the Regular Army enlistment, which is three years in the Army and four years in the reserve.

Mr. IGOE. May I ask the gentleman where he is going to get his volunteers?

Mr. KAHN. The Military Committee bill provided for another organization that were to be allowed to volunteer for a period of one year outside of the Regular Army.

Mr. IGOE. How many men does the gentleman think we can get if we provide for volunteers for one year in the Regular Army?

Mr. KAHN. Volunteers for one year in the Regular Army?

Mr. IGOE. I understood that was the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. KAHN. No; I said in this extra force. If you call for one-year enlistments in the Regular Army, I am inclined to think you can get a quarter of a million men.

Mr. IGOE. And, then, in the extra force, how many can you get?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. That leaves me in about the same position that I was before, and the House is in about the same position.

Mr. KAHN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the Rules Committee of the House would adopt such a rule as would make it possible for us to consider several matters in this bill—first, a matter which has raised a great deal of discontent in this country, the matter of promotions, which were stopped by order of the War Department; second, the matter of the designating chevron, which designated the kind of service. We should have taken some legislative action on that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield there, just for one question?

Mr. CRAGO. I have very little time, but I will yield to the gentleman for a short question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then the justification for asking for 509,000 men is so that these men can wear these chevrons, is it?

Mr. CRAGO. No; not at all. In the next place I think we ought to have some legislation which would provide for some force to tide us over this emergency other than the Regular Army; but we have not been given that right in the rule which has been adopted.

Mr. Chairman, had the war with Germany been pushed to a final conclusion, and the military and naval power of Germany entirely crushed, as it would inevitably have been had the war continued a few months longer, the problem of disbanding our Army more rapidly and the return of our Military Establishment to an entirely peace basis would have been much simplified. Gen. Foch, however, and we think wisely, concluded the armistice when he did in order to save lives which would undoubtedly have been sacrificed if he had continued the offensive and absolutely conquered Germany on her own soil. Because of this very humane act we are now confronted with many problems not contemplated when our Army was formed. We had in view the final winning of the war in such a way that we would all know our work was finished, and that all our men could be sent home just as rapidly as transportation could be provided. Since we have these problems by reason of the armistice we should not hesitate to meet them in the proper spirit.

Our men were content to remain as long as hostilities continued; some of them now are perfectly willing to remain in the service; but the great body of them want to get home, and their wishes should be respected. We should be willing to lay aside our preconceived ideas of a peace-time Army and give the War Department all necessary legislation to enable them to form an Army composed of men who are willing and glad to remain in the service; and just as we give them a chance to enlist men, we thus give them a chance to send home the men who should be back in civil life; to withhold this authority may compel them to keep a great body of our soldiers abroad during the many months which may go by before a final treaty of peace can be concluded and ratified by the different Governments.

We should look at our present situation in the light of the past, and try to avoid the errors of the past where it is at all possible.

The sudden ending of the Spanish-American War in the summer of 1898 is somewhat analogous to the present situation in Europe. The real problems confronting our Government after the cessation of hostilities in 1898 presented themselves with great force, and these problems grew as the months went by during the time the terms of the treaty of peace with Spain were being discussed and finally ratified.

The situation in the Philippines was more acute on the day this treaty was ratified than it was before hostilities with Spain had ceased.

I have taken the following from The Military Unpreparedness of the United States, by Frederic L. Huidekoper, which, by the way, is a splendid history of our Military Establishment. His explanation of the situation as it existed before the treaty of peace with Spain had been ratified is here given:

To cap the climax, Congress expressly stipulated that all volunteers "shall be discharged from the service of the United States when the purposes for which they were called into service shall have been accomplished, or on the conclusion of hostilities." This was tantamount to leaving the question to the adjudication of the volunteers, and scarcely had the peace protocol been signed on August 12 than they proceeded to avail themselves of what they deemed to be their privilege. On the 18th of that month an order was issued by the War Department for the mustering out of 100,000 volunteers, but, as this embraced less than half of that force, any number of officers and men began to clamor for their discharge, using every possible influence to procure it, quite regardless of the fact that the Government was in nowise obligated to grant it until the treaty of peace had been definitely signed and ratified.

In many cases their demands were complied with in order to reduce military expenditures, but when the Regulars were withdrawn from Cuba and Porto Rico the Government found itself greatly embarrassed by the demands of the volunteers, who had to be sent to replace them in order to hold those islands. By the time the treaty of peace was signed the volunteers had in turn been superseded by other Regulars, had been brought home and mustered out, so that the terms of the enlistment contracts had been complied with. The exigencies in the Philippines rendered such a course impossible. Allusion has already been made to the declaration of independence by the Filipinos, who were not permitted to participate in the operations culminating in the capture of Manila. Having formed a government, they demanded recognition of it, but this was refused, although no steps were taken to prevent their acquiring control over substantially the rest of the archipelago, partly owing to the paucity of our troops and partly owing to the policy laid down by our Government. This attitude, coupled with a fear that the United States was about to seize the islands, engendered such distrust and enmity that in October the Filipinos began to concentrate their forces, to the number of some 40,000, around Manila and virtually shut up the American Army under Gen. Otis in the city, where, apart from guarding 13,000 Spanish prisoners, it was compelled to maintain order among 300,000 hostile inhabitants. By January, 1899, Otis received a paltry reinforcement of 6,500 men, thus bringing his command up to 20,481, the Regulars, armed with the Krag-Jorgensen rifle, being only 5,372 strong, while the other 15,400 were State volunteers, supplied with the obsolete Springfield. On February 4, 1899, began the Philippine insurrection, which was not finally quelled until more than three years later. Congress had not only committed an egregious blunder in the wording of the law of April 22, 1898, instituting the volunteer army, but it neglected until March 2, 1899, to create other forces to replace it. In consequence of this failure, not until June 14, 1899—10 months after the necessity had ceased for the use of volunteers called out under the act of 1898—did a sufficiency of Regulars reach the Philippines to permit Otis to send home any of his volunteer troops, and not until October 11 did the first of the newly-created force join him. As a matter of fact, the last of these regiments—the Forty-eighth Volunteer Infantry—did not arrive at Manila until January 25, 1900. Owing to the lack of a Regular Army large enough to respond to the increased demands in the two hemispheres, the Government was confronted by two alternatives, namely, either to abandon the Philippines entirely or to endeavor to hold them by retaining in service such troops as were available. Having determined upon the latter course, it was compelled to break its contract and to hold the men, who had volunteered for the War with Spain only, through a succession of active operations lasting for six months after the period when their term of enlistment had legally expired.

I have gone into this matter at length, because I was in the Philippines at this time in command of one of our volunteer organizations, and we knew that it was absolutely necessary for us to remain there even though our terms of enlistment expired with the signing of the treaty.

In the Philippines we did more fighting, lost more men, after the war with Spain was over than we had lost during the war, and on the day of the signing of this treaty this small force in the Philippines was entrenched in and about the city of Manila, guarding that city and the base of all our supplies from the attacks of the Philippine Army. During all these months of campaigning in the heat and unhealthful climate of the Philippines we realized something was wrong at home, and it took months for Congress to make up its mind to organize temporary forces in addition to recruiting the Regular Establishment in order that these men whose terms of enlistment had expired months before might be relieved. I hope the present Congress will not delay matters in such a way that we will be criticized for failing to do our plain and manifest duty.

The bill which we indorsed contemplates an average Military Establishment after July 1, 1919, of 509,000 men only, and every man who has enlisted either in the Regular Army, a part of this force, or in the temporary force to be organized for one year makes it possible to return a man from the Army cantonments or from the battle fields of France to his home, and any delay in providing for the organization of the force contemplated by this act just to that extent delays the return to their homes of the men who are already in the Army, but who are not willing to remain in it during the long months which must elapse while the treaty of peace is being considered.

In connection with what I have quoted from Maj. Huidekoper's book, I call attention to the fact that following the Spanish-American War we had greater problems confronting us as a Nation than we had during that war; and if you will refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, pages 2364 almost inclusive to 2688, you will find that the Senate and the House spent much time in consideration of that situation when it was proposed to raise a volunteer force of 100,000 men, and the same arguments were urged against that particular military step then that you hear urged against this now. One hundred thousand men were eventually authorized for use in the Philippine Islands and elsewhere. Yet at the end of the greatest war in the history of the world, when these great problems are confronting us, we are hesitating to allow our Military Establishment a reorganization of the Regular Army to provide for a volunteer force for one year of two or three hundred thousand men. The situation in the Philippines was more acute at the time the treaty of peace was ratified in the Senate than it ever was before. The men were compelled to stay in the Philippines for six months after their terms of enlistment had expired, because of the fact that Congress spent five or six months in deliberating on what they should do in order to provide a force to take the place of these men whose terms of enlistment had expired.

I do not want us to make the same mistake now and sit here splitting hairs while men in Europe are anxious to be returned; and it is impossible for all to be returned until we do provide legislation under which a force shall be formed to take their places over there. After July 1 every man in the forces authorized by this act approved by the committee would take the place of a man in Europe who wants to come home. Prior to that date every man who enlists in the voluntary force will take the place of a man in cantonments who wants to return to his home now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAGO was granted unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to make it clear to you just what this bill will accomplish if enacted into law. It is understood that it will be amended to provide for one-year enlistments, and we all agree that the term of enlistment should be so reduced. This measure repeals sections 7 and 14 of the selective-draft act of May 18, 1917, and permits a return to the Hay Army reorganization act of June 3, 1916. The Hay Act provided for 64 regiments of Infantry, 25 regiments of Cavalry, 21 regiments of Artillery, the Coast Artillery Corps, and so on, aggregating 175,000 men in a time of peace, but a much larger number in time of war. The bill that we are now considering will go into effect in a time of war, so that the maximum, and not the minimum, number of volunteers may be enlisted. Now, in my opinion, there is no reason why a half million men could not be enlisted under the terms of the Army reorganization act. I have read the act carefully. I have also inquired of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and no one has been able to point out anything that would prevent the General Staff from changing the tables of organization and thus make the regiments mentioned in the law large enough to accommodate all the men they have asked for. I have here a table prepared by an officer of the General Staff which estimates that there might be obtained a maximum of 288,185 enlisted men and 11,864 officers, or a total of 300,049, under the Hay Act. This estimate was made in 1917 and was undoubtedly based on the old tables of organization. Everyone knows that the war strength of our regiments has been greatly increased since that time.

I understood the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to say a few minutes ago that the maximum number of volunteer enlisted men that could now be obtained was 250,000.

Mr. KAHN. That was not the maximum; I said it was an easy matter to get that many men.

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the terms of this bill 38,000 more men may be enlisted than the number mentioned in the estimate made by the gentleman from California. I wanted to bring that fact to the attention of the House, so that you need not fear that you are limiting the Army that may be raised by voluntary enlistments during the present emergency to 175,000 men. We can have a voluntary Army of 288,000 enlisted men and eleven or twelve thousand officers, or a total at least of 300,000 men. I wanted to impress that fact upon the House, so that when you vote for this bill you may know that instead of voting for the 175,000 men you are actually voting for at least 300,000, and, in my judgment, 500,000 men may be obtained. After peace is declared the number in the line of the Army will be reduced to 175,000 men, but that will not take place until at least four months after the treaty is signed and proclaimed. [Applause.]

The table to which I have referred is to be found on page 73 of volume 2 of the National Service Library, edited by Maj. Charles E. Kilbourne, of the General Staff, and is as follows:

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want to thank the chairman of the committee for yielding this time to me. I am in favor of this bill if it will do anything to bring back the boys from France. I want to say that I am not in favor of the plenipotentiaries coming to an agreement whereby we will have to keep a large number of soldiers in Europe after the war is over.

JULIUS KAHN, our esteemed Member of Congress from the State of California, born in Germany, ranking Republican member of the great Military Affairs Committee and its next chairman, leader at the war session of this Congress in the fight in favor of the military bill as desired by experts, uttered these words:

I am an American, for America first, last, and all the time; no other country appeals to me.

JULIUS KAHN'S liberty-loving attitude is a symbol of what America and Americans stand for. [Applause.] His untiring work in this Congress for his country, his intelligent and fearless guidance, places him in the front rank of American statesmen. [Applause.]

There may be excellent reasons for the establishment of a Jewish nation in Palestine for the persecuted Jews of other countries, but the Jews in this country are satisfied and contented with the liberty, freedom, and opportunity they have enjoyed here for many decades.

If there is to be a league of nations I hope it will provide, among other things, that citizens of all classes, races, religions, and creeds shall have equal protection of the laws of the countries in which they live—the same freedom, at least, that we have in the United States.

Previous to the Civil War Jews came to this country as individuals, but after the war conditions in Russia forced them to come to America to find an asylum from the oppression of Russian tyranny. Since 1870 they have come here in large numbers. In 1880 it was estimated there were 250,000 Jews in the United States, mostly belonging to the mercantile class; now there are several million distributed among all trades, professions, and in the mercantile pursuits.

JULIUS KAHN says:

This country has been their Zion for 140 years. They ought to be so loyal to the flag of the United States as to leave no desire whatever in the heart of any man of the faith to carry any other flag.

Let us see how the Jewish-American has lived up to this advice during this present war. Jewish-American soldiers have done their part and have gone over the top for American institutions and for the honor of the flag. Thus they have shown their love and appreciation for a country that gave them liberty and opportunity. There were in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps during this war between 150,000 and 200,000 Jews. Of 80,000 tabulated, 69,000 were in the Army, 8,800 in the Navy, and about 1,700 in the Marine Corps. Of the 69,000 in the Army, 35,000 were in the Infantry, 6,500 in the Artillery, 9,300 in the Medical Corps, 3,964 in the Signal Corps, 1,895 were in the Engineer Corps, 1,213 in the Cavalry, 1,019 in the Ordnance branch, 3,521 were in the Quartermaster's Corps, and about 8,814 in other branches.

There were 5,021 Jewish commissioned officers in the Army, of whom 30 were colonels, 202 majors, 782 captains, and 4,007 lieutenants. In the Navy there were 205 commissioned officers, including 1 rear admiral, and in the Marine Corps 25 commissioned officers. Over 30,000 Jewish soldiers went from New York City alone, Philadelphia sent over 7,000, and about 3,000 from Chicago.

In casualties the Jewish soldiers suffer heavily, probably more than is generally expected. Out of a total of 64,157 casualties reported on November 1, 1918, 2,502 were Jewish troops, or nearly 4 per cent of the total.

The entire Jewish population in the United States is about 3 per cent of the total population, and if these casualty lists signify anything it means that the Jewish Americans furnished from 4 to 5 per cent of the total personnel, or more than their share. And the beautiful part of it all is the large number of them were Jewish volunteers, and this is from statistics.

It was the Seventy-seventh (Upton) Division that was in the thick of the fight at the Argonne Forest, and it was a Jewish battalion belonging to the famous Three hundred and eighth that won deathless glory for itself and for the honor of the Jewish name in the Argonne.

Many have been cited for bravery, and it will be found in the last analysis that the Jewish Americans have done their part in this great war, and history will write their names alongside of the other brave American boys who have made themselves immortal. In conclusion, I will read the poem to America written by a Jewish poet by the name of Emma Lazarus:

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land;
Here at our sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon hand
Glows world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp!" cried she,
With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free—
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore—
Send those, the homeless, tempest-tost to me.
I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

During the above remarks Mr. EMERSON'S time expired, and the following occurred:

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. LONDON. I object to that.

Subsequently, by unanimous consent, Mr. EMERSON had leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, on the portion of this bill on which we are all agreed I shall not spend much time. As a matter of fact, the bill now before us for consideration was included by the Military Affairs Committee in the Army appropriation bill. It removes the restrictions now upon enlistments in the Regular Army. Therefore there is no difference between us as to the bill now before us, but the Military Affairs Committee in the Army bill proposed to go much further than this.

Let us assume that a Regular Army of 175,000 men of the line could be enlisted under this provision. The committee, after hearing the Secretary of War and his military advisers, were not inclined to believe that we should leave the Military Establishment reduced to that point during the next fiscal year.

If anyone on the committee favored a larger Regular Army, I do not know who it was. We all agreed that we did not wish to increase the Regular Establishment at this time. An amendment which would have been proposed here, had the legislative part of the Army bill been made in order, provided that at no time should the Regular Army exceed the peace-time requirement of 175,000 men of the line, and, my friend from Texas (Mr. GARRETT) to the contrary notwithstanding, that proposition does not increase the Regular Army by one officer or one man.

It was made very emphatic to us that it would be unsafe if we did not have some provision for a larger number of troops which it was believed we might need during the next year. For that additional number of troops we proposed a temporary force, to be enlisted for a term not to exceed one year, but to be used for such time only as might be considered necessary.

Our reason for providing for that force was just this: There are in France a large number of men who would like to come home and be mustered out of the service and whom we should like to bring home and have mustered out of the service, but who can not be brought home until the emergency shall cease or until somebody shall take their places. Then, we do not know how that elastic term "emergency" will be construed.

Finally, there are a large number of troops in this country, kept as a working force in the demobilization camps, who are being kept from their homes and business because there is no one to take their places. It may be that there are thousands of discharged soldiers who would be glad to go there and take their places in the demobilization force, but that can not be done until some provision is made for resuming enlistments.

Our proposition was simply this: Let us have a voluntary Army for cleaning up after this war the same as we did after the Spanish War, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] has just pointed out. The emergency at that time strung out for many long, weary months. We needed a number of men, but we did not keep them in the Army at that time for another year or two. We went frankly before the people and said, "We want enough men who are willing to go overseas to the Philippines and do this service to come forward and offer their services," and they did come forward, a considerable number of regiments. They went overseas and performed that service, and did it well. They were a satisfied army. They had volunteered to do it.

The issue between us comes right down to this: We must either keep those men over there indefinitely and keep the men in the demobilization camps in this country indefinitely as a demobilization force or, on the other hand, we must prepare a temporary force to take their places and serve until the emergency shall be entirely over.

I believe that there are a large number of men in this country who would be glad to enlist for this temporary work, a large number who will be willing to go overseas and take part in the work of the army of occupation. We ought to give them a chance to do so, and at the same time make it possible for the men who have borne the brunt of this war to be brought home at the earliest possible moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I, with most of the Members on the Republican side of the House, voted against the rule that was just adopted, that vote was not directed against the provisions in the bill which is now pending. It was a protest against the failure of the Committee on Rules to give the House an opportunity to pass upon the question in regard to a temporary army in order to bring home the boys now in France. As far as I am concerned, I shall vote for the pending bill, the substance of which has already been favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. I think no one is opposed now to permitting enlistments in the Regular Army, and the responsibility on the Republican side of the House is only to do the best that it has an opportunity to do. We are not the majority in the House. If the Democratic side of the House—the majority side—refuses to let the House provide a sufficient temporary army in order to bring home all of the drafted men who want to come home, they accept that responsibility; it is not ours. [Applause on the Republican side.] When in the future months, if this is the only legislation which is enacted, the boys are kept in France over their protests, it will be because of the stupidity or something else of the Democratic side of the House in its refusal to grant relief. It will be a Democratic administration keeping the boys in France under Democratic legislation, against which we have protested. We believe in providing an opportunity for a sufficient temporary army, so that the President will not be able to resist the demand that the drafted boys shall be brought home according to the original provisions and intent of the law [applause on the Republican side], and if on the Democratic side of the House they choose to interfere with that, theirs will be the responsibility. It is they who refuse to do it, it is they who refuse the opportunity for those boys to come home, as they wish to come home.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have only five minutes. I think the most of the Army ought to have been brought home at once. I think there has been undue delay both in bringing the Army home from France and in demobilization of the Army that is in the United States. The excuse has been that they had to have an army of some kind, and that they could not disband the existing Army until they were authorized to raise a temporary army to do the work which must be done. It is the Democratic administration that is doing this thing through the executive department; it is the Democratic control on the majority side that is refusing to remedy the conditions. So far as it goes, we approve of the proposition that is contained in this bill, but it does not go far enough. We can vote for the bill and still protest that it is not sufficient, and leave those gentlemen to take the responsibility which they have assumed.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, as one member of the majority, I am entirely willing to accept the responsibility for the vote which I cast in favor of the rule and for the point of order which I made against the provision in the Army appropriation bill, which I understand from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader of the Republicans, represents the Republican view. I am opposed to an Army of 500,000 men. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am in favor of limiting the Army to 175,000 men in the Regular Army, and that is all we propose to do here. The gentleman speaks of "Democratic stupidity or something else." When the gentleman had the floor he said that under the law the question of when the emergency ended could be interpreted one way by the President and another way by the Army.

And the President could if he wished keep these drafted men in France to do police duty there after the emergency had passed. I do not know whether that was due to stupidity or to something else. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The law says that whenever the state of war shall cease by the conclusion of peace between the United States and its enemies in the present war the President shall declare by published proclamation to that effect. The President shall do it, and thereafter no man who has enlisted or been drafted into the Army serving abroad can be held to compulsory service after four months from the date of the proclamation, or such time as it is possible for the President to secure transportation facilities to bring him home.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not yield. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] said that "the emergency" was an "elastic term." The trouble with these gentlemen is that they do not know what the law is now. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Naturally they would not know how to change it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We have put the responsibility where it belongs, and that is on the President of the United States primarily. We authorized him to send the boys to France. We all want them back as soon as we can get them back, and no demagogue here can make anybody else believe to the contrary. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We all want them back, but gentlemen on the other side, if I am to understand the gentleman from Illinois, want at least 500,000 to remain in France. Under the law as it stands to-day enlistments in the Regular Army are only for the term of the emergency. This law proposes to enable the Regular Army now to accept enlistments which shall be for three years, and four years in the reserves, under the terms of the law which this House several years ago passed.

That is all there is to it, and I want the Regular Army held to 175,000 men, so that all our boys can get back within a year. The department is doing the best it can, they say. I hope so. The responsibility is not on the Congress. It is primarily on the President and secondarily on the Secretary of War to get them back. We have said that the emergency shall cease when the President issues his proclamation, and we have further provided that he must issue it when peace is concluded. We have no business keeping soldiers over there after this war is over and after sufficient time has passed, when by exerting every effort the department can get them all back. If under this treaty the gentleman from California refers to we become obligated to maintain a force in France, then it will be up to the Congress to pass legislation to create a force and send it to France, but no Democrat wants any of these boys who have been drafted and enlisted to fight Germany after the war is over to be held over there [applause] to do police duty on the other side. Some gentleman stated we might need this 500,000 additional troops because some great emergency might arise. Once more gentlemen do not know what the law is. Under the law as it stands now the President can call out an additional force if an emergency arises and the Regular Army is not sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated on the floor here correctly that there was no opposition to the removal of the restrictions which were provided in this bill. It did not require a rule to secure the removal of those restrictions. What is the issue then before the House to-day? We have shown, I think, those of us who are opposed to the rule, that there was no reason or ground for believing that you could secure an army across the seas of 175,000 men under the circumstances that will exist if this is the only legislation that is passed. Gentlemen talk as if we had an army over there of 175,000 in the Regular Army. Now, that is not true. We have only 30,000 or 40,000 in the Regular Army across the seas at the present time, the rest are volunteers, or drafted men. Gentlemen who take the position that it is a contest between 175,000 men in the Regular Army and 500,000 men are not stating the issue fairly or truly. There is no such issue before the House. What we are in favor of and what the majority are opposing is to provide any temporary force that may take the place of those who are now across the seas.

Mr. DECKER rose.

Mr. TOWNER. I can not yield. We believe on this side that men who volunteered for this emergency are entitled to come home now if they can safely arrange it. We believe that the drafted men ought not to stay longer there if we can provide a method of preventing it. We believe that if this temporary force is provided for by voluntary enlistments of a year's time that there will be no difficulty in obtaining all the men who are necessary, in addition to the 30,000 or 40,000 of the Regular Army that will be required of the Expeditionary Force during the pendency of these negotiations for peace until the emergency shall have entirely ended, and thus bring the boys home who ought to be allowed to come home. And this, gentlemen, is your responsibility. You are unwilling to make any provision whatever; you are saying to those men, "You will be kept there just as long as any emergency exists, because a majority of Congress refuses to provide any other temporary expedient." Gentlemen, it is a serious responsibility, it is a responsibility which in my judgment you ought not to accept. I know that men on the majority side are as anxious as we are that their boys shall come home.

I know that they are receiving, as we are receiving, imploring messages from the fathers and families of those who are across the seas, that they may come home early.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I can not yield. And we propose a method by which they may be allowed to come home, those of them who desire it. There is not a man, I think, who will give any thought to the proposition but will know that there are men already among the nearly 2,000,000 men across the seas that will voluntarily enlist and stay there a year longer, and thus allow those who do not want to stay, and thus allow those who are called home by sickness or by calamity or by the calls of their business and the dependency of their families, to come home to this side again. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has five minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has consumed all of his time.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, there is a good deal of political camouflage being indulged in in this House this evening. [Applause.]

Now, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], who just spoke, told you with a straight and solemn face that their side of the House wanted those boys back here at once, and that this legislation has something to do with bringing them back. It has absolutely nothing at all to do with it. Anybody who knows anything about what the attitude of the War Department is knows that. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff testified before our committee that they wanted this, of course. In fact, I guess all the Army officers wanted these 28,000 officers and these 509,000 men to furnish places for these officers; but not one of them ever insinuated, ever intimated, that these men were ever to be sent to Europe. This is a new invention that has been made here to meet the political exigencies of the time. That is all there is of it.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] intimated here that the terms of enlistment of these 2,000,000 men in Europe had expired. Now, those gentlemen, both of whom voted for this draft law, know that every man that has gone in since April, 1917, enlisted or was drafted for the period of the emergency, and they also know that the emergency has not expired. What is the use of demagoging here and saying that these men ought to be brought back just because they want to come? As a matter of fact, the period of enlistment of these men over there has not expired. And if we are to accept the statement of the War Department, the Secretary of War, and the Chief of Staff they are returning those men to the United States just as rapidly as shipping can be procured. [Applause.] The number of men authorized by this legislation has absolutely nothing to do with the time when our soldiers in Europe will be returned, because the War Department has repeatedly stated that they are returning the men and intend to keep returning them just as rapidly as shipping can be secured for that purpose.

Now, if our brethren on the other side of the House, who are so anxious to have a regular standing army of 509,000 men and 28,679 officers, will just possess their souls in peace for a couple of weeks they will be in power, and they will have the authority and the votes to go ahead and put it through. [Applause.] But in the meantime let us legislate decently and in order and pass the necessary legislation. And it seems to me that the observations that have been made upon this side of the House clearly demonstrate that all that is necessary for us to do at this time is to pass the legislation which is before us.

I am very glad to have the assurance of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that they have no possible objection to this legislation. They voted against the rule, nearly all of them, just for political reasons. And when we come to pass this bill they will all join us in passing it, and everything will be lovely, and we shall all be happy ever after. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of sections 7 and 14 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, as impose restrictions upon enlistments in the Regular Army, are herewith repealed in so far as they apply to enlistments and reenlistments in the Regular Army after the date of approval of this act.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: At the end of line 10, after the word "act," insert the following amendment:

"Provided, That for a period of 12 months from the approval of this act enlistments in the Regular Army of the United States shall be made for a period of one year."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, because of the unsettled condition in the country as to the future military policy, I deem it advisable, and I believe my colleagues on the committee deem it advisable, to provide for enlistments for a period of 12 months—for at least 12 months after the approval of this act. After that, or probably during that 12 months, we will know more about the permanent policy of the country. Therefore, this does away with the Army reserve, to which objection has been urged, and makes the enlistment for one year.

Now, there is one other thought I want to advance before I leave the floor. Gentlemen who have been arguing here that the legislative rider proposed to the appropriation bill would expedite the return of men from France know that they are camouflaging and demagoguing and playing politics. There is not one word in the hearings nor has it been contended by any member of the Military Committee in committee that this force would be provided for any place except the United States. The military officers stated when before the committee that unless voluntary enlistments were resumed or some provision made to build up the regular establishment that it would have only 20,000 to 30,000 men at the end of the emergency. Therefore these forces that are provided for under any of this legislation are for service in this country.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FIELDS. If he will be very brief.

Mr. KAHN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that nobody contended that the men who would be raised under this law would be required to do service on the other side?

Mr. FIELDS. There has been a good deal of contention of that kind on the floor of this House for political purposes.

Mr. KAHN. But was there any contention of that kind in the committee?

Mr. FIELDS. But the gentleman knows that the object of the Military Establishment in asking for this additional legislation and for legislation to raise the temporary force was to build up the Regular Establishment in this country to what they felt it ought to be. That is a question of difference of opinion between the military authorities and the Members of Congress as to what the size of our Army should be under peace conditions, and all the arguments that have been made in favor of the legislation proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that it, if enacted, will expedite the return of the boys from France is political demagogy, and the man who utters it knows it. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, in order to keep the record straight, I think a fair statement ought to be made to the Members of the House. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs about January 16, 1919, and submitted an Army reorganization bill. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], told them that the time was so short during the remainder of the session that it was impossible to put through at this session an Army reorganization bill. Then they proposed that they be allowed to write a rider to be put on the Army bill which would accomplish the same purpose in a very few paragraphs. They brought the rider to the committee. It practically did in a few paragraphs what was attempted to be done in a bill several pages in length, introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and that rider did propose a peace-time Army of 500,000 men. The members of the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously tabled that proposition and refused to act upon it.

There was not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs that favored a peace-time Army of 500,000 men. [Applause.] There is not a member of the Committee on Military Affairs now, so far as I know, who favors a peace-time Army of 500,000 men. But during the deliberations in the committee on this subject it became evident that something ought to be done to bring back the men who are in France, and after considerable discussion the Committee on Military Affairs practically favored unanimously the provision that was in the Army bill when it came to the House.

Now, that is a plain statement of fact, and to charge political demagogy on the part of any man who favored it is itself demagogy. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Tennessee. All that the Committee on Rules brought in was a resolution to consider Senate bill 5279.

Mr. KAHN. I am aware of that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. One moment. Is the gentleman for that bill?

Mr. KAHN. This bill was a part of the provision which was on the Army appropriation bill. We tried to form a Regular Army under that provision, and, this being a part of it, I am for it. That is all there is to it.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. OLNEY. Do you not think that we are tying the hands of the President and the War Department?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Were you opposed to the rule?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I answered the gentleman's [Mr. GARRETT'S] question. I hold the floor, and I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. OLNEY. Do you not think that Congress is tying the hands of the President and the War Department, which recommended an Army of 505,000 men, by now limiting it to the small Army of 175,000 men when the emergency is not yet passed? [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I have felt all along that we ought to organize a substantial Army until the emergency is passed, until peace has been proclaimed and a condition of peace prevails throughout this country.

Mr. OLNEY. I was against this rule, and I predict that the conferees will come back here and reverse themselves and vote for an Army of 500,000 men. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I do not know what the conferees will do, but I think we will need an Army considerably beyond 175,000 men if we want to maintain our international obligations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman propose to support this bill?

Mr. KAHN. I said I would support it, because it is a part of the plan which was in the provision of the Army appropriation bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. For that reason I shall support it. It does not go as far as the Committee on Military Affairs provision went. We felt that under that provision the War Department would be able to get a sufficient number of men to enable this country to carry out its obligations to the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I have not had anything to say about this bill. [Applause.] I spoke my sentiments on the Army appropriation bill, which is still pending, and will be called up for passage as soon as we pass this substitute for the big temporary Army therein proposed. Aside from all this political talk about it, where is the man who can assign any reason for voting against this bill?

You have in this Republic to-day no law by which you can establish a Regular Army. This is the reenactment of what this Congress almost unanimously passed in the year 1916, when we were arranging to go to Mexico to straighten out affairs down there. This is what was enacted into law when the President of the United States went out on the hustings everywhere and declared that the world was on fire and that great preparations must be made. Now, in face of the fact that the American Congress, before we entered the war, thought that this was ample and sufficient to safeguard the people of the United States and maintain the integrity of this Government, why is it that at this late hour, after the American soldiers have conquered the greatest military power on this earth, men can now stand up and say that reenacting the national defense act of 1916 is not necessary to protect our Government and that it is insufficient?

Let me show you: A man who would stop to think, if he had read these hearings, would know that the War Department does not propose to handle a single one of those 500,000 men that was proposed to raise in the Army appropriation bill except in this country, and all of this nonsensical talk about sending these men across the ocean and bringing back some that are over there now has no operation or effect, nor should it have, in the mind of any man who has studied that bill for a moment. I was against that big Army of 510,000 men and 29,000 officers, and our fight has brought this substitute of 175,000 men before you. The truth of the matter is that the War Department was after fixing a permanent establishment of 510,000 enlisted men and 29,000 officers on this country. You have now an opportunity to reestablish the Regular Army, and if we fail to do it we will not be true to this country. You have the chance right now to put into force and operation a bill giving us a force that was sufficient to take care of our Republic at the time when we were actually threatened with war by Mexico, a little Government below the border, and which was actually the only force we had when we entered the war with Germany.

And yet men oppose it and say that you should have a greater force than you had then. If gentlemen really want an Army sufficient to take care of this country, if you really want a Military Establishment in keeping with our Government you will support this bill. Gentlemen talk about having an Army of 510,000 men to meet an emergency. What emergency is it that you want to meet, when both branches of Congress voted almost solidly to place on the statute books the law that now has in France nearly 2,000,000 men and raised an Army in this country of which there are nearly three-quarters of a million men now under arms, all of whom can be held by the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army, until four months after the proclamation of peace?

Let us pass this bill and immediately hitch it on to our Army appropriation bill. Then our country will be secure and our people satisfied that we have protected the country amply without fastening on to them the heavy burden of a great Military Establishment for peace times. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, to strike out the word "made" and to insert at the end of the amendment the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment, which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD offers the following amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: In the second last line of the amendment strike out the word "made" and add the following proviso:

"Provided further, That any person so enlisting shall not be required to serve with the reserves for any additional period under such enlistment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DECKER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order just at present. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Add at the end of the amendment as amended the following:

"Provided further, That no enlistment for the one-year period shall take place other than in the United States."

Mr. DENT. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. DYER. I am sure it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the point of order disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order, which is the decision of the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. DYER. It is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, we have just read in the papers that United States Senator OWEN has returned from France, and he tells us that the condition of the American soldiers in France is very bad. He tells us that the American people do not realize the condition of the American soldiers in France to-day not only in the disgraceful camp at Brest but in other places. Now, if we permit enlistments in France for this one-year period you will find that the men over there will enlist against their own wishes and against their own desires, because of the persuasiveness of officers in the Army in France and because they believe that they may get out of some of the hell-hole camps that they are in and get into better camps. We ought to enlist in this country the Army that we need over there for this one-year service. Here the men can use their own judgment freely and do what they desire. Our ships must go over to France to bring back the men who are there, and these men enlisted here can go from here in those same ships to take their places, if need be. Personally I am opposed to another American soldier going to France or to Europe. I am in favor of bringing those back who are over there, and I am in favor of bringing all back within the time limited by law, four months after the proclamation of peace by the President. I want to see them back here, and if you adopt my amendment it will prevent the keeping of many men in France who want to come home and who ought to come home, instead of staying there for another one-year period.

Mr. PLATT. Has the gentleman seen the statement that 200,000 of our men in France want to stay there?

Mr. DYER. I have not seen it and I do not believe it. I think it is more of the false information that has been perverted and spread over this country by officers and others who are anxious to maintain a big Army, in order that we may continue to have upon our rolls five generals and thousands of major generals and brigadier generals who, when we reduce the Army in accordance with this resolution, will have to go back to their former rank.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How many brigadier generals were provided for in the bill the gentleman introduced to increase the Medical Department? [Laughter.]

Mr. DYER. The Medical Department is one of the departments that has given most efficient service. [Applause.] Not only that, but my bill provided for officers according to the strength of the Army. Not only did my bill provide for what we ought to have, but the Senate put it on the military appropriation bill of last year, and we enacted it into law.

My bill, and the one referred to by the gentleman from Vermont, provided as follows:

That hereafter the commissioned officers of the Medical Corps and of the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army on active duty shall be distributed in the several grades in the same ratios heretofore established by law in the Medical Corps of the United States Navy.

The Surgeon General shall have authority to designate as "consultants" officers of either corps and relieve them as the interests of the service may require.

Here is what Congress enacted into law last July as an amendment to the military appropriation bill:

Increase in Medical Department: That the Medical Department of the Regular Army be, and is hereby, increased by one Assistant Surgeon General, for service abroad during the present war, who shall have the rank of major general, and two Assistant Surgeon Generals, who shall have the rank of brigadier general, all of whom shall be appointed from the Medical Corps of the Regular Army.

That the President may nominate and appoint in the Medical Department of the National Army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the Medical Corps of the Regular Army not to exceed two major generals and four brigadier generals.

That the commissioned officers of the Medical Corps of the Regular Army, none of whom shall have rank above that of colonel, shall be proportionately distributed in the several grades, as now provided by law.

That the commissioned officers of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Regular Army, none of whom shall have rank above that of colonel, shall be proportionately distributed in the several grades, as now provided by law for the Medical Corps of the Regular Army: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be held or construed so as to discharge any officer of the Regular Army or deprive him of a commission which he now holds therein.

This law did not provide sufficient general medical officers for the needs of the Army, and the President commissioned many more under the authority given him in the selective-service act. All of which has demonstrated that my bill should have been enacted into law in whole and not in part, as the above provision is.

For the first time we have many brigadier and major generals of the Medical Department. I include the editorial from the Missouri State Medical Journal, of St. Louis, Mo., of August, 1918, as regards this legislation and its need:

FIGHT FOR INCREASED RANK WON.

The long struggle of the medical profession for higher rank in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army has been won, although some concession was forced from us concerning the number of general officers. The provision increasing the rank of the Medical Reserve Corps officers was attached as an amendment to the military appropriation bill which was passed by Congress and on July 10 was signed by the President. It is therefore now a law.

This law provides for an increase in the Medical Department of the Regular Army by the addition of one Assistant Surgeon General, who shall have the rank of major general, for service abroad during the present war, and of two Assistant Surgeon Generals who shall have the rank of brigadier general. These officers must be appointed from the Medical Corps of the Regular Army. In addition to this increase in general officers the President is given the power to appoint two major generals and four brigadier generals in the Medical Department of the National Army. These officers will require confirmation by the Senate and must be drawn from the Medical Corps of the Regular Army.

For commissioned officers in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army the highest rank permitted is colonel, but the number of officers in the several grades from lieutenant to colonel will be the same as now provided by law for the Medical Corps of the Regular Army.

It required ceaseless efforts on the part of the medical profession and our friends in Congress to obtain the passage of this measure even in its abbreviated form, for it is said that the Secretary of War and the General Staff were uncompromisingly opposed to any legislation along the lines of the Owen-Dyer bill. However, the law gives the medical officers a very substantial increase in authority and will furnish the Medical Department of the Army an opportunity of demonstrating what scientific medicine can do in maintaining the physical well-being of the troops, because the orders of the medical officers will not now be so often pigeonholed or countermanded by a superior officer, especially one whose medical lore convinced him that because he did not take typhoid fever by drinking a cup of water from a condemned well the water must therefore be potable and would not infect the men in line. Senator OWEN and Congressman DYER, the latter one of Missouri's Representatives, deserve the thanks of the medical profession for their untiring efforts in securing the passage of this measure.

Mr. Chairman, as a further evidence of the need for legislation yet for the Medical Department of the Army let me call attention to a bill I now have pending, which I shall press for enactment into law at the earliest possible date. It is as follows:

A bill to amend sections 10 and 37 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and other purposes," approved June 3, 1916.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Medical Department of the Army shall consist of one Surgeon General with the rank of major general, who shall be chief of said department, assistant surgeon generals in the ratio of one-half of 1 per cent of the total number of officers of the Medical Department provided by law, the assistant surgeon generals to be equally distributed in the grades of major general and brigadier general of the Medical Corps, the Dental Corps, and the Veterinary Corps, authorized by law, the commissioned officers of which shall be citizens of the United States, the enlisted force of the Medical Department of the Army as now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That commissioned officers of the Medical Corps below the rank of brigadier general shall be proportionately distributed in the several grades as now provided by law for the Medical Corps of the Navy.

SEC. 3. That hereafter the President shall be authorized to fill any vacancy that may occur in the commissioned personnel of the permanent establishment of the Medical Department of the Army of the United States by selection from the medical officers of the United States Army of not less than one year's continuous active service: Provided further, That the selection shall be upon the efficiency rating and satisfactory examination of the officer; and where two or more officers are of equal rating, selection will favor the one of longest service in the United States Army, Volunteer Army, National Guard, Officers' Reserve Corps, or National Army: Provided further, That the officers so selected will be commissioned without loss of rank in the permanent establishment of the Medical Department of the Army of the United States, and such officers so commissioned shall be entitled to all pay, promotion, and allowances of officers of like rank in the permanent establishment of the Army of the United States, excepting that the rate of retirement pay shall be one-thirtieth of the present retirement pay as now prescribed by law for each year's service as enlisted man or commissioned officer, or the total of such services in the United States Army, Volunteer Army, National Guard, Officers' Reserve Corps, National Army, Dental Corps, Dental Reserve, or enlisted personnel in the Army or National Guard in any of the various departments of the Army of the United States: Provided, That at the age now prescribed by law for retirement an officer to receive retirement pay shall have not less than 15 years' service in any or all branches enumerated in this act: Provided further, That the provisions of this act shall in like manner govern the filling hereafter of all vacancies in the Dental Corps of the United States Army: Provided further, That the ratio of dental surgeons now and hereafter commissioned shall be two dental surgeons per thousand of enlisted strength of the Army of the United States: Provided further, That all laws or parts of laws, in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MANN. I move that all debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I was trying to get recognition for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. DECKER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on the bill and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that one more amendment may be offered.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can offer his amendment after the debate has closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DECKER: At the end of the amendment insert the following: "That the pay of the men so enlisted shall be the same as that now provided by law."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment of Mr. FIELDS as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 8, by striking out the word "herewith" and inserting the word "hereby."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 8, strike out the word "herewith" and insert in lieu thereof the word "hereby."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. HUMPHREYS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Mr. DECKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I offered and which was unanimously adopted be amended by adding the words "during the emergency," so that there will be no question that in case the emergency ceases before the end of the year men will get their pay during enlistment.

Mr. MANN. By the gentleman's amendment they will get pay during the term of enlistment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They will get it as it is, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DYER, Mr. BAER, and Mr. MCCULLOCH, by unanimous consent, were given leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

THE ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 15835, a bill making appropriations for the Army.

The motion of Mr. DENT was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose a point of order was pending, made by the gentleman from Mississippi, against the paragraph beginning on page 57.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order to the entire paragraph, and the same is sustained.

Mr. DENT. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Mississippi made the point of order to the paragraph beginning on page 7 and including page 58. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to be inserted after the word "legislative," on page 57, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 57, after the word "legislative," line 20, insert "it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, within the United States or Territories, possessions, waters, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to wear or display on or about his person any naval or military medal, badge, decoration, or regalia of the United States, or any medal, badge, decoration, or regalia so nearly resembling the same as to be calculated to deceive, or any ribbon or rosette pertaining to the same, unless such wearing or displaying thereof be duly authorized by the United States through its duly constituted authorities. Any person who violates the provisions of this paragraph shall upon conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $300 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman reserve the point of order for two minutes?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is drawn after consultation with the General Staff and has the concurrence of the General Staff——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Then it ought to be defeated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman reserve it for two minutes?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; that does not appeal to me at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MCCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, line 20, after the word "Legislative," add the following:

"Provided, That all men who enlisted in the Army for the period of the war and all men inducted into the Army under the so-called selective-service act and all officers commissioned for the period of the war shall be discharged not later than July 1, 1919: Provided further, That any such soldier shall be immediately discharged upon the filing of an application with his immediate commanding officer, whether he be at present in service overseas or within the United States: Provided further, That when any soldier is discharged upon the filing of an application he shall be furnished transportation from the point where he is released to the point of his enlistment or induction and shall continue to receive the same pay and allowance as now provided by law: Provided further, That all such men discharged under the foregoing provisions shall be granted the opportunity of enlisting in the volunteer army under the provisions of this section until the voluntary enlistments provided for herein shall have been filled and all such soldiers shall be advised by their commanding officer of their rights and that such enlistment in the volunteer army is not compulsory but voluntary."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Officers of the emergency Army appointed to the Officers' Reserve Corps may be appointed therein, in the grade held by them in the emergency, or higher grade as the Secretary of War may direct: Provided, That so far as the same relates to the Army of the United States and the War Department, "An act to authorize the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and a more efficient concentration of the Government," approved May 30, 1918, is hereby repealed.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard?

Mr. DENT. It is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Within the authorized strength herein provided for, the President shall form or continue such corps, including the construction corps, field or tactical units, or organizations as he shall deem necessary, to be organized as he may prescribe: Provided further, That the foregoing provision relative to the organization and strength of the Army be, and the same hereby is, declared to be temporary, and the same shall go into effect not earlier than the 1st day of July, 1919, and expire not later than the 30th day of June, 1920, except that the provision relating to voluntary enlistments shall become effective upon the approval of this act: Provided, That the Boughton Memorial Association, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and is hereby, authorized to erect and maintain a suitable building, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, in and upon the United States military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., the plans of such building to be first approved, and to be constructed in such location as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the use of such portion of the ground floor of said building as may be necessary shall be given to the Post Office Department of the United States, free of charge, for the post-office service of the reservation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Frank Barber, a first lieutenant of the Dorset Regiment of Infantry of the British Army, who lost the sight of both eyes and became totally blind by reason of a premature explosion on February 14, 1918, while acting as an instructor of United States troops at Camp Wheeler, Ga., as compensation for disability resulting therefrom, such sums of money as by the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," is provided to be paid as compensation for disability to an injured person who has lost both eyes or become totally blind from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States; and such compensation shall be payable and be paid as of and from the 14th day of February, 1918, and under and according to the terms, conditions, and basis of computation in said act provided.

Mr. WISE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. I am familiar with the several amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished the reading of the paragraph. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Construction Corps of the Army should be made permanent. This division can and will close out all pending construction contract claims within a period of six months, otherwise claims on war contracts against the Government will be pending for 10 years. It is economically, scientifically, and equitably sound for the Congress to continue and make permanent the Construction Division of the Army. There is clearly but one side to this question. The provisions of H. R. 15835, on page 59, second paragraph, in lines 11 to 13, inclusive, only, while not altogether sufficient, should be permanent.

Early in April, 1917, when Congress and the War College decided hurriedly to organize the student officers' training camps, it was discovered that it would be necessary to embark on a large construction program incident to the providing of the necessary facilities for the training required. The Quartermaster General's office, working through the camp quartermasters of the various posts in question, with its evident and known inefficiency to meet the emergency, undertook this construction, and the student officers' training camps were all designed to care for approximately 3,000 men each. The difficulties encountered during April and the early days of May in constructing these small-size camps in large numbers brought before the military authorities of the United States in a forcible manner the necessity for some special organization to construct and complete on time the 32 cantonments and National Guard training camps which would be required to properly house and train the men necessary to complete the first allotment of men for the Army to be officered by the officers graduated from the first officers' training camps.

About the middle of May, 1917, Brig. Gen. I. W. Littell was assigned the task of organizing what is known as the Construction Division of the Army. This he did efficiently and with dispatch, and the result was construction on nearly all the vast camps now in use in the United States was begun between June 15, 1917, and July 5, 1917. The completion date for the camps was set at September 5, 1917, allowing a little over two months' time for the construction of 32 cities, with complete facilities, designed for the housing of 50,000 men. In addition to the above-named camps the construction of various additional projects, such as terminals, port facilities, and warehouses, was undertaken. To do this work promptly and on time it was found that there were no men available in the Army of the United States who possessed sufficient technical and practical training which would fit them for the vast construction projects about to be undertaken, and in order to provide the necessary personnel to carry on this work Brig. Gen. Littell called on the various engineering societies to furnish and recommend the men to handle the projects and do the work, using a few reserve officers of the Quartermaster Corps and officers commissioned as reserve officers in the Corps of Engineers for the purpose, the Chief of Engineers and the Quartermaster General approving the necessary commissions for men trained in their civilian life to handle this work. It may be of interest to know that the greater percentage of the Construction Division then organized was composed of civilian engineers drawn in for the purpose and placed in positions of great responsibility and trust and in ranks ranging from first lieutenancies to majorities, and every one of them entered the service of the United States Army at a great personal sacrifice.

Under the able leadership of Gen. Littell and his staff the cantonments and camps were completed on time and Provost Marshal Gen. Crowder was enabled to send to the camps the first draft contingents promptly on time. This state of affairs can be attributed primarily to the efficiency of the Construction Division and its chief and to the technical and practical knowledge brought into the service by the men called to do the work. Approximately December 15, 1917, after the construction of the various camps and facilities handled by the Construction Division was practically complete in every respect, the work was then turned over to the various post and camp quartermasters in addition to their other duties, and they were directed from time to time to carry on the various new construction projects authorized for their camps. This was the greatest mistake ever made by the War Department, as it had the effect of practically stopping all construction work, due to the fact that the camp quartermasters were already overloaded with their duties and primarily to the fact that they did not possess the necessary technical or practical training to carry on the work and handle large organizations of civilian personnel.

About the middle of January, 1918, the War Department realized that with the volume of construction work being authorized and ordered, in order to complete it expeditiously and in an economical manner it would be necessary to reorganize the Construction Division, and Col. R. C. Marshall, jr., now brigadier general, Chief of the Construction Division, was assigned the task of hurriedly reorganizing the Construction Division and sending out the necessary constructing quartermasters to the various projects to carry on the work. In view of the fact that the apparent demobilization of the Construction Division in December, 1917, appeared to be permanent, the greater part of the trained field forces of the Construction Division was assigned to other duties and a large number of them went to France. It is easy to realize the immensity of the task imposed on Gen. Marshall when he was called upon to again build up an organization to handle the work due to the fact that a large percentage of the available engineers with experience had already been placed in service and assigned elsewhere. There are no words at my command that could properly express the efficiency, ability, and speed with which Gen. Marshall accomplished this task. It is a matter of history that it was accomplished and on time.

It is a well-known fact that the Construction Division of the Army at all times has maintained its prestige, accomplished all of its tasks assigned on time in a creditable manner, and it is clear that the entire credit of assembling the American Expeditionary Forces in France six months ahead of schedule is due to the speed maintained by the Construction Division in providing the necessary housing and training facilities on time in 1917. This division has never been investigated, has never been the target of adverse criticism, has overcome apparently insurmountable difficulties with ease and dispatch, and has accomplished a task in the past 18 months that makes the construction of the Panama Canal look very insignificant in the light of the records established by this branch of the service.

It would be impossible to cover fully the performance of the Construction Division or adequately outline its achievements; neither would it be possible to point out any one salient fact that stood out before its fellows that would entitle any one particular man to special commendation, as each and every one of them worked to a common end and adopted as their motto the word "speed," and maintained that speed continuously until the day the armistice was signed.

The value of the machinery of the Construction Division was clearly demonstrated in the past influenza epidemic when every available man of the Construction Division—civilian, commissioned, and enlisted—was placed at the disposal of the camp and hospital authorities and overnight constructed the necessary temporary facilities at the various hospitals throughout the country to care for the tremendous number of cases and patients involved, and it is clear that the prompt and efficient action of the Construction Division, both in Washington and in the field, is responsible for the saving of many thousands of lives which would otherwise have been lost on account of the lack of adequate facilities for the care of the patients.

The experience of the present war has taught the necessity and need for the Construction Division, composed primarily of construction men technically, practically, and previously qualified to carry on the work. Should the argument be brought to bear that there would be no place for this organization to operate in times of peace, I would like to point out the fact that at the present time the Construction Division is not only handling all new construction, but are also carrying out all maintenance and repair programs and operating the utilities and city administration at all the large camps. The peace-time organization of the Construction Division, if authorized by Congress, could be used advantageously for this purpose and would provide the necessary nucleus of trained men which could be expanded at a moment's notice to provide a corps able to cope with any construction or emergency problems that might be brought to bear should the United States at any future time be forced into another war.

Considerable space has been devoted in the press to the achievements of the Marine Corps, the Navy, the Army, the service of supply, and other branches of the service, but the Construction Division of the Army has never sought publicity and has really been too busy for the past 18 months to design an insignia emblematic of the division, and all they have succeeded in doing to date has been to adopt the motto "Speed," and maintain that speed through the past 18 months, and have served willingly and cheerfully on duties within the boundaries of the United States, although the greater majority of the officers on this work volunteered and enlisted and desired to go overseas.

It is proposed by the General Staff that several new staff corps be provided for, namely, the finance department, transportation corps, motor transport corps, air service, tank corps, and the general staff corps, and it is apparently the idea to allow the Corps of Engineers and the Quartermasters Corps to handle the Army construction. Army construction, both in time of peace and in time of war, is sufficiently important to the general public to provide a staff corps especially trained for the purpose and combine all construction undertaken by the War Department under one branch of the service, and should this proposition meet with the approval of Congress I have no doubt that sufficient highly trained and specialized personnel can be obtained from officers and men now on duty with the Construction Division to complete the peace-time organization of this branch.

The reorganization of the services of the Construction Division by providing for a permanent construction organization in the Regular Army of the United States will meet with the unqualified approval of all the engineering societies of this country and all engineers who have played such an important part in the construction program of the Army since its origin in April, 1917.

Too much credit can not be given the Construction Corps, and I am confident that every Member of this House who carefully studies the record of facts will cordially support the legislation making this division permanent. You will do this in the interest of the taxpayer, in the interest of good business, in the interest of efficient government, and in the interest of effective and expeditious service to our country both in time of peace and time of war. The brilliant record of this division of the Army is irrefutable and convincing. They are recruited from civil life and have proper contempt for Army red-tape delays and well-known inefficiency. This corps is the one capable, energetic, progressive, and efficient division of the Army that does the job, and does it well.

By unanimous consent Mr. FLOOD and Mr. FREAR were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, respecting the paragraph which went out on the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]—and I refer to the last paragraph which was read—will the gentleman from Tennessee reserve his point of order on the provision for the Boughton Memorial Association?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, that is within the paragraph and the point of order went to the whole paragraph. I make the point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. I desire to inquire whether the gentleman would exclude from the point of order the provision respecting Frank Barber, who was made blind by an explosion——

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that if he desires to raise that question he can do it by offering that as a separate amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of the appropriations in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch, or other time-measuring device, a time study of any such employee between the starting and completing thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. This applies to any employee of the United States Government and is not restricted to the members of the Army. It is not germane.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, the point of order on this paragraph has been debated time and time again, and the Chair has always overruled the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey make the point of order?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 61, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 6 and ending with line 18, both lines inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 24, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, at the end of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL offers an amendment on page 61, after line 18, to insert the following as a new paragraph:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, required to furnish to the adjutant general of each State, or to the officer thereof exercising corresponding functions, after requisition therefor, the name, home address, and rank attained of the men of such State who were mustered into the service of the United States during the war between the United States and the German Empire and its allies."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order; I make the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to insert a letter written by the Secretary of War in reference to the matter that just came up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War has written a letter to me explaining at length his views in regard to the taking of copies of the records, and so forth, of the men who are drafted, and instead of having the letter read—it is quite long—I ask unanimous consent to put it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 11, 1919.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: I am in receipt of your letter of February 3 transmitting a copy of the resolution adopted by the senate and assembly of the State of New York requesting that authority be given by the War Department to allow to remain in the State of New York under proper supervision such records as will furnish information for the preparation of a list of its citizens who have been inducted into the Federal service through the medium of the draft law, and who have been mustered into the service of the United States during the war between the United States and the German Empire and its allies, and to permit authorized agents of the State of New York to make extracts from these records.

In a telegram dated December 6, 1918, the Provost Marshal General authorized State and local historical societies, the American Red Cross, and like societies which are interested and are assisting in the work of helping returned soldiers to find employment and of locating relatives of deceased soldiers whose bodies are to be returned to this country, upon proper permit from the Provost Marshal General, to make copies of such information concerning registrants inducted into the military service as is available from the duplicate registration cards of the said registrants, which cards are in the possession of local boards.

Upon the special requests of the president pro tempore of the New York State senate and of the speaker of the New York State assembly the Provost Marshal General on January 29 authorized agents of that State to examine the records in the office of the adjutant general of New York and of the New York local boards for the purpose of obtaining all available information relative to New York registrants inducted into military service. Under this permit it is possible for the authorized agents of the State of New York to secure from the records of the local boards all information proposed to be secured by the resolution of the senate and assembly of that State, except the information concerning the assignment and discharge of inducted men and the information in respect to men who were mustered into the military service other than through the process of the draft. Because of the confidential character of the information contained in questionnaires, authority for access to local board records had previously been restricted.

The information contained in the records of the selective-service system is limited to the steps taken to place registrants in the military service through the process of induction. The history of registrants after their arrival at camp and of all men who enlisted can only be obtained from the records of The Adjutant General of the Army. To provide the information requested in the resolution of the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York it would, therefore, be necessary to supplement the selective-service records by data taken from the Army records.

The records of the selective-service system have a vital relationship to the records of this department, especially as they apply to a proper and just administration of the war-risk insurance act, the future pension laws of the country, and the charges of desertion and delinquency which involve the honor of thousands of registrants. It is believed that draft records can be preserved with greater security and economy by bringing them together under a single custodian. Under the plan now being pursued it is expected that within a few weeks the draft records will be brought to the National Capital and permanently filed with The Adjutant General of the Army.

I am deeply impressed with the laudable interest of the various States in their returning soldiers and assure you of the desire of this department to cooperate in fostering that interest. Inasmuch, however, as the selective-service records contain only a part of the information requested by the New York authorities, I feel that the advantage to be gained by retaining the State draft records for an indefinite period is outweighed by the importance of promptly accomplishing their final filing. Permit me, therefore, to suggest that the State of New York avail itself of the authority already granted by the Provost Marshal General to secure from the duplicate registration cards in the possession of local boards the information available from these records, which information can later be supplemented from the records of The Adjutant General of the Army in so far as they relate to the assignment and discharge of the inducted men and to the entire record of men who enlisted for military service.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON of Virginia: After line 18, on page 61, insert the following: "That all commissioned officers of the Army responsible for public funds or public property intrusted to their custody since April 6, 1917, who have been or may hereafter be honorably discharged, who may be called upon to travel for the purpose of making explanation concerning their accounts or who may be called upon to testify concerning the same, shall be entitled to a per diem compensation equivalent to the per diem salary of the rank they held in the Army at the time they were discharged, and mileage as allowed to officers of the Army."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, at the end of line 18, insert:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Frank Barber, a first lieutenant of the Dorset Regiment of Infantry of the British Army, who lost the sight of both eyes and became totally blind by reason of a premature explosion on February 14, 1918, while acting as an instructor of United States troops at Camp Wheeler, Ga., as compensation for disability resulting therefrom, such sums of money as by the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes,' is provided to be paid as compensation for disability to an injured person who has lost both eyes or become totally blind from causes occurring in the line of duty in the service of the United States; and such compensation shall be payable and be paid as of and from the 14th day of February, 1918, and under and according to the terms, conditions, and basis of computation in said act provided."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I hope——

Mr. RAYBURN. This has been up here once before, and I am not going to stand for people coming under this act who are not citizens of the United States, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 61, line 18, insert as a new paragraph:

"Provided, That no part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government arsenals of the United States for a sum less than they can be purchased or procured otherwise."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order; I make the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not subject to the point of order. It is clearly within the Holman rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's observation does not make it so.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. But I have a right to be heard. If it can be manufactured for less and save money to the Government that is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this amendment is in order, and the question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for the Secretary of War to provide by regulations or otherwise for any distinctive stripe or chevron of any kind indicating service overseas or in the United States, to be worn upon the uniform of any officer or enlisted man in the service of the United States, and any regulation heretofore made upon this subject is hereby invalidated.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and which has already been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman can not do it while a point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been sustained.

Mr. TILLMAN. The amendment is on the Clerk's desk. It has already been printed in the RECORD. I wish to offer an amendment as a new section, to take the place of the paragraph just stricken out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILLMAN: Page 61, in lieu of lines 19 to 25, inclusive, striken out on a point of order, insert:

"That no part of the funds appropriated in this act shall be available unless the Secretary of War shall continue in force the regulations made providing for the distinctive stripe or chevron indicating service overseas, and he shall invalidate all orders and regulations requiring officers and soldiers who were deprived of the privilege of overseas service from wearing the distinctive stripe or chevron now required."

Mr. MADDEN. I make a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman reserve it for a minute?

Mr MADDEN. No.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I have already made it.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said he had made the point of order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thought he withdrew it.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. It is clearly subject to a point of order. It is not a limitation.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think there is no objection to it. It is a limitation on the appropriation bill, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. It starts out as a limitation and then instructs the Secretary of War what to do. It is clearly legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks it can be construed as a limitation.

Mr. TILLMAN. It strikes me that my amendment is somewhat in the nature of a limitation on the appropriation. At any rate I had hoped the point of order would not be made. This amendment will settle the controversy satisfactorily.

Mr. Chairman, let me present this matter at some length. The military authorities have provided by order that overseas troops shall wear gold service stripes, showing the length of service over there and indicating wounds received in battle, while soldiers that remained on this side must wear white stripes. Evidently the officers serving on this side are not satisfied with these distinctive stripes and have, I assume, caused the Committee on Military Affairs to insert a paragraph in the bill to abolish all distinctive service stripes or chevrons. The original paragraph is clearly subject to a point of order and will go out if the point is made, and I shall make the point of order myself if the amendment which I propose is not accepted and adopted.

My amendment in effect permits troops who have had service overseas to wear the gold chevrons prescribed by the War Department, but leaves it optional as to wearing the white chevrons by troops who were denied the honor and privilege of serving abroad.

Certainly we should not consent to the provision in the bill recommended and reported by the Committee on Military Affairs abolishing all distinctive markings.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], in advocating this proposition, said:

> The committee has seen fit to write into the proposed legislation a provision to remove all service chevrons. We have seen a great many men walking our streets with silver chevrons and with gold chevrons. We hear a great deal of talk in this country about "democracy." All soldiers of the Republic, whether they were fortunate enough to go to France or whether they performed their duty in this country, should be treated alike.

Did you ever hear of a more amazing plea for democracy than this? Many crimes are committed in the name of liberty, and now we have a Member proposing to commit a crime in the name of democracy. The charge is often made that republics are ungrateful. That charge will be proven if the proposition advocated by the gentleman from California is written into the law. Treat everybody alike? How unjust, how discriminating, how undemocratic that would be. That doctrine, carried to its logical conclusion, would mean no service ribbons, no gold chevrons, no medals, no honorable mention, no wound stripes. How democratic it would be to call out on the carpet the Members of this House who did real fighting overseas, the gentleman from Ohio, Capt. HEINTZ; the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON; and the gentleman from New York, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and say to them, "Soldiers, in the name of democracy we strip you of your hard-won badges of honorable service in battle because forsooth some sensitive official soul, some swivel-chair captain, major, or colonel, who has been gallantly holding a much-assaulted sector here in Washington these bloody months since April, 1917, objects to the sight of Sam Brown belts, foreign-service caps, and chevrons of gold." Those trappings are so discriminating. Brave as these official, intrepid warriors are who have held the critical Washington front from repeated Hun assault from April 7, 1917, to November 11, 1918, they actually turn as pale as their lily-white service stripes when they see a husky private who fought at Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel salient, and Argonne Forest stride by them on the sidewalk.

If these gentlemen object to wearing the silver service chevrons denoting service on this side they need not wear them if my amendment is adopted; but in the name of justice do not deny to the boy who braved the submarine, who fought the Hun in the air, who grappled with him in the narrow trenches where flowed the blood of the brave, who met him face to face in no man's land—do not strip him of the golden insignia which is his coveted badge of courage that he honorably wears and should continue to wear, although objected to by the gentleman from California and the bold, local knights of the garter, the booted and spurred captains and majors and colonels who advanced toward the insolent foe no farther than the bloody salient of Dupont Circle northwest.

Yes; in the name of democracy strip these heroes of all that will show that they marched and fought and bled in Italy, France, and Belgium. Palsied be the hand of any man who would reach out an envious finger to pluck from the coat sleeve of the humblest private the golden badge of glory earned by him in the hard service of his country on the shell-gashed hills and valleys of beautiful France.

I recall that when the persecuted and innocent Dreyfus was declared guilty through the unholy machinations of a corrupt military clique in France that they took from him his sword, broke it in two, and cast the pieces at his feet, which action was taken to emphasize his disgrace. To strip from the uniform of our returning fighters their saffron badges of honor would be on a level with the unmerited humiliation visited upon Capt. Dreyfus, condemned alike by fair men in both military and civil circles throughout the world.

The gentleman from California, arguing further in support of his peculiar position, gave utterance to the following statement:

> I am told that in some of the demobilizing camps the young men who come back from the other side will not salute an officer who has the silver chevrons.

Horrible! Shades of the great captain, of Hannibal, of Pompey, and of Charlemagne. Send for the judge advocate at once, let him polish his spurs, grind his bayonet, sharpen his maiden sword, and condemn without benefit of clergy and execute at once this presumptuous and insubordinate varlet!

It is barely possible, of course, that the young man who failed to salute the officer who wore silver chevrons may have lost an eye in the fighting around Metz and may not have seen the officer mentioned by the gentleman from California; and it may be, and it is not such a grave crime, that the situation referred to was similar to the one described in the third scene of the first part of Shakespeare's King Henry the Fourth. Now, the gentleman from California is reported to be a distinguished Shakespearean scholar; indeed, it is said that he was at one time a popular and talented interpreter of the great master's lines on the stage. I wonder if Hotspur was not discussing, in the scene mentioned, an occurrence in some respects descriptive of the surroundings complained of in the words last quoted from the speech of the gentleman from California. I offer it here:

> HOTSPUR: My Liege, I did deny no prisoners; but I remember when the fight was done, when I was dry with rage and extreme toil, breathless and faint, and leaning on my sword, came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dressed, fresh as a bridegroom, and his chin, new reaped, showed like a stubble land at harvest home; he was perfumed like a milliner, and betwixt his finger and his thumb he held a pouncet box, which ever and anon he gave his nose, and took it away again, who therewith, angry, when it next came there, took it in snuff, and still he smiled and talked; and as the soldiers bore dead bodies by, he called them untaught knaves, unmannerly to bring a sloven, unhandsome corse betwixt the wind and his nobility. With many holiday and lady terms he questioned me; among the rest demanding my prisoners in your majesty's behalf. I then, all smarting, my wounds being cold, to be so pestered with a popinjay, out of my grief and my impatience answered neglectfully, I know not what, he should or should not, for he made me mad to see him shine so brisk and smell so sweet, and talk so like waiting gentlewoman of guns and drums and wounds—God save the mark! And telling me the sovereignst thing on earth was parmaceti for an inward bruise, and that it was great pity, and so it was, this villainous saltpeter should be digged out of the bowels of the harmless earth, which many a good, tall fellow had destroyed so cowardly; and but for these vile guns he would himself have been a soldier. This bald, unjointed chat of his, my Lord, I answered indirectly as I said; and I beseech you, let not his report come current for an accusation betwixt my love and your high majesty.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

If the ideas of the gentleman from California prevail the Volunteers will suffer more than will the man who was selected by the draft. Many young men volunteered and fought with the English and French during the entire war, and many volunteered in the spring of 1917 and did not wait to be conscripted, but went to the front at the earliest possible moment. We have not heard much praise lavished upon these volunteers and pioneers; rather more in the way of sympathy and eulogy has been offered the drafted soldier, but let us honor these volunteers as well as the larger numbers of drafted men, and dishonor neither. I beg to call your attention to the few lines below, written by a friend of the volunteers, and at the same time a friend of the selected soldier, but who is one who believes in democracy and thinks every soldier should have his dues, both in the way of praise and chevrons:

ONLY A VOLUNTEER.

Why didn't I wait to be drafted
And led to the train with a band;
Why did I go in so early,
O, why did I hold up my hand?
Why didn't I wait for the banquet,
Why didn't I wait to be cheered,
For the drafted men got all the credit,
While I only volunteered?
And nobody gave me a banquet,
And nobody said a kind word;
The grind of the wheels of the engine
Was all the good-by that I heard.
Then off to a camp I was hustled,
Trained for near half a year,
And, then, in the shuffle forgotten,
I was only a volunteer.

And maybe some day in the future,
When my little boy sits on my knee,
And asks what I did in the conflict,
And his little eyes look up at me,
I'll have to look back, as I'm blushing,
To the eyes that so trustingly peer,
And tell him I missed being drafted.
And my gold service stripes taken from me,
As I was only a volunteer.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Page 61, line 18, after the word "plant," strike out the paragraph (lines 19 to 25, inclusive) and insert:

"That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of War to provide by regulations or otherwise a distinctive stripe, bar, or chevron indicating service overseas or in the United States, which may be worn upon the uniform of any officer or enlisted man in the service of the United States, but the wearing of any such stripe, bar, or chevron shall hereafter be optional with such officer or enlisted man.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order? [Cries of "Regular order."]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to pass on the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

From and after the passage of this act, the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to promote all officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men who have been recommended for promotion for service of a special meritorious character, which recommendations have been approved by competent military authority, to the grade and rank to which they were respectively recommended and such recommendations approved prior to November 11, 1918. That in the event any such officer or enlisted man has been honorably separated from the service he shall be commissioned in the reserve, with the grade and rank to which he was recommended for promotion.

Mr. KING and Mr. HUMPHREYS made a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is made by a number of gentlemen. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 61, after line 18, insert as a new section the following:

"That in cases where a commissioned officer or an enlisted man of the Army has been recommended for promotion by his superior or superiors in rank in the service and has not been so promoted before he shall have been separated from such service, either by resignation or by honorable discharge, the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed under the regulations now fixed to bestow upon such officer or enlisted man the rank to which the officer or enlisted man would be entitled were the recommendations of his superior officer or officers accepted and carried out.

"SEC. 2. That all acts inconsistent with this act be, and are hereby, repealed."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is made by the gentleman from Alabama. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment as a new section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEARNS: Page 61, after line 18, insert:

"Retired enlisted men of the Regular Army who were called to active service by the War Department during the war with Germany and commissioned in the armies of the United States, and who will again revert to a retired status when their services shall no longer be required, shall be allowed to retain the rank held by them when mustered out or discharged from active service and given the pay of a first lieutenant on the retired list: Provided, That muster out or discharge was not due to incompetence or misconduct."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is made on the amendment. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 9, line 6, and offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent. That was the order of the House.

Mr. DENT. Then I ask to return at this particular time.

Mr. MANN. That was the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to the page indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Alabama that a point of order was reserved to that paragraph; a point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]; the paragraph commencing with "Air Service," on page 9.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the intention of the chairman of the committee, it is to have this matter stricken out and substitue a new paragraph?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make a point of order on the paragraph as carried in the bill, in order to bring it to a focus.

Mr. DENT. I move to strike out. I concede it is subject to a point of order. I offer this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin state to the Chair the matter to which the point of order was reserved? It begins on page 9.

Mr. STAFFORD. The whole paragraph, beginning on page 9, from line 7 down to and including line 16, on page 11.

Mr. DENT. I concede that. I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Alabama if his amendment is just designed to replace the matter stricken out, or does it go further? There is some matter that is still left in this paragraph.

Mr. DENT. It is intended to take the place of that particular part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Of the matter stricken out?

Mr. MANN. Does it cover the matter of production?

Mr. DENT. It combines both of them in one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that the matter beginning on page 11, "Bureau of Aircraft Production," has not been stricken out. Does the gentleman propose that that shall remain in the bill?

Mr. DENT. I move to strike it out.

Mr. MANN. It has not been read yet.

The CHAIRMAN. It has never been read. The reservation of the gentleman only went down to line 17, page 11.

Mr. MANN. It has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that. It is now in the bill and must be dealt with.

Mr. DENT. That is entirely proper. I ask unanimous consent that that be stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the matter in the bill beginning with line 17, on page 11, down to line 11, on page 15, may be stricken from the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Now the gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 9, line 6, to page 15, line 10, in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"AIR SERVICE.

"Creating, maintaining, and operating at established flying schools, course of instruction for aviation students, including cost of equipment, and supplies necessary for instruction and subsistence of students, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, and instruments and materials for theoretical and practical instruction at aviation schools; purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs made by aerial observers; to maintain and replace the equipment of organizations already in service; equipment, maintenance, and operation of aviation stations, balloon schools, fields for testing and experimental work; procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, telephones, telegraphs, and sewerage; purchase of stoves and other cooking and heating apparatus, kitchen and table ware, and furniture and equipment for kitchens, mess halls, officers' quarters, barracks, hospitals, and other buildings, screens, lockers, refrigerators, and all other equipment; salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as may be necessary; experimental investigation, and purchase and development of new types of aircraft, and aviation engines; purchase, manufacture, maintenance, repair, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith.

"And also for the purchase or manufacture and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes, $15,000,000: Provided, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property, resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad, may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post, and approved by the Director of Military Aeronautics: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $150,000."

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. The gentleman from Alabama will remember that I discussed this matter with him. It is to insert between the word "established" and the word "schools" the word "Army," so that Government money can only be used in established Army flying schools, and not in the Wright and Curtiss and other private flying schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CURRY of California: In line 1, of the Dent amendment, after the word "established" insert the word "Army."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: At the end of the paragraph insert: "That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless all former civilian flying instructors who were dismissed on or about December 31, 1918, shall be reinstated on application to their former positions as from the date of such dismissal up to and including June 30, 1919: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to apply to any civilian flying instructor dismissed prior to December 31, 1918, for misconduct or incompetency."

Mr. DENT. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the amendment is subject to a point of order. It is worded similarly to the amendment that we adopted in the legislative appropriation bill, to which the point of order was raised and overruled.

I want to tell you something about these civilian instructors. These young men who knew how to fly were called in when we declared war and when we needed instructors. Some of them did not have the educational requirements, others for other reasons were not commissioned, but they instructed our fliers. A good many were not commissioned in order to keep them as instructors all of the time. They were the first instructors, and also instructed 90 per cent of the fliers that we turned out on this side. They could not take out insurance, because of their profession. Several of them were killed. Those who remain alive have been working eight hours a day for 18 months training men to fly. They are all experienced and excellent fliers. Now, the flying officers of high rank who received 50 per cent additional flying pay did very little, if any, of the instruction. These boys were taken on and were promised to be kept on. At the time of the armistice they were led to believe that they would be kept on until June 30, 1919. Now they have been turned loose. On December 18 telegraphic instructions were sent dismissing all of them, to take effect December 31, 1918. I saw the Secretary of War about it. I saw Gen Menoher about it, and they all admitted the justice of the claims of these boys, but no one seemed able or willing to do anything. The Secretary said he would not object to their reinstatement if there was work for them to do.

Mr. MADDEN. How many of them are there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I should say between 40 and 50. They did all the training. They were fliers when we declared war. Everybody seems to admit the justice of their claims and that they should be taken care of up to June 30, but no one seems to be able to reinstate them. We must find work for them until June 30.

I know there is work for these men to do. They can be used at the various flying fields. We have a great deal of testing to do, and they may replace boys who are anxious to get out and get home. I saw a telegram from one field in Texas where at least five of these boys could be used. There is plenty of work for these men if they are reinstated. They are not asking for charity. I want to make that clear. They have earned every cent they get, and they will earn their pay up to June 30. I hope the chairman will accept the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Is it not true that the men, consisting of 50, initiated all the flying service in the United States, and the only men in the Aviation Service that have not received extra pay and have not received the best treatment?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is partially true, and no glory attaches to the hard work.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A few days ago the following amendment was held in order on appeal:

Provided, That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless all former Government employees who resigned to enter the military service in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions appropriated for herein if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

The Chair does not think that anyone in this House with the utmost power, most refined and subtle discrimination can perceive any difference between that amendment and the one under consideration. The Chair feels constrained to follow the ruling in that case, and holds that this amendment is in order. The Chair overrules the point of order and the question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new paragraph as follows:

"From and after the passage of this act, the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to promote all officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men who have been recommended for promotion for service of a special meritorious character, which recommendations have been approved by competent military authority, to the grade and rank to which they were respectively recommended. That in the event any such officer or enlisted man has been honorably separated from the service he shall be commissioned in the reserve, with the grade and rank to which he was recommended for promotion, or if he shall not desire a commission in the reserve he shall receive a commission in the rank to which he was recommended.

"Each officer or enlisted man so commissioned shall receive pay in the increased rank from the day of recommendation to the day of discharge. The commission so issued to officers and enlisted men after the date of honorable separation from the service shall not be in force or effect after the date of such separation and shall contain a provision to that effect."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order on the amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 24, page 15, insert:

"Pay of officers, National Guard, $100."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, after line 2, insert:

"Pay of enlisted men, National Guard, $100."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was the last amendment inserted after line 2, page 16?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suggest that paragraph is for pay of officers, and it ought to follow somewhere in the next title "Pay of enlisted men."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has offered his amendment in connection with the pay of officers. I suggest that it should be offered somewhere in connection with the pay of enlisted men, on the same page.

Mr. DENT. I intended to offer it at page 16, line 13.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where was the last amendment offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that it was offered on page 16, after line 2.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, it should be page 16, line 13. I ask unanimous consent that it be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the action taken in respect to the last amendment be vacated, and that he have permission to again offer the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the amendment to come in after line 13, page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 13, insert:

"Pay of enlisted men, National Guard, $100."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, strike out all on line 18, down to and including all on line 25, same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Eighty clerks, at $1,800 each per annum, $144,000; 172 clerks, at $1,600 each per annum, $275,200; 222 clerks, at $1,400 each per annum, $310,800; 526 clerks, at $1,200 each per annum, $631,200; 119 messengers, at $720 each per annum, $85,580."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order, but I think it is subject to objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it is subject to objection to return for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no, Mr. Chairman; the right to return was reserved on Friday night. I was present, and I raised the point. This bill called for 170 Army field clerks in the Army of 500,000 after July 1. At the present time we have 4,500 field clerks.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not aware of the consent granted in the committee, and I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 18, line 18, insert "20 clerks at $2,000 each per annum, $40,000."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, these 20 Army field clerks are receiving at the present time $2,000 each, and most of these men fought in either the Indian wars or in the Spanish-American War. They are getting $2,000 now, and have been getting that amount during all of the years that have gone by. Some of them are 61 and 62 and 63 years of age. During the war some Army field clerks became captains, and even a lieutenant colonel, and they go back now to the same status they held as Army field clerks, in charge of divisions and, in numerous cases, at the head of a hundred or more clerks. To reduce them now to $1,800 would be to take the most backward step ever taken. The Adjutant General discussed the matter with me on the telephone to-day, saying that they are short 1,530 Army field clerks at the present time. In civil life these men would get three and four thousand dollars a year. You can not get any man to handle the work they do at the price we are paying them now.

Mr. DYER. How many of them are there?

Mr. SIEGEL. Twenty of them who are getting $2,000, and, under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], we will be reducing these men to $1,800.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman want to increase their pay or leave it as it is?

Mr. SIEGEL. Leaving them at the same pay as at the present time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that at the present time there are 4,500 clerks employed in the service.

Mr. SIEGEL. There are three thousand and some odd Army field clerks, and they are calling for 1,530 more, because they need them very badly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, the gentleman is merely providing for a thousand.

Mr. SIEGEL. Which is less than what they are asking for.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is assuming they are going to reduce the force, and yet the gentleman is seeking to retain all these of the higher grade.

Mr. SIEGEL. No; what I am trying to do is to give them a fair deal; and the gentleman must remember these are men who fought in this war, who fought in the Indian wars, who fought in the Spanish-American War, and that these men got the same salary before the present war which they are getting to-day.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What Indian war?

Mr. SIEGEL. In the old Indian wars in the West, and some of these men are 61 and 62 years old.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They ought to be retired.

Mr. SIEGEL. They should be retired, but there is no provision in the law for retiring them at the present time with pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. They ought to be pensioned.

Mr. SIEGEL. They ought to be pensioned, but we do not pension them. To reduce their salaries now to $1,800 will be doing them a gross injustice. It is about time we realized the great service these men have rendered to the country and give them the fair treatment which they deserve.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SIEGEL) there were—ayes 40, noes 44.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. DENT and Mr. SIEGEL) reported that there were—ayes 56, noes 54.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 7, after the word "officers," insert: "warrant officers, members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when ordered to active service."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has informed the Chair that there are some other matters still undisposed of. On page 29 a point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the paragraph beginning at the top of page 29.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the Clerk is in error. I think we passed that item, I remember, after considerable discussion. The item is certainly subject to the point of order. That is the item carrying the large appropriation of $449,000,000, which was reduced by an amendment offered by me by $38,000,000, and certainly there is no point of order lodged against the paragraph.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments back to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky assuming the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13835, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the motion to recommit which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FIELDS moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions forthwith to report same back to the House with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended in the payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall issue or cause to be issued any written order prohibiting social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of the same regiment while not on military duty: Provided further, That the limitation herein imposed shall not apply to officers whose only connection therewith is in obedience to an order of a superior officer."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the same amendment was offered in committee, and the chairman of the committee made a point of order. It was discussed, and then overruled by the chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], then occupying the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wanted to make a——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not yet know for what the gentleman from Tennessee rises and can not tell whether it is in order or not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Under the rules Calendar Wednesday is not in order on the last two weeks of the session, I understand. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Speaker has already ruled that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there is no occasion for locking the doors yet. The Chair has not ordered a call of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move a call of the House.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House was dividing on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. The House was not dividing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had announced that the noes seemed to have it. Thereupon the yeas and nays were demanded, and the Chair announced that all those who favored ordering the yeas and nays would rise and be counted. Thereupon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] made the point of no quorum, and the Chair announced that no quorum was present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Division is asked for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 73.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is to recommit. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to recommit will, as their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 191, nays 71, answered "present" 2, not voting 165, as follows:

Mr. WALTON with Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT with Mr. WOODYARD.
Mr. JONES with Mr. WHITE of Maine.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to recommit is agreed to. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.
Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
Mr. MANN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the last time a similar question was up Mr. Speaker CLARK decided that a vote to recommit was equivalent to the adoption of an amendment and that another vote upon its adoption was unnecessary and out of order. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.
Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MANN. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read sometime ago. Is it necessary to have it reengrossed and read the third time again?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is necessary in order to engross the amendment. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
Mr. MANN. I demand the reading from the engrossed bill, unless there is assurance that there will be no demand for a roll call. Is there going to be a demand for a roll call?
Mr. DENT. I do not expect to demand a roll call.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.
The bill was read a third time.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.
The question was taken, and the bill was passed.
On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.
Mr. MANN. I object. I do not know what it is. A gentleman who makes a unanimous-consent request should not climb up on the Speaker's table to do it.
Mr. KITCHIN. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.
Mr. CANNON. What is the order to-morrow—Calendar Wednesday?
Mr. KITCHIN. I think it is dispensed with under the rule two weeks before adjournment.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?
There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.
Mr. LEA of California. And I, Mr. Speaker, make the same request.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from California make the same request. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what these requests are.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. To extend their remarks in the RECORD.
Mr. WALSH. On what subject?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not stated.
Mr. WALSH. Then I object. I do not think leave can be granted when a gentleman is on his feet trying to find out what the Speaker has submitted to the House. You can not hear the Speaker. The Speaker says, "Without objection, it is so ordered." I was trying to find out and ask for information from the Chair.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas can answer.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. My request was to extend my remarks on the bill. I made some remarks on the bill several days ago, and I wanted to extend them.
Mr. WALSH. I have no objection.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California to make his own statement.
Mr. LEA of California. I want to extend my remarks on this bill on the McKeown amendment.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted—
To Mr. CRISP, at the request of Mr. LARSEN, indefinitely on account of sickness.
To Mr. ASHBROOK, indefinitely on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 19, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 19, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we present ourselves to Thee reverently, in the spirit of worship. We recognize Thy goodness, and put ourselves under Thy guidance. We are facing the great problems of life, not only the problems that must yield to human reason but those deeper problems that lie in the hand of God, and that can be reached and solved only as Thou dost lead us. We pray Thee to save us from error of judgment, from conceit of ignorance and pride, and give us that yielding spirit to the divine will that we may write into the laws of this Nation the will of God and establish our institutions upon the divine plan. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, February 13, 1919, when, on request of Mr. ASHURST and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Washington, praying for the immediate formulation of rules and regulations governing demobilization of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
THE STATE OF WASHINGTON,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, I. M. Howell, secretary of state of the State of Washington, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 7, with the original copy of said senate joint memorial No. 7 now on file in this office, and find the same to be a full, true, and correct copy of said original, and of the whole thereof, together with all official indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Washington. Done at the capitol, at Olympia, this 10th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.]

I. M. HOWELL,
Secretary of State.
By J. GRANT HINKE,
Assistant Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial 7.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to the Secretary of War:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington, in legislative session assembled, would most respectfully represent and memorialize your honorable body and the Secretary of War as follows:

That rules and regulations governing demobilization should favor the immediate release of those who are needed in business and industrial pursuits and defer the release of men without present opportunities for employment.

Wherefore your memorialists pray that your honorable body and the Secretary of War, at the earliest possible moment, formulate rules and regulations governing the demobilization, as herein indicated.

Passed the senate January 31, 1919.

LOUIS F. HART, President.

Passed the house February 5, 1919.

FRED A. ADAMS, Speaker.

Indorsed: State of Washington, ss. Filed in the office of secretary of state February 10, 1919. I. M. Howell, secretary of state.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Paragould, Ark., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. STERLING. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota memorializing Congress to appropriate money for the purchase of the wheat crop of 1919. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be read at the desk and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

[Sixteenth session Legislative Assembly State of South Dakota.]

Senate concurrent resolution, introduced by the joint committee on agriculture.

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate money for the purchase of the wheat crop of 1919 and to confer upon the President of the United States full power and authority for the handling of the same.

Whereas the price of all wheat to be produced in the United States in the year 1919 has been fixed by the President of the United States by authority of Congress, which act is of great importance to the farmers of all wheat-producing sections of the country, causing as it has the planting of a large acreage of winter wheat and the plowing and otherwise preparing for the sowing to wheat of a large acreage in the States raising spring wheat, which, owing to the high cost of labor and other factors entering into such enterprise, has required a much larger investment than for any preceding crop: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota in regular session assembled does earnestly and urgently petition the Congress of the United States to take such congressional action as may be necessary to empower the President of the United States to fulfill the contract entered into with the farmers of the United States, so that they may receive the full benefit of the price fixed for the wheat crop of 1919 without unnecessary delay, and that the Government of the United States may purchase all wheat offered it, thereby removing any danger of wheat speculators depressing prices during the period when the greater portion of the wheat crop is being placed upon the market, and enabling the Government of the United States to hold full and absolute control of the situation, to minimize the loss, if any, which might possibly otherwise occur, and to fix if deemed wise the price of flour to the consumer on a parity with that of other food products; be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies hereof be mailed to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, and to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. I also present two concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of South Dakota, one relating to the change of the name of the Panama Canal to the Roosevelt Canal, and the other memorializing Congress to cooperate with the Dominion of Canada in the enlarged canalization of the St. Lawrence River. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading and appropriately referred.

The memorials were referred, respectively, to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed resolution, to wit, a concurrent resolution, was duly passed by the sixteenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, February 12, 1919.

Secretary of State.

Hon. C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of representatives:

Whereas our Nation suffered a sense of bereavement personal to every American when the Maker of men recalled the intrepid soul of Theodore Roosevelt, the most virile, most brilliant, best beloved, and most typical American of his time, whose accomplishments as athlete, plainsman, soldier, author, explorer, President, and apostle of undiluted Americanism have made him a figure to touch and inspire the imagination of youth for generations; and

Whereas one of his many great achievements is represented by the canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans which his constructive and practical genius, brushing aside the bickerings, debates, and delays of 50 years, made possible: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress be petitioned officially to designate that American-made waterway the Roosevelt Canal, so that the same shall stand in name, as well as in historical fact, an enduring monument to his greatness, a constant reminder that the canal is, like the great President who started it, unqualifiedly American; and

Resolved further, That copy of this resolution, duly attested by the signatures of the presiding officers and chief clerks of the two houses, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed resolution, to wit, a concurrent resolution, was duly passed by the sixteenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, February 12, 1919.

[SEAL.] C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

Hon. C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State:

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of representatives:

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to cooperate with the Dominion of Canada in the enlarged canalization of the St. Lawrence River for the passage of ocean-going vessels into the Great Lakes.

Whereas the Dominion of Canada has provided for the improvement of the Welland Canal, connecting Lake Ontario and Lake Erie, so that such canal will accommodate ships of 25-foot draft, 800-foot length, and 80-foot width, work on which improvement was suspended during the war and is now again being taken up and will be completed in the near future; and

Whereas the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario can not be used by vessels of over 14-foot draft and 270-foot length; and

Whereas it is deemed to be a matter of great and vital importance to the United States that the St. Lawrence River be so improved that larger vessels may be accommodated and may move between the Great Lakes and the ocean: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition the Congress of the United States to take such steps as may be deemed best and most expeditious looking to the early improvement of the St. Lawrence River by joint arrangement with the Dominion of Canada.

Resolved further, That copy of this resolution, duly attested by the signatures of the presiding officers and chief clerk of the two houses, shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

For the senate:

WRIGHT TARBELL, Chief Clerk.

Dated at Pierre, S. Dak., this 10th day of February, A. D. 1919.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present resolutions from Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Polk County, Iowa, asking that the United States shall intercede for the freedom and independence of Ireland. I ask that the memorial, which is very short, shall be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a regular meeting of Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Polk County, Iowa, held this 9th day of February, 1919, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas this Nation was the founder of and to-day is the chosen champion of true democracy;

Whereas all nations, no matter how small or insignificant, are by inherent right entitled to rights of self-determination;

Whereas our chosen representative, President Woodrow Wilson, voicing the sentiment of the people, has time and time again openly pledged the allegiance of this country to the principle that no country shall govern without the consent of the governed;

Whereas no nation so small, or for such a long period of time, has suffered as much because of its love of freedom as Ireland;

Whereas the manhood of these glorious United States is now returning from the war they waged on a foreign soil in behalf of this same principle of the rights of small nations;

Whereas this Nation, enjoying all the privileges of a well-organized democracy, has always been on as friendly terms with Ireland as with the other European nations in whose behalf we took up the sword;

Lest we be accused by our enemies of inconsistency and hypocrisy: Be it further

Resolved, That Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Polk County, Iowa, being associated with the Federation of Friends of Irish Freedom, is of the unanimous opinion that this Nation should, and by unanimous vote of its members asks that this Nation do, intercede in the behalf of Irish freedom and independence; and furthermore be it

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators, the Hon. A. B. CUMMINS and the Hon. W. S. KENYON; our Representative in Congress, C. C. DOWELL; also that copies be furnished to the press of the city of Des Moines, Iowa, for publication.

JAMES E. O'MEARO.
R. F. KELLEY.
JOHN CONNALLY, Jr.

Mr. CUMMINS. I also present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa in regard to uniforms for soldiers, which I ask be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution is as follows:

Be it resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Senators and Representatives from Iowa in the Congress at Washington, D. C., be requested and urged to support the proper measures allowing all soldiers and sailors, discharged or to be discharged from the Army or Navy of the United States, to retain the clothing furnished them by the Government; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, the United States Senators and Representatives from Iowa.

ARCH. W. MCFARLANE,
Speaker of the House.
W. H. HONEY,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

I hereby certify that this resolution was introduced in the House on January 15, 1919, was taken up by unanimous consent, and adopted, and that it was concurred in by the Senate on January 28.

W. C. RAMSAY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa in regard to the solution of the railroad problems, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas postwar and reconstruction conditions have brought the United States of America many problems of great import, and perhaps the one of greatest importance is the question of Government ownership of the railways of the United States; and

Whereas our President, in his address to Congress on December 2, 1918, said: "The question which causes me the greatest concern is the question of the policy to be adopted toward the railroads. I frankly turn to your counsel upon it"; and after making other statements on this subject, further says: "Let me say at once that I have no answer ready. The only thing that is perfectly clear to me is that it is not fair either to the public or to the owners of the railroads to leave the question unanswered, and that it will presently become my duty to relinquish control of the roads, even before the expiration of the statutory period, unless there shall appear some clear prospect in the meantime of a legislative solution. Their release would at least produce one element of its solution, viz, certainty and a quick stimulation of private initiative"; and

Whereas our President has turned to Congress for counsel on this momentous subject, in his keen sense of justice endeavoring to deal fairly with the owners of the railroads and protectively to the public welfare; and

Whereas we feel that the Congress of the United States will, by being informed of public sentiment, be better able to solve and direct the course of the problem, and recognizing the necessity, as expressed in the President's address, of relinquishing control of the railroads as quickly as possible, and the certainty of conditions that said release of the railroads by the Federal Government would immediately establish: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring) of the thirty-eighth general assembly, That we favor the return of the railroads to their owners as soon as it can be accomplished without confusion or losses; be it further

Resolved, That we believe and think private ownership under strong Government control and regulation, in service, income, and disbursement is desirable, and we do not believe Federal Government ownership of railroads is for the best interest of the people at this time; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate and the chief clerk of house forward properly authenticated copies of this resolution to each United States Senator and Member of Congress from Iowa for their consideration.

ARCH. W. MCFARLANE,
Speaker of the House.
PRINCE R. MOORE,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that this resolution was introduced in the house on February 1, 1919, was adopted on February 3, and was concurred in by the senate on February 11.

W. C. RAMSAY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. I have two resolutions the same in language as to the heading and the signing, one passed by the State Senate of Nebraska and the other by the house of representatives of that State, in relation to an order issued by the Secretary of War. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolutions are as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF NEBRASKA.

I, Darius M. Amsberry, secretary of state of the State of Nebraska, do hereby certify that the resolutions hereunto attached and herewith pertaining are a true, correct, complete, and verified copy of the resolutions adopted by the Senate, Legislature of Nebraska, thirty-seventh session, February 5, 1919.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Nebraska. Done at Lincoln, this 7th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1919, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third, and of this State the fifty-second.

[SEAL.] DARIUS M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State.

LINCOLN, NEBR., February 5, 1919.

Hon. D. M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State, Lincoln, Nebr.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was adopted by the State senate under this date and is hereby transmitted to you:

"Whereas press reports state that several hundred men who were drafted for service in the war and refused to bear arms or work or obey orders of their superior officers, or in any manner assist in the defense of their country, or support thereof, are to be given and are being given honorable discharge from the Army, fitted out with a complete outfit of civilian clothing, and paid the full wage, and in some instances fifteen to twenty-five dollars more than that which they would have received had they been loyal to their country and served in the trenches and borne the hardships incident thereto; and

"Whereas there are several hundred thousand loyal American soldiers still in France who have willingly offered their lives in defense of their country and who are anxious to be discharged and return to private life; loyal and unselfish men who will some day return to find their positions filled by the unpatriotic slackers and conscientious objectors wearing the clothing furnished them by the Government, and with no provision made for rewarding and honoring those who have saved the country, and who by their glorious achievements have preserved to posterity the honor of the Nation: Now, therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Nebraska, That we earnestly protest against the action of Secretary of War Baker in rewarding the slacker and the traitor, which we stamp as a direct insult to the brave soldiers who so valiantly went forth to defend democracy and freedom against the awful blight of Kaiserism at the sacrifice of their lives, and to the Red Cross nurses who risked their lives to administer to the wounded and bleeding upon the battle fields of Europe, and every other worker who participated in the support of the war; and we call upon the Congress of the United States to condemn the said action of Secretary Baker, as it is not consistent with the principles of true Americanism; and we further call upon Congress to honor and reward the loyal and faithful men of our Army and Navy in a manner befitting their glorious deeds: Be it further

"Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to Secretary of War Baker and to the Members of Congress and the Senators from this State."

I, Clyde H. Barnard, secretary of the Senate of Nebraska, hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true, complete, and verified copy of resolution adopted by the senate February 5, 1919.

CLYDE H. BARNARD,
Secretary State.

Deputy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF CHIEF CLERK,
Lincoln, Nebr., February 6, 1919.

Whereas press reports state that several hundred men, known as conscientious objectors, were drafted for service in the war and refused to bear arms or work or obey orders of their superior officers, or in any manner assist in the defense of their country or support thereof, are to be given honorable discharge from the disciplinary barracks, fitted out with a complete outfit of civilian clothing, and paid the full wage, and in some instances $15 to $25 more than that which they would have received had they been loyal to their country and served in the trenches and borne the hardships incident thereto; and

Whereas there are several hundred thousand loyal American soldiers still in France who have willingly offered their lives in defense of their country and who are anxious to be discharged and return to private life; loyal and unselfish men, who will some day return to find their positions filled by the unpatriotic slackers and conscientious objectors wearing the clothing furnished them by the Government and with no provision made for rewarding and honoring those who have saved the country, and who by their glorious achievements have preserved to posterity the honor of the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, That we earnestly protest against the action of Secretary of War Baker in rewarding the slacker and the traitor, which we stamp as a direct insult to the brave soldiers who so valiantly went forth to defend democracy and freedom against the awful blight of Kaiserism at the sacrifice of their lives, and to the Red Cross nurses who risked their lives to administer to the wounded and bleeding upon the battle fields of Europe, and every other worker who participated in the support of the war; and we call upon the Congress of the United States to condemn the said action of Secretary Baker, as it is not consistent with the principles of true Americanism; and we further call upon Congress to honor and reward the loyal and faithful men of our Army and Navy in a manner befitting their glorious deeds. Be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to Secretary of War Baker and to the Members of the Congress and the Senators from this State.

D. S. DALBEY, Speaker.
WILL F. HITCHCOCK,
Chief Clerk.
DARIUS M. AMSBERRY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. HENDERSON. I present a petition signed by many citizens of Nevada in favor of the national ownership and Government operation of all the railroads of the country, which I move be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KENDRICK. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, W. E. Chaplin, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of enrolled joint memorial No. 1, Senate, Fifteenth Legislature of the State of Wyoming, being original senate joint memorial No. 1, has been carefully compared with the original filed in this office on the 14th day of February, A. D. 1919, and is a full, true, and correct copy of the same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming. Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 13th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.] W. E. CHAPLIN,
Secretary of State.
By H. M. SYMONS,
Deputy.

Senate joint memorial 1.

Whereas the State has begun the construction of a comprehensive system of highways, which are essential to the development of the State; and

Whereas the vast distances within our State which must be covered by improved highways and because our present population of only 200,000 people preclude the possibility of completing this task within the next generation, if the funds are to be derived from direct taxation and such Federal aid now available; and

Whereas more than 50 per cent of the total area of Wyoming is still in the public domain, while less than 18 per cent of this area has been patented to our citizens and over 17 per cent has already been set aside as national reserve; and

Whereas our highways must necessarily be built over large areas of public lands, thus greatly enhancing their value, though there is no way to assess a proportionate share of the cost of such construction against these lands: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress be requested to set aside 2,000,000 acres of public lands in the State of Wyoming, to be known and designated as State lands, to be selected, appraised, and sold or leased by the State, and the proceeds to be used in the construction of State highways; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be sent to each of the Members of the congressional delegation from the State in Congress, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the request that they employ their best efforts to secure favorable action from Congress along the lines indicated.

T. G. POWERS,
President of the Senate.
E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.

Approved:

ROBERT D. CAREY,
Governor.

FEBRUARY 14, 1919—3.30 p. m.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of Wisconsin relating to the establishment of a league of nations. I ask to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 4) relating to the establishment of a league of nations.

Whereas the war, now brought to a victorious close by the associated power of the free nations of the world, was above all else a war to end war and protect human rights: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate, the assembly concurring, That we favor the establishment of a league of nations, of which the United States shall be a member. We believe that such a league should aim at promoting the liberty, progress, and orderly development of the world; that it should clinch the victory won at such terrible sacrifice by having the united potential force of all its members as a standing protection for the world against any nation that seeks to upset the peace of the world; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution properly attested by the presiding officers be sent to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress, and to each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Wisconsin.

EDWARD F. DITTMAR,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
RILEY S. YOUNG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. G. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas, relative to the construction of a military highway connecting Fort Leavenworth, Camp Funston, and Fort Bliss, in the State of Kansas, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Kansas (both houses concurring therein)—

Whereas the great war has demonstrated the necessity of good roads for military efficiency; and

Whereas the Fort Leavenworth, Camp Funston, Fort Bliss National Military Highway Association, representing the States of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Kansas, meeting at Hutchinson, Kans., on Monday, January 20, 1919, has prepared a satisfactory route for such a highway, connecting the three great military posts of the Middle West, Fort Leavenworth, Camp Funston, and Fort Bliss, and has effected a strong and effective organization to carry out the said project, and has taken the preliminary steps to memorialize Congress in its favor: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives to use every effort to secure the necessary appropriations, either by special bill or as a part of the military appropriations, for the construction of the highway approved by the said association as a military highway to be built and maintained by the Federal Government, open, however, to civilian traffic under such rules and regulations as the War Department may impose.

CHAS. S. HOFFMAN,
Lieutenant Governor.
E. D. GEORGE,
Secretary.

Mr. CURTIS presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Salina, Kans., and a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Concordia, Kans., favoring the return to private ownership of the railroads of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Lew Gove Post No. 100, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Manhattan, Kans., remonstrating against the transferring to the War Department of Battle Mountain Sanitarium, of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WARREN presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Commercial Club of Sheridan, the Commercial Club of Buffalo, and the Merchants' Credit Association of Cody, all in the State of Wyoming, praying for the return to private ownership of telephone and telegraph lines, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13482) creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's victory memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 222) extending until July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WEEKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5313) authorizing the Secretary of War to acquire and maintain a cemetery in France in the name of the United States for the reception and interment of the bodies of American officers and men who lost their lives in connection with the European war, and to appropriate $500,000 therefor, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 731) thereon.

Mr. SHAFROTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4729) to exclude certain lands from the Pike National Forest Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 734) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3964) for the relief of Otis C. Mooney, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 733) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15706) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 735) thereon.

JENNIE M. HEATH.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on Pensions I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 10225) striking from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath, and I submit a report (No. 730) thereon. It is a bill reducing the pension roll instead of increasing it, and if there be no objection I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath, helpless and dependent child of Charles E. Heath, late of Company G, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, who is now pensioned by special act of Congress approved August 7, 1914.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Montana explain the reason for this action?

Mr. WALSH. The name was put upon the pension roll by mistake.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR CONNECTICUT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 4246) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut shall be at the rate of $4,500 a year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the RECORD the House report upon the bill increasing the salary of the district attorney of Connecticut which the Senate passed early in the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request of the Senator from Connecticut is granted.

The report is as follows:

Mr. MANSFIELD, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4246) providing for an increase of salary of the United States attorney for the district of Connecticut, having had the same under consideration, unanimously recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment:

On line 5, after the word "of," strike out "$5,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$4,500."

The State of Connecticut comprises one judicial district with a population of 1,114,756, as of 1910, and the law provides for the holding of court at New Haven and Hartford. The present salary of the United States attorney for this district is $2,500. The population of the district has increased more than 600,000 since the salary was fixed at $2,500, and your committee believe that at present it is wholly inadequate.

The present incumbent states that between March 1, 1917, and March 15, 1918, there were 253 criminal cases begun and 236 cases closed, and 28 civil cases begun and 11 closed, while during the same period there were approximately 100 complaints made which never developed in cases.

The population of the different other New England States and the salaries paid the United States attorneys therein follow:

Maine, 742,371; salary, $3,000.
New Hampshire, 430,572; salary, $2,000.
Vermont, 355,956; salary, $3,000.
Massachusetts, 3,366,416; salary, $5,000.
Rhode Island, 542,610; salary, $2,500.

In the first session of the Sixty-third Congress a bill (S. 281) passed the United States Senate approving an increase in the salary of the United States attorney for Connecticut to $4,000, and that was before the large amount of extra work entailed by the war was added to the routine of the office. On account of the outbreak of the European conflict at that time, the House took no action, as the policy adopted at the period was that no more bills for increases in salaries should be considered.

The clerk of the court receives about $6,000 a year. The internal-revenue officer for the district receives $4,500 a year. The postmaster at Hartford receives $6,000 a year. The salary of the collector of customs for Connecticut is $5,000 a year.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. CUMMINS. From the Committee on Rules I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate resolution 339, submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], to amend Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate by adding thereto a paragraph restricting and regulating membership of certain committees of the Senate, and I submit a report (No. 732) thereon. I ask that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD. I make this request because at the first convenient time after to-morrow I intend to ask for the consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration Senate resolution No. 339, recommends the adoption thereof with the following amendment: Strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive, and substitute therefor the following:

"Beginning with the first session of the Senate of the Sixty-sixth Congress no Senator shall be a member of more than two of the following standing committees of the Senate, namely, Appropriations, Agriculture and Forestry, Commerce, Finance, Foreign Relations, Interstate Commerce, Judiciary, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, and Post Offices and Post Roads. No Senator being chairman of either of the committees named in this paragraph shall be appointed on a conference committee upon any bill reported by either of the last-named standing committees unless it is reported by the committee of which he is the chairman."

The purpose of the proposed amendment to the rules is, in the judgment of this committee, commendable, and it is believed that the results of its adoption will be salutary. The object sought to be obtained in restricting the assignment of Members of the Senate to places upon the 10 chief standing committees is to secure a proper distribution of the work of the Senate among its Members, and thereby not only facilitate the disposition of the public business, but to insure a more careful consideration of the bills which are referred to these committees.

With respect to the limitation upon appointments upon conference committees, it is hoped that there will be accomplished a more equitable division of the responsibilities of legislation; a division that will have a tendency, at least, to give all the Members of the Senate an incentive to fit themselves for the important labors which fall upon conference committees.

It may not be amiss to say that the action of the Committee on Rules was unanimous.

CONNECTICUT RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13369) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in Hampden County, Mass., and I ask that it be considered at the present time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas if he will not wait until morning business has been finished and then ask for the consideration of the bill? The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has consented to wait until then, as there is considerable morning business that ought to be attended to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw the report for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

LOAN OF AIRCRAFT MOTORS.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) permitting the loan of aircraft motors and aircraft material to educational institutions under certain conditions.

I will say that the consideration of this joint resolution will not require a moment's discussion. The facts are simply these: Two or three educational institutions, among them the College of the City of New York, have requested of the War Department the loan of Liberty motors for the use of students of those colleges. The War Department is perfectly willing to make the loan, but lacks the authority to do so. This joint resolution simply confers authority upon the War Department to make such loans at its own discretion, reserving to the Government the title to the motors and all other material.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, do I understand the joint resolution applies to certain specified colleges, or is it a general law that applies to all colleges which are similarly situated?

Mr. NEW. The joint resolution is general in its application, so that such loans may be made to any college that wants them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the joint resolution ought to be read. I should like to know its terms.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 5, after the word "loan," to strike out "to bona fide educational institutions in the United States aircraft motors and aircraft equipment in such instance as in the judgment of the Secretary of War beneficial educational purposes can be served by such loan," and to insert "aircraft motors and aircraft equipment to such educational institutions in the United States as provide advanced mechanical and technical instruction, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered, for the purpose of aiding, fostering, and promoting educational experimentation work, to loan aircraft motors and aircraft equipment to such educational institutions in the United States as provide advanced mechanical and technical instruction, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nevada if he will not defer that request until we get through with morning business? We have not had a morning hour for a long time. There are bills and resolutions to be introduced, and it seems to me that the Senator should wait until we get through with the formal morning business.

Mr. PITTMAN. I recognize that there is a great deal of merit in the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, and it was my intention to wait until the morning business had been concluded before moving to take up this matter, as I gave notice yesterday that I should do; but there are so many bills now being passed by unanimous consent——

Mr. NORRIS. There has been only one such bill, and I think with this statement there should be no more requests for unanimous consent to pass bills during the morning hour, and the Senator's request should be deferred also.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, I defer to the pleasure of the Senate in the matter. I withdraw the request.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall object to any other bill being considered at this time.

DISCHARGED SICK AND DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice that during the morning hour to-day I would ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by me from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, being House bill 13026, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers and sailors. The passage of the bill is absolutely vital if we are to provide for the discharge of disabled soldiers of the United States. I desire to say that I intend to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill as soon as we get through with morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills and joint resolutions are in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GORE (by request):

A bill (S. 5636) providing for the enactment of a credit-union law in the District of Columbia by which the officers of such credit union shall be empowered to receive deposits from and make loans to the stockholders thereof; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 5637) granting an increase of pension to George Montgomery (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 5638) to provide for election contests in the Senate of the United States; to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5639) to establish and promote civic, social, and health extension education; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. NUGENT:

A bill (S. 5640) donating captured cannon to the towns of Coeur d'Alene, Sandpoint, and Gooding, in the State of Idaho; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 5641) requiring The Adjutant General of the United States Army and the Secretary of the Navy to furnish certain data to the adjutants general of the several States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, on October 10, 1918, I introduced a bill to create a department of education, which is Senate bill 4987. I have modified that bill somewhat and I desire to introduce it anew to-day and have it referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill (S. 5635) to create a department of education, to appropriate money for the conduct of said department, to appropriate money to encourage the States in the promotion and support of education, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In connection with introducing the new bill I wish to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 4987, and that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KNOX submitted an amendment authorizing the President to appoint Col. George K. McGunnegle, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of brigadier general, on the retired list, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California submitted an amendment providing that the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services are no longer required or who may resign from their positions, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

NITRATE PLANT AT SHEFFIELD, ALA.

Mr. GORE. I offer a Senate resolution, which I send to the desk, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for just a moment? On account of an important meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee, I am compelled to leave the Senate, and I have a Senate resolution which I desire to offer and to have read before I leave the Chamber.

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit a Senate resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution (S. Res. 459) was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to make an investigation and report to the Senate its findings of fact upon the following:

First. What inducement, if any, did the War Department offer to officers and enlisted men in investigating and making improvements in the method of extracting nitrogen from the air in the United States Nitrate Plant No. 1 at Sheffield, Ala.?

Second. What improvement, if any, in such process was invented by Capt. R. S. Tour and Second Lieut. F. C. Binnall?

Third. Was any such improvement discovered by the said Capt. Tour and said Second Lieut. Binnall patentable under the laws of the United States?

Fourth. If any such process so discovered was patentable, were the said Capt. Tour and said Second Lieut. Binnall required by any official of the War Department, by coercion or otherwise against their will, to assign such patentable rights to the General Chemical Co.?

FREIGHT RATES ON WHEAT AND WHEAT FLOUR.

Mr. GORE. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 458) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as to the comparative freight rates on wheat and on wheat flour, and if there be a differential to state the same and cite typical cases.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer an amendment to Senate resolution 411, submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], requesting that our soldiers be withdrawn from Russia. As that subject has been discussed and the amendment is pertinent, I will ask that the Secretary read it, and that it be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend Senate resolution 411 by striking out the same and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Whereas by a revolution in Russia in the month of March, 1917, the government of that country was wrested from its autocratic rulers and the people proceeded to establish a representative form of government and duly elected a congress to administer its affairs; and

"Whereas through the instrumentality of a German propaganda and by intrigue and bribery a counter-revolution was inaugurated which overthrew the government so established by the Russian people and abolished and dispersed their representative body; and

"Whereas through the basest treachery and at the most perilous period in the history of the war their criminal element controlling the destinies of Russia abandoned the cause of the allies, betrayed their comrades in war and their country, and made their country subservient to the demands of the central powers, thereby enabling those powers to withdraw all their armies from the east and use them in a final blow on the western front to destroy the cause of Russia and her allies; and

"Whereas Lenine and Trotzky and other so-called officers of the Bolsheviki element now devastating Russia are not only our enemies but, worse than enemies, are traitors to the cause of liberty and civilization; and

"Whereas the atrocities committed by them are manyfold greater than all the atrocities charged against the invading German armies or committed by the Turkish armies in Armenia; and

"Whereas the President of the United States pledged the good offices and support of this Government to assist the Russian people in establishing a representative government, and assured, as one of the 14 articles of peace conditions, the cooperation of this and other allied nations in obtaining for Russia an unhampered and unbiased opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development, and agreed to extend to her the more than welcome assistance of every kind that she might need; and

"Whereas the vast majority of the Russian people are bitterly opposed to the Bolsheviki rule, with all its atrocities, but are unorganized and unable to maintain their rights; and

"Whereas if the Bolsheviki criminals now in control of that unhappy country are allowed to continue their robberies and murders and to annihilate the more intelligent and patriotic class of Russian citizenship, that whole country will soon be dominated and controlled by Germany, and the sacrifice of the millions of men who have died to check the world's domination of the German Empire will have been in vain: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That by every principle of national honor and military strategy and for the defense of the civilization of the world, for which millions of men have laid down their lives in this great war, it is the duty of the United States and our allies from both a moral and military standpoint to immediately send a sufficient army into Petrograd and Moscow and other Russian points to defeat the murderous band of pillagers in Russia known as the Bolsheviki, and to protect the decent, intelligent, and patriotic people of Russia until they shall have been able to elect a representative congress to govern and control that country."

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the amendment go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie over and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. OWEN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. MCLEAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 69) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the journal of the Fifty-third National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1919, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 14555. An act granting the consent of Congress to the board of supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Barrs Ferry, in said county, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 15495. An act to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, is a motion now in order to proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 2812?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, morning business is closed. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 2812.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this conference report is entitled to very deliberate consideration. It deals with a matter which has divided the public opinion of the country for a number of years, upon which there has been more or less of a deadlock in legislation; so I assume that Senators will desire an opportunity for a thorough examination of the details of the agreement which has been reached by the conference committee, and that the matter can not be disposed of in a few moments.

While that is pending, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to another situation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator goes to the other situation, I should like with his permission simply to make a suggestion in keeping with what he has already said, without making a speech, of course.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. PITTMAN. For the benefit of the Senate, on yesterday I had the full report printed in the RECORD, so that it appears in the RECORD this morning. It shows the bill as agreed upon by the conferees, and an itemized statement of each change made in the Senate bill as well as in the House bill; so that it will facilitate the examination of the report by the Senate.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it is very well that the Senator from Nevada called attention to that, so that Senators may know where to find the printed report.

Mr. PITTMAN. And the Senator from Nevada refrained from making any brief statement with regard to the changes that took place in the Senate bill, out of respect for the notice that the Senator from Washington had given that on this morning he would address himself to another subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate exceedingly the courtesy of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. So soon as the Senator has finished I will make a brief statement—unless, of course, it interferes with some other Senator—in regard to the changes made in the Senate bill by the conference committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, this same report was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a week ago, the matter being presented in the House, so that the whole report and a copy of the bill have been on record in the House proceedings for more than a week.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the most conspicuous item of news in the headlines of the morning papers refers to an Associated Press dispatch from Paris, the principal digest of which I read from one of the morning papers, which I have at hand, as follows:

Delegates anxious to take up peace treaty and to end war status.

Mr. President, it has been more than three months since the solemn and formal armistice was signed, bringing to an end actual military operations between the allies and Germany; so that it arrests one's attention to read after that lapse of time as the principal news which is published in the world from Paris, to which the gaze of all men is directed, the statement that the delegates to the peace conference now, on the 19th day of February—the armistice having been agreed to on the 11th day of November—are beginning to become anxious to take up and consider, at least, the peace treaty to bring an end to the status of war.

I read a moment ago in an edition of a noon paper which has just been circulated the news—which will startle the world—that Georges Clemenceau, the great leader of France in the heroic war which has terminated in her victory, has been the object of an assassin's bullet. Fortunately for humanity, the assassin failed of his purpose, and Clemenceau still lives. I say fortunately for humanity, because of all men the world could least afford to lose at this juncture, in this great epoch of its affairs, is the French premier, who has stood for victory and for efficiency in the fight of civilization against the German hordes.

I mention that, Mr. President, because it seems to me that it is a symptom of a disease which is afflicting the world and social affairs, and which is being irritated and aggravated to the point where it may become chronic by the delay of the conference, which was called to secure and establish peace, in performing the duties for which it gathered. Assassination is a weapon of those who represent the internationale, of those who have taken up the cause of international revolution, which is now beginning to be active in the United States as well as in the countries of Europe and which needs to be cured by the establishment of definite and permanent peace.

Mr. President, there are two divisions of men upon this question. One of those divisions advocates the proposition that before we establish present peace we should provide, by some as yet ill-defined means, for permanent and universal future peace. The other division of men who are interested in this great question believes, on the contrary, that the first duty of the world is to establish present peace, to restore order in Europe, and that instead of satisfying ourselves with expressions of interest in the future welfare of mankind the leaders of the Governments should demonstrate their sincerity by relieving the present suffering which afflicts the world.

There is another division of public opinion upon this question, Mr. President. One division of public opinion upon the question of peace believes that permanent peace can not be secured for the United States or for the rest of the world by the traditional policies of the American Government. Those who take that view of the matter believe that in order to arrive at a satisfactory basis of peace not only must we ignore and neglect the duty of bringing the present war to an end, but that we should cast aside, as the refuse of government, the great policies of the past, and adopt new policies, and make, as they express it, a new order in the world. The other party believes that the great men who have formulated public opinion in America in the past, shaped its policies, and achieved its greatness were as sincere and as intelligent advocates of peace, of permanent peace, as those who are in charge of American affairs to-day.

So the question arises, Was Washington a friend of peace? Did he desire the world to dwell in amity and good will, one nation with another? And so the question arises, With what purpose did Washington enunciate a foreign policy for the new Government which his fortitude and wisdom had been the chief agents in establishing? Was its purpose war, or was not its purpose the same purpose which is now proclaimed throughout the world—to secure peace, maintain good will among nations, and security and happiness among the people of the world? I think that was the object of Washington's advice against entangling alliances. Was it the purpose of Monroe, when he in an earlier generation than ours proclaimed that famous policy which bears his name, to sow the seeds of war and discord? I think not. I think his purpose was peace. Was Cleveland an advocate of war when he enforced that doctrine when it was attacked? Was Roosevelt promoting war or was he securing peace when he, in his turn, as President of the United States, resisted the efforts of the German Empire to invade the traditional policy of America? He was rewarded by an impartial tribunal to whom had been intrusted the prize to be bestowed upon those who contributed most to the peace of the world.

They were all for peace; and, Mr. President, all intelligent men and women are for peace. The question is, Does the proposition which is presented to the world tend to promote peace to a greater extent than those policies which have secured peace for America during the greater part of its career, or, on the contrary, does it add to the opportunity, to the cause, and to the temptation for war?

Mr. President, it is perhaps not an exaggeration to say that the matters contained in the proposed constitution of the league of nations, recently reported by a special committee authorized to investigate and report by the peace congress, are the most momentous in their effect upon the Government and the people of the United States since the Civil War. They are closely related, in fact, to the problems presented for discussion and determination by the people in the formation of the Constitution of the United States. In adopting or rejecting this constitution—and I quote the words which the instrument itself uses in characterizing it as a constitution—and thereby becoming or not becoming a member of the league established under it, the Government and the people of the United States will determine whether they are to remain the great sovereign and independent Nation, with the most complete self-government ever devised by man and the highest functions of citizenship ever enjoyed—a people controlling their own destiny, determining for themselves, through their constituted Government, the extent of their military preparations, the size of their armies and navies, maintaining peace and amity with the world during the greater part of their career, establishing for themselves their international relations—or whether, on the other hand, they are to merge their destinies with those of the other nations of the world, share their burdens, participate in their quarrels, and become a party to all the international complications arising from diversity of race and language and conflict of interests of the various peoples of Asia, Africa, and Europe. Are we to surrender to an international council and body of delegates those high functions of sovereignty which heretofore we have exercised for ourselves, and vest in the jurisdiction of an international league the determination of our armaments, the decision of peace or of war, even in the most vital questions affecting our national honor, integrity, or material welfare? I think I can demonstrate that that is the issue which is to be determined.

There is this further question involved of whether or not we would be promoting the cause of peace in the world by the adoption of this constitution, or, on the other hand, would be plunging the world into a new set of controversies, and, by requiring every nation to meddle with every other nation's business, would be bringing about an indefinite series of armed conflicts. "Mind your own business" is a good motto for an individual, and heretofore it has been the fundamental principle of our foreign policy as a Nation. It has saved us from many wars and given us long eras of peace, in which we have developed our social and industrial life, brought happiness to our people, and waxed great and prosperous among the nations of the world. The question is now presented of whether we are to adhere to this policy of Washington and Monroe, of cultivating friendly relations with all nations and making entangling alliances with none, or whether we are to enter into a treaty and adopt a constitution of a league which binds us to a great number, and possibly to all, of the other nations of the world in the most entangling alliance that could be conceived, since it binds us as one of the guardians and guarantors of every right or interest of any of these nations which might be involved in actual or threatened war.

These are great questions, and if so decided as to commit the United States to what the President himself has described as "a new order in the world," will deprive our people of that high and mighty state which they and their fathers have builded for themselves. There is no other citizenship in the world so entirely free of class distinction, or discrimination, as that of the American people. There is no other nation which to-day is more absolutely sovereign than the United States. There is no other nation where an individual citizen, standing upon an absolute legal and governmental equality with every other citizen, wields an equal voice in determining the highest prerogatives of government. There is no other nation where all of its members occupy the high estate which these conditions secure to the American people. The question now presented is whether or not this high sovereign jurisdiction of the political heirs of Jefferson, Washington, and Lincoln is to be in part surrendered and subjected to the control of strangers and aliens.

We have heard a great deal, Mr. President, in recent years of the right of the people themselves to direct the affairs of government; and if the people themselves are to participate at all in the decision of these mighty issues it is absolutely necessary that the question should be submitted to them for free discussion and full consideration in every forum and at every fireside. The basis of a successful republic is an intelligent public opinion. But there can be no intelligent public opinion without free communication of news, full information, and unhampered discussion, both in the press, in the public councils, and among the people themselves. Surely if these principles apply to the ordinary affairs of government they apply to an extraordinary program, by which it is planned to establish a "new order in the world." The constitution of the league of nations, which was printed in the afternoon papers of Friday, February 14, 1919, was framed in secret. Until it was so published the world, whose future was to be controlled by its terms, was purposely kept in entire ignorance of any of its provisions. It came forth full panoplied, as though born from the head of Jove. On the same day a eulogy of its terms and an argument in its behalf was made by the President. On the morning of February 16, 1919, there was published to the world a request from the President that its provisions be not debated in Congress until he should have an opportunity, in a private meeting with the members of the Foreign Relations Committees of Congress, to further speak in its advocacy and to justify not only the principles involved but the very form of its language, article by article.

In the meantime, under this plan, while Congress, the council of the people, is to remain silent, the various organizations, such as the League to Enforce Peace, the Society of Free Nations, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and other internationalists employing an ex-President of the United States as one of their chief lecturers and including members of the Cabinet, are busy in appealing to the American people in its behalf. Before the busy world, whose destinies are to be controlled by this new dispensation, has had an opportunity to thoroughly read and digest its provisions, we are requested not to make it the subject of debate in Congress until the President can again speak in its behalf. The situation is very similar to that when the people of this country indignantly protested against premature negotiations for peace with Germany, and were told to leave the discussion of terms of peace to the Governments involved and to busy themselves with providing the necessary funds.

So we are requested here, Mr. President, while the advocates of this supergovernment of the world are making arguments in its favor, to remain silent. It is a matter, however, of too much importance for us to remain altogether silent. No harm can be done by full discussion. These great questions should be considered from every standpoint and should be decided in the full light of public information and well-informed public opinion. If the proposals contained in the constitution of the league are meritorious, they will be strengthened by debate. If they are unwise or ill-advised, that fact may be disclosed by free discussion. No injury can possibly accrue to anyone by the freest and most painstaking examination of the provisions of this proposed constitution of the world.

We are all in favor of giving effect to "humane impulses" in the government of the world. We ardently desire peace. Whatever steps we can take which will relieve the oppressed, establish justice, inculcate virtue, and bring happiness to mankind we advocate. There is no monopoly of benevolence, of humane impulses, of the desire, if possible, to obtain universal and perpetual peace. The question is the adoption of means which will really promote to the utmost extent these great and beneficent ends. It is to be determined in the discussion of the league of nations what the language of its constitution imports and whether or not it will promote, in truth and in fact, the welfare of mankind. There are many who contend that it will provoke and precipitate war and entail untold misery upon mankind by the conflicts, jealousies, and surrenders which it would bring about. These are entitled to be heard. If their views and deductions are wrong, their fallacy will be easily exposed. It is, we are told, a day of "open covenants openly arrived at," and never was there a covenant since the chosen people followed the ark in the wilderness that was so fraught with good or evil for the children of men. If covenants are to be openly arrived at, this covenant, of all others, should be exposed to the light and to discussion in the open.

It is intended as a permanent and universal league and covenant. I think that feature may well be emphasized, and I will speak a moment later of the fact that there is no provision in it for abrogating any covenant of adherence to it. It binds mankind and their destinies forever. The question at once arises whether, when we have once committed ourselves to its power, we can ever withdraw. It no doubt will be contended by its advocates that we can renounce our allegiance and abrogate our agreement at any time. It was so contended by many of the States who joined the Federal Union.

Some of them ratified the Constitution of the United States upon that express condition. Virginia did; I think that New York did, reserving the right to withdraw from the Federation at will. This, however, was decided to the contrary by the Union itself, and over the question was fought the bloodiest war, with the most pitiful sacrifices of a noble race of men. There is nothing, Mr. President, in the proposed constitution of the league of nations which provides for its abrogation or for the secession of its members. When power is once in their hands, its executive council, with its changing membership and the uncertain virtues of rulers, may likewise decide that its obligations are binding forever upon its members. It may well be considered by the Senate whether such a question should be left to implication or doubt.

In its simplicity of form, the absence of what might be called specialization of functions of the government of this constitution of nations, the machinery of the league is similar to the Soviet government of Russia. Its "body of delegates" and "executive council" and "permanent secretariat" are very largely a duplication of the framework of the Soviets.

Now, Mr. President, coming to the substance of this constitution of a league of nations, I may say that there are five principal matters of prime importance contained in the constitution, and it is in regard to those, because the others are of comparatively slight importance, that I desire to speak.

First. There is contained in this constitution a surrender by the several nations to the league of the power and discretion of determining the rules, methods, and degree of disarmament, and the relative and absolute size of the Army and Navy which any member of the league may maintain.

Second. Compulsory arbitration of all questions of every kind and description, even those which heretofore have been regarded as nonjusticiable, affecting the vital interests, honor, and even the independence of the nations.

There is no exception whatever. No question concerning the welfare or even the existence of the United States can arise in controversy with another nation which, if this league is adopted and its provisions enforced, our people will not be compelled to submit to a foreign tribunal and abide by its decision.

Third. The commitment of each member of the league, including the United States, if it should become a member, to participate in the wars and controversies of every other nation, and to assume the general guardianship of "various peoples," quoting from the constitution itself, in Europe, Asia, and Africa.

Fourth. The participation by the league, through an international bureau of labor, in the domestic, social, economic, and industrial problems, quoting from the constitution of the league, "both in their own countries and in all countries to which their commercial and industrial relations extend." This is contained in article 20 of the proposed constitution, and the extent of the participation and powers of the international bureau of labor are left entirely vague and indefinite. What steps will be taken by the league or what power it will legitimately have to carry out the policies declared in this article are left to the wide discretion of the league itself, as there is no limitation placed upon it.

Fifth. The surrender by the United States to the other members of the league—I say to the other members of the league because the other members of the league constitute the overwhelming majority and will direct its action—of the power which under our Government is vested by the Constitution in Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations in arms and ammunition. This is contained in article 18 in the following language: "The high contracting parties agree that the league shall be intrusted with general supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary in the common interest."

Of course, the league is to determine in what country its control is necessary. There is no limit, consequently, placed upon the power of the league to supervise the commerce of the United States or any other nation in arms and ammunition, which power under the Constitution of the United States is vested in Congress.

The control of trade in arms and ammunition is one of the most essential attributes of sovereignty. It has been exercised by the United States in various ways, at various times, and in relation to various countries. It is one of the chief weapons of defense, both direct and indirect, whether in the matter of export or import of arms and ammunition from or into the United States itself, as in the case of neighboring countries, such as Mexico or Cuba, in the matter of a controversy between them and the United States, or whether in the matter of the shipment of munitions of war to other belligerents, in the exercise of their belligerent rights, in a war which, as in the case of the present war with Germany before we ourselves became a belligerent, indirectly involved our most vital interests.

Mr. President, the provisions of the constitution of the league as proposed, giving the league absolute discretion as to the armament of its several members, are contained in articles 7, 8, and 9 of the proposed constitution. I want to ask Senators to pay particular attention to article 7, especially to one part of it. It contains an unequivocal provision, as follows:

> No State shall be admitted to the league unless its people give effective guaranties of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations and unless it shall conform to such principles as may be prescribed by the league in regard to its naval and military forces and armaments.

Under this the determination of what are the international obligations of the United States, once it has joined the league, will be taken from the people of the United States, where it is now vested, and given to the league of nations, and the United States will be absolutely bound by every order of the league, backed by its power, as to our naval and military forces and armaments.

Article 8 provides for a different degree of disarmament in the different nations in accordance with "the geographical situation and circumstances of each State," and that "the executive council shall also determine, for the consideration and action of the several governments, what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament, and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator from Washington if I ask him a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. REED. At this point will the Senator advise us who the executive council is to be? I do not mean the personnel, but how it is to be made up?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is impossible to tell who the entire representation on the executive council will be. Five of its members of nine shall be the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, and they shall select four others. If they should select Germany, for instance—Germany, one of the great populations of the world, with something like 77,000,000 or 80,000,000 of people, an industrious people, capable of a high degree of organization, very likely would be selected as a member of the executive council—then if, with that capacity which Germany has for propaganda and for organization and for manipulation, she should be able to secure the cooperation of the other three of these additional four members, then, with one other out of the five, she could control the executive council of the league.

Mr. REED. But, as the league will stand on its initial organization, it will have how many members?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will have nine members.

Mr. REED. And how many votes will the United States have?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will have one.

Mr. REED. So that the question of how much of an army or how much of a navy the United States may have is to be determined by a tribunal upon which the United States will have but one vote and foreign nations will have eight votes?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Exactly; that is the proposition.

Mr. REED. That is a complete surrender, is it not, of America's vital right to defend herself, to a tribunal that is made up, eight to one, of non-Americans and that may be composed eight to one of enemies of America?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly; it is to be composed eight to one, of conflicting interests, of rival powers of America, entirely different in their environments, in their interests, and in their traditions from the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, is it not also true that any nation, however small, or without regard to its population, its extent, or its resources, will be as powerful, if admitted to membership in this league, as is the United States itself?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will be as powerful, so far as its vote is concerned. Of course, it would not be as powerful in directing the affairs of the league, for ultimately the league is based upon force, however much argument may be made to the contrary.

Mr. STERLING. I mean, if the Senator from Washington will permit me, in any decision arrived at by the league?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Absolutely.

Mr. REED. Let me ask one further question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will first yield to the Senator from Nebraska and then I will yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not true that the small nations, about which the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has spoken, would not be members of the executive council, and that, in order to have the same influence in the affairs of the league as the United States, for instance, a nation would have to be represented on the executive council?

Mr. STERLING. But, Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will permit me a moment, I suppose the ultimate power rests in the league itself and in the delegates to the league, and each nation admitted to the league will have but one delegate, or at least one vote, though it may have three representatives.

Mr. NORRIS. Such a nation would not, probably, have a vote in the executive council unless it was a member of it, because the executive council is confined to a membership of nine, and they are named.

Mr. STERLING. It might not. They are named in the present constitution of the league; but when it comes to the action of the league itself Serbia or Cuba will have as much power in that action as will the United States of America.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am very glad to yield in the course of my remarks on this subject to any Senator to ask a question or to answer a question to the best of my ability, but I should much prefer that colloquies or debates between other Senators be postponed until the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Washington pardon me one further question in the line of those I was asking?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. REED. In this executive council, which is primarily to be composed of nine men, representing nine different countries, the United States, having one representative, is it not true that Japan will have a vote equal with that of the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly; that is true.

Mr. REED. That is to say, we propose to enter a league in which we give to Japan a vote concerning our destiny equal to our own vote, although we refuse to allow a Japanese citizen to become a citizen of the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Japan would have the same vote that the United States has on the executive council; but I think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is mistaken in the assumption that small nations will not be represented on the executive council. There is no such limitation as that. There are four vacancies on the executive council.

Mr. NORRIS. When those are filled, that will complete the list.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They can be filled by representatives of small nations.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; they might be; but the point I want to make is that in order for any so-called small nation to have the same power in this league that the United States, for instance, would have, it must be a member of the executive council, of which there can be but nine members.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So far as the executive council is concerned, a member would have more influence than a mere delegate.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, article 9 of the proposed constitution provides that "a permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the league on the execution of the provisions of article 8, and on military and naval questions generally." That is the disarmament program.

Under the provisions of article 7, which I have already quoted, when this program and method of execution shall have been decided by the league, the United States and the other members will be bound to conform to the same. I will call attention in a moment to the manner in which they will be bound and what the penalty will be if they undertake in any way to evade the decree of the league in fixing the size of their armies and navies.

Much unrelated irrelevant matter is contained in these—and I may say this without disparagement of any person at all—loosely drawn, vague, and uncertain articles. The principles just stated, however, are unequivocally expressed. Undoubtedly a reduction of armaments of the world is most desirable. With equal certainty, however, in deciding upon the terms of this disarmament the United States and its people should have the opportunity to ratify or reject the proposed plan, and the relative degree of such disarmament when so agreed to should be universal among all the nations of the world and should not be confined merely to members of the league. It would be a curious proposition for all the members of this league to enforce peace to disband their armies and navies and to leave the great military nations which are not members of the league to build up a colossal military power; and yet that may be done. If one great nation is free to maintain such armies and navies as it sees fit while the members of the league disarm, the very condition sought to be avoided—namely, the temptation of conquest—would be accentuated. Under these provisions the decision as to the relative reduction of the Army and Navy of the United States, in proportion to that of great rival powers, would be taken absolutely out of the jurisdiction of the people and Government of the United States and vested in the jurisdiction of the league, where the United States has but one vote amid a large number of alien powers. Even a majority of these powers, many of whose interests are in conflict with those of the United States and whose traditions are entirely different, whose sympathies and predilections are subject to a wholly different environment, would determine this vital matter.

Mr. President, these provisions constitute a delegation and transfer of sovereign powers to an alien agency. These powers are vested by the Constitution of the United States in Congress. They can not be constitutionally divested.

It is argued by some that Congress, by accepting the arrangement made by the league of nations and making it its own, would thereby preserve its constitutional powers. I have heard that argued by Senators who are able lawyers. There is a good deal of speciousness in the argument, and yet it is entirely sophistical. The answer to that is perfectly obvious, that, if we keep the agreement which we make binding upon us as a Nation, under this league of nations Congress will not be left any discretion whatever to determine whether it will accept the decree of disarmament provided by the league, but it is bound and obligated in advance by the constitution of the league itself to have no other army and no other navy except that which is provided by the executive council of the league of nations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not that same objection apply to every treaty which the United States makes with any other nation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know that I thoroughly understand the Senator's question. The same subject matter, of course, is not involved in every other treaty; it is involved in very few.

Mr. NORRIS. If I may be permitted, I will try to make myself plainer. Suppose in the regular way the United States Government enters into a treaty with a foreign nation. It will require legislation, perhaps, to give it effect; it will require appropriations, and the legislation and the appropriations must come before Congress under the Constitution of the United States. Congress may fail, it may refuse to carry it out, even though the Government has made the agreement. The same thing would apply to this league, would it not? If there was required to carry it out some action upon the part of Congress, Congress, of course, could refuse to take the action, just as it could in the case of a treaty, and thus violate the agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in the first place, the matters the Senator has in mind in other treaties are specific programs which are defined by the treaty-making power of the Nation. I said a moment ago in my discussion of this matter that if a disarmament program were specified and submitted to the treaty-making power of the United States, so that this Government would have an opportunity of using its discretion as to whether it was a wise or an equal or a well-balanced relative disarmament, comparing our own Army and Navy with the armies and navies of other nations of the world, it would be a very different proposition. There is a great gulf between that and the delegation of unlimited power to a foreign tribunal to fix such a program of disarmament as it sees fit without any specification whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that a difference only in degree and not in principle? For instance, suppose that, instead of those powers which the Senator is criticizing in this proposed constitution being general, they were specific, and specifically defined the standing Army and the Navy that the United States, for instance, would be allowed to maintain, still Congress could go ahead and disregard all that if it desired to do so, for, after all, this is going to be nothing but a treaty, and we could raise a larger Army or a larger Navy or a smaller one and thus violate the agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not agree with the Senator that it is a difference in degree only. I can see with perfect clarity a distinction of principle between a general, universal, unlimited discretion and a limited and a specific program. I think there is a very marked distinction in principle between them.

Now, as to the Senator's statement that, after all, this is but a treaty, that is true; but it is a treaty adopting a constitution. It is true, as the Senator says, that Congress can ignore it; but, of course, if we are going on that theory there is no use in any discussion; we need not concern ourselves about this matter at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no, Mr. President; if the Senator will permit me, I am not going on the theory that we are going to violate our word. I only call attention to it because that is what we could do in the case of any treaty we have ever entered into since the beginning of the Government; we could violate it if we wanted to do so, and we could violate it under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I realize that fact. The Supreme Court of the United States has often decided that a treaty has no higher sanction than an act of Congress. There has been some confusion on the subject; but the law of the case is that they are on the same plane, and that the one which prevails is the one which is last in point of time. An act of Congress may be modified by a subsequent treaty, and a treaty may be modified by a subsequent act of Congress. But, Mr. President, we assume that we are going to live up to our obligations. We can violate the Constitution of the United States; I think we do, sometimes; but that does not in any degree lessen the importance of the Constitution. The care with which its provisions were framed was none the less because of the realization of the wise judges of human nature who were its authors and creators that not all men would observe its provisions. This constitution for the world is on exactly the same basis. The only basis upon which it can be discussed before the American people is that the American people are people of their word; that they will keep their agreement; and they ought not to be bound by an agreement made on their behalf that they can not and will not observe. We assume, in discussing this instrument, that when we attach the seal of the Government to it, it is binding upon the Government and upon the people of the United States. In order to escape its provisions, the only avenue is the avenue of dishonor and repudiation; and that is what we are seeking to avoid.

This is not an agreement for a specific program. On the contrary, it is the constitution of an alien tribunal, and a vesting of that tribunal with jurisdiction to make a program of disarmament in such degree, with such relations and proportions among the several nations as to the several elements of army and navy, as the league of nations in its judgment may determine; and the United States never will have an opportunity to pass judgment upon the question of whether or not the plan that is adopted is vital to the interests of the United States.

The situation would be wholly different from an agreement by treaty providing for a specific program of disarmament, agreed to through the constitutional agencies of the United States. It is clearly a delegation of powers of the Government of the United States to another power. We have had debates here as to whether or not the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for instance, and giving it power to regulate railroad rates, was or was not under the terms of the law a delegation of legislative power; and the rule has been laid down that if Congress fixes the measure by which the rates are to be determined, then the commission is a mere agent of Congress; but if we should establish a commission and say to that commission, "You take the power vested by the Constitution in Congress to regulate commerce between the States and operate under it in your discretion," there is not a lawyer in this body who would claim that such an act would be valid. Yet that is an exact parallel to the unlimited, general, universal power over armaments conveyed or attempted to be delegated by the Government of the United States to the league of nations by this constitution. If undertaken, it would be a surrender by the Government of the most essential, vital rights of the people, and of attributes of sovereignty involving the Nation's capacity to take such steps as it sees fit for the safeguarding and defense of its honor and vital interests. It is clearly a delegation of the powers of the Government of the United States to another power, and as such is beyond the capacity of the Government of the United States to enter into.

I will cite some authorities upon that proposition in a moment. The Government can not destroy itself. The trust of government is for the maintenance and protection of the Government. No Government can transfer its powers to some other Government over which it has no control. That is what is attempted to be done by this constitution of a league of nations.

It may be said, of course—and this answers the suggestion made, at least in one aspect, by the Senator from Nebraska—that notwithstanding the obligations of the constitution of the league of nations, Congress may do as it sees fit. That, of course, raises the question as to the enforcement by the league of its decrees. See whether or not Congress can do as it sees fit. See what would be the result, under this constitution of the league of nations, if Congress undertakes to do what it sees fit after this constitution has been adopted. Read the constitution of the league and find out what the consequences will be. You may have the right to put on paper some other program, but what would be the result? The result would be that you would be then in a state of war with every other member of the league, and every other member of the league would have a right to use its military power to coerce Congress and the United States into the observance of the terms of the league.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to repeat, so that the Senator will not misunderstand me, that I do not want to be put in the attitude of advocating the theory that we should go into this proposition and then violate it; but I have called attention to that merely to show to the Senator, to my mind, that under the Constitution the same objection that he is making to this proposal exists in principle as to every treaty that the United States has ever entered into. Suppose we had a treaty with England that required the payment of money and Congress refused to appropriate and did not carry it out, it might result in war with England. If, with England, France and Spain and Holland were interested, it might result in war with them. If we make this agreement and then refuse to carry it out or refuse to obey it, we may still get into war. I concede that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not a question of "may," Mr. President. The language of the constitution of the league of nations is that——

Mr. NORRIS. That we would.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That, ipso facto, it shall be deemed to be an act of war.

Mr. NORRIS. And if we go into it and do not comply with our agreement, we ought to get into trouble.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think myself that if we go into it we ought to get into trouble, and we will get into trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. The history of the world has shown that we have gotten into a good deal of trouble by staying out. We are just getting out of one of the big troubles now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a pretty good policy to apply right here to stay out, keep out, attend to our own business, and let other nations attend to theirs, follow the advice of Washington and the practice of Lincoln, stick by the old, tried traditions of the Government that generations have demonstrated to be wise, and be cautious about throwing them into the discard and accepting some untried nostrum to settle all the affairs of the world for all time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to make this observation, in view of the observation made by the Senator from Nebraska that we have gotten into trouble:

Europe has had about 100 wars in the last century, and we got into just one of them. When you get through with your little league of nations, if Europe should have a hundred wars we would be a party to all of them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it ought to be said, at least, that it is the theory of those who advocate this league of nations that Europe will not have a hundred wars. I may be wrong, and we may be wrong, but it is the object of this league to avoid those wars.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has pretty nearly that many wars now raging. That is somewhat hyperbolical, but it has quite a number of wars going on at the present time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to suggest to the Senator from Washington, in view of the remark of the Senator from Nebraska, that I do not think anybody will claim that the denouncement, as it is called, of a treaty is an act of war or can be considered as a just cause for war of itself. Everybody admits that in the case of any treaty that we make, after the circumstances and conditions surrounding the subject matter have changed and it becomes unsatisfactory to this country, Congress may denounce the treaty and say that we will not be bound by it any longer, but that that ever was construed as an act of war I do not think was ever claimed before by anyone.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not claim that, Mr. President. That was not my claim.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. Then, the Senator, it seems to me, should not claim that the violation of this proposed league-of-nations condition is at all on a parity with a mere denouncement of an existing treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. No; Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the Senator was calling attention to what we would have to do, what the league could require of us, and if we did not do it we would be in war with the other nations under the league. I concede that under the league that might happen.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know; but the Senator from Nebraska, unless I entirely missed the point he was attempting to make, was contending that we are in the same position now if we denounce a treaty, and that therefore it would be no worse for us to go into a league of nations than it is to make a treaty with a nation.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator from Connecticut, I think, failed to get the idea I wanted to convey. That is, in meeting the point made by the Senator from Washington that this is an unconstitutional proposition, that we are surrendering some of our sovereignty, my contention is that we never did enter into a treaty since the beginning of the Government but that the Congress—even the House of Representatives alone, not a part of the treaty-making power—might destroy the treaty and refuse to carry it out.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am compelled to decline to yield for debate between other Senators, notwithstanding it is conducted with all good intentions, because it goes on indefinitely and destroys ultimately the continuity of the argument I am attempting to make. In view of what the Senator has said, if he will pardon me, I will say in this connection that the distinction is between a valid treaty and an invalid treaty. The treaties to which the Senator has referred are assumed to be valid treaties. Now, the argument here is whether or not this treaty is valid. There never has been a treaty in the history of the Government under which we undertook to delegate the power of the Government to any other power. There have been many treaties which bound the Government as to its international affairs; but there never was another treaty in the history of this country, or, so far as I am informed, in the recent history of the world—there have been some, the Achæan League, the Holy Alliance, and others, in former times, all of which proved to be utter failures—but there is no parallel whatever in the history of the United States for the transfer or delegation by the Government of the United States to another tribunal, not of the power to do a specific thing but of the right to assume the unlimited powers of Government within the sphere of its jurisdiction of the subject matters which are defined in this constitution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator forgotten the treaty between the United States and Great Britain regarding armaments upon the waters between Canada and the United States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I have not forgotten it. There is nothing whatever in that treaty that in any way is in conflict with the statement I have just made. There is not any international tribunal determining upon a limitation of armaments between this country and Canada.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In that case the United States and Great Britain mutually agreed as to the armaments and naval preparations on those waters?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The United States gave up its right to put naval armament upon those waters and——

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator evidently has not been listening to what I have been saying.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I have been listening quite closely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator listened closely, he heard me concede that not only would it be legal but it would be desirable if the various nations of the world could get together, as the United States and Great Britain did in the case of our Canadian border, and agree upon a reduction of armaments. I said that that was what we should have done; and the case which the Senator from Nebraska has cited to dispute the argument which I have made is a demonstration of its soundness. It is exactly parallel to what I claim we should do in this case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has been asserting that the legislative power of Congress could not be restricted with regard to armaments; and the treaty to which I refer is a direct restriction upon the power of Congress as to armaments.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all, Mr. President. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania in just a moment. The Senator from Nebraska entirely misapprehends what I said. What I said was that the discretion vested by the Constitution in Congress to determine the extent of the armament of the United States could not be delegated to another tribunal. I did not say that under the Constitution of the United States a certain reduction of armament, or entire disarmament, specified in a treaty could not be made the supreme law of the land.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I merely want to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that the treaty to which he refers, between the United States and Great Britain, has relation to a boundary line between the two countries, and anything relating to a boundary line is always a matter of mutual agreement, and it is no precedent for any other thing than a boundary-line treaty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The President of the United States has said in the speech which he made to the peace congress in vindication of this constitution of a league of nations that force is in the background; but he said it is in the background. In other words, there is a statement of the chief advocate of the constitution of a league of nations that unequivocally and ultimately the execution of this constitution is based not upon decrees or statutes but upon force.

Should Congress refuse to obey the mandate of the league in this respect, then the United States would be subject to coercion by this force so defined by the President. Furthermore, the United States would be subject to the discredit and shame of a violation of a compact solemnly entered into with other nations. This will inevitably be the result in the face of any vital emergency affecting the independence or safety of a high-spirited people such as ours. They will act as they see fit in vital emergencies, both as to raising armies, maintaining navies, and as to the compulsory arbitration of nonjusticiable questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The nations should avoid entering into an agreement which can not be kept, which compromises the interests of the people and subjects them to the shame of an inevitable repudiation of ill-advised, unwise, and unconstitutional agreements.

There should be a common-sense plan among all of the great military powers for a reduction and limitation of armament; but this plan should be specifically worked out in advance of its acceptance. It should be submitted to the Government and to the people of the United States for their approval or rejection; and, when approved, there should be an express reservation of the right of the people of the United States to abrogate the agreement upon due notice and due procedure. This blind commitment of the people to submit their future to the decision of a tribunal in which the United States is only one voice in a multitude, without limitation as to what its decision shall be, or any provision whatever for its discussion, acceptance, rejection, modification, or abrogation under any circumstances by the people, would be a betrayal of the trust and heritage of the Nation. It would mean the end of the high station which both as citizens and as a Republic we have occupied heretofore in the world.

The provisions of the constitution for compulsory arbitration of every question or dispute are contained in articles 12, 13, 15, 16, and 17. These contain many conflicting provisions. There is much repetition. The provisions are loosely expressed, indefinite, and uncertain, but in this mass of undigested and conflicting matter there is contained the indubitable provision for compulsory arbitration of every controversy, whatever its vital nature may be, even though it involve the integrity, honor, or essential interests of the Nation.

Article 12 provides—

> The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy, they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the questions and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council, and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council, and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators, or the recommendation of the executive council.

I suppose the construction given to these various conflicting methods in these different articles would be that they are concurrent, and that it was left to the discretion of the members of the league to adopt one or the other, of course all being equally binding, and article 12, which I have just enunciated, compelling the arbitration of every question as I have already stated, they would all be equal in effect, in so far as they were concurrent and so far as all could be given effect.

Articles 13 and 15 provide entirely different and conflicting rules of arbitration, but do not in any way modify or suspend article 12, just stated. It is unfortunate that such an ambitious document as the proposed constitution of the world should be so loosely and more or less incoherently drawn. But, taking it as it is, the question to be decided in its adoption is whether or not the American people, in a great and vital emergency, such as many times confronted them in the past, will surrender their power of ultimate decision as to the course to be taken and give over in advance their freedom of action in the defense of the Nation. It is true there is contained in another article a provision against "external aggression of territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league." But slaughter of American citizens, invasion of American rights absolutely essential to the maintenance of the Nation, have often occurred without an invasion of territory or an attack upon political independence. This was the case in the war conducted against us on the sea by Germany, and in the brutal murder of our citizens and the confiscation of their property in Mexico. The destruction of our fleet and the control of our sea routes by an enemy power would not come within either of these exceptions.

I want to pause to say these are not exceptions to compulsory arbitration, but simply provisions that in the two cases mentioned the other members of the league agree to protect the interests of all.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator intend to discuss later on the effect of the clause he has just referred to in reference to the preservation of the integrity of the domain of nations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I intend to discuss that, and to call attention to another effect of it.

Mr. REED. Then I do not desire now to anticipate the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Controversies in regard to immigration on the Pacific coast, or elsewhere; of naturalization; of alien ownership of land, neither involve political independence nor territorial aggression; and yet, under this provision, we are required to submit them all to the decision of a tribunal the great overwhelming majority of which is composed of aliens to our interests and institutions.

So as to the Monroe doctrine, when a threat was made to infringe upon it in Venezuela—once in the administration of Cleveland and once in that of Roosevelt. Neither of the conditions just stated were involved, and yet these were attacks upon a fundamental essential policy of the Nation, which ought not to be and can not be—if we are true to the trust which we have received from Cleveland and Roosevelt; and from Washington and from Monroe—transferred to the control of a league of nations or any tribunal established by it. It should remain under the control of the American people.

During all of this stupendous proceeding upon which for weeks and months the attention of the world has been concentrated for the devising of means to prevent future wars and establish universal and perpetual peace, wars and military operations have been in progress; and it is permissible to inquire whether the machinery here proposed would have prevented them, or was necessary to enable the United States to maintain peace. Was the league of nations necessary to enable the United States to preserve peace instead of war in Haiti, or in San Domingo, or in Honduras? Was a league of nations essential to enable the United States to preserve peace when it took Vera Cruz, or when it made war upon Villa in northern Mexico? Furthermore, if a league of nations had been in existence at the time, would it have furnished any resources not already available to the United States for the settlement of the Mexican question and for the preservation of peace between Mexico and the United States? Certainly, so far as force is concerned, the power of the United States as compared with Haiti, or San Domingo, or Mexico, or Honduras, is sufficient to put into operation the humane impulses which are to be gratified by the league of nations; and it is difficult to see what element of value in the establishment of universal and perpetual peace in these countries would be provided by a league of nations not already possessed by the United States to compensate us for the obligations which we are asked to assume in the league by adding to our cares the protection of the territorial integrity of the several members of the league, and the guardianship of the moral, spiritual, and physical well-being of "peoples of central Africa." Furthermore, will the league of nations bring peace to Russia? There is already a league of nations, whose representatives are sitting in Paris along with their associate, the United States. We have not thought enough of this league to join it, but have taken great pains to differentiate ourselves from it, under the name of an associate power; while we have agitated for a league of a different kind, although up to the time of the publication within the last few days of the proposed constitution of the league no explanation was given as to wherein it would differ from the existing league. This existing league has been powerful enough to overcome the greatest monster that ever appeared among the nations—unregenerate Germany, which has been brought to her knees.

If this league has been so diverted from its purposes and so preoccupied in seeking for a permanent and universal league, for the establishment of future peace, that it has not been able to restore present peace, or set up orderly government in central Europe and in Russia, can we expect the proposed future league to accomplish more?

It is not going to be any more powerful than the present one. Why should we expect there is going to be some mysterious virtue in it by which it will do what the present alliance of the righteous nations of the world has failed to do?

If civilized and righteous mankind, organized as it is, acting with a governmental unity never before achieved, has not been able to bring peace in Europe or stop the war which is raging around its feet, can we expect that, as a compensation for the surrender of sovereignty proposed by this constitution, the league for which it provides will establish universal and perpetual peace in the future? On the contrary, with the additional obligations and complications of interest which it will create, will it not multiply the occasions for war? The test of intention is action. Benevolence is best displayed by conduct. The expression of "humane impulses" and of ardent desire for the future good of mankind must be judged by present performance. If the present welfare of the world, including our own people and our own soldiers who are garrisoning occupied territory in Europe, is neglected in the face of the threat of class war and of the existence of international war, can we give credence to protestations of interest in its future welfare? While talking of perpetual peace our voice is drowned in the clamors of war.

Article 10, Mr. President, of this constitution binds the United States as one of the contracting parties to undertake to "preserve," quoting from the instrument, "as against external aggressions the territorial integrity and existing political independence in all States members of the league." This is somewhat ungrammatical but its meaning and intention is perfectly obvious.

The next sentence authorizes the executive council "to advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled."

Mr. REED. The Senator has reached the point about which I rose to ask him a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. Is it the Senator's opinion that under the terms of this league if Ireland was to conclude to set up a separate government it would be a part of the duty of the United States to furnish troops to assist Great Britain in suppressing Ireland?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REED. Now, assume that Canada was to conclude that she wanted to set up a separate government and no longer be controlled by Great Britain, would it not likewise be our duty to furnish soldiers to cross the Canadian line to suppress Canadian patriots who might be undertaking to establish an independent republic on this continent?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, under other articles of this constitution the United States is compelled to take an interest, and the degree and the extent of the interest is undefined, in a war or a threatened war anywhere in the world. So far as the particular language which I just quoted is concerned, and to which the Senator is referring, I should judge, while I stand here on my feet, not having considered the question before, that there would be some question as to the recognition by the Government of the United States of the independence of Canada or of Ireland before we could determine what the obligation of this Government would be in that case under this language.

Another question that would arise would be whether or not the operations of Ireland or of Canada threatened the political independence or constituted an aggression upon the territorial integrity of Great Britain.

Mr. REED. Let me ask another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED. To my mind this is one of the most interesting points in the matter. Let us assume that Russia is organized again under the old autocratic Government, that Poland has been erected as an independent republic, and that a portion of Russia—Russia having been admitted into the league—would want to join Poland and become a part of the Polish Republic, and Poland was to undertake to permit that and to assist in it, that, of course, would be an invasion of the territorial rights of the Russian autocrat. Would not that be a case where it would be plainly our duty, as guarantors against external aggression, to join the Russian autocrat to crush the Russian revolutionists and the Polish Republic?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is not any limit to the combinations of circumstances which can be conceived as entirely possible, and many of them inevitably arising in the future affairs of mankind, in which the United States would be bound to intervene under the language of the constitution which I have just cited. The instances which the Senator from Missouri has suggested are very pertinent and illustrate and illuminate the potentialities of trouble, the probabilities of trouble under these provisions.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Has he compared this particular clause with a similar clause in the Holy Alliance? If he has not, I would like to hand it to him at the proper time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not. It is said by some that this is not an entangling alliance. Some of the advocates of a league of nations have gotten into such a transcendental plane of logic that I have been unable to follow them. They have said that the Monroe doctrine is not affected. I always thought the Monroe doctrine was an American doctrine to be administered by America, and that was one of its essential elements. They propose to transfer its administration to Europe and say it is not affected at all. I have never quite understood the process of thought by which they arrive at that conclusion.

Another very ethereal and difficult—sublimated, as the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] suggests to me—process of reasoning is the assertion that the obligation which we here enter into by this constitution, if it is adopted, to defend every member of the league in all parts of the world and to assume the guardianship of unknown and undesignated peoples of Africa and elsewhere is not an entangling alliance. They seem to argue in some way which I am not able to understand that if you carry on the process of entanglement far enough you finally get to a point where it is not entanglement.

The fact of the case is, Mr. President, that, looking at it from the standpoint that I think the American citizens look at it, the everyday man on the street, the way I look at it, from a common-sense standpoint, no such colossal burden or entangling alliance was ever before conceived in the world, not only in the United States but in the world at large.

Under this obligation the United States assumes, if it is adopted, the protection of every nation which shall become a member of the league. In this we would have the cooperation of other members who were willing and able to fulfill their obligations under this article, but, whether acting jointly with them or alone, or with such of them as would live up to their obligations, the United States would be bound to tax its people and sacrifice its soldiers to make war in behalf of every foreign country, member of the league, when attacked in the manner indicated, either by a member or by a nonmember nation. No such colossal burden or entangling alliance was ever before conceived in the world. Instead of being an instrument of peace it is the fertile seed of war—the dragon's teeth from which, when sown, armed soldiers will spring.

Article 19 places upon the United States the further burden of the joint guardianship with the other members of the league of "colonies and territories which, as a consequence of the late war, have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves," of "certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish monarchy," and "other peoples, especially those of central Africa." The further scope of this guardianship, to which the United States pledges itself by this article, is unlimited and undefined and presumably would be left to the unlimited and undefined discretion of the league of nations. The extent to which this guardianship shall be delegated to a "mandatary state" as agent is left entirely in the discretion of the league.

That means that the degree of responsibility of the guardian nation to be directly exercised by the league itself is left in the discretion of the league. How much responsibility shall be assumed by the mandatary state it is not for us to determine. It is for the league to determine, and when determined by the league we become responsible for it.

The article states—

> The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatary state shall, if not previously agreed upon by the high contracting parties in each case, be explicitly defined by the executive council in a special act or charter.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. LODGE. I want to ask a question to get the Senator's construction. Perhaps he has given it. Does the Senator find that there is anything that tells us whether being appointed a mandatary is compulsory or can it be refused by the nation selected as a mandatary without violating the treaty?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is nothing in the constitution expressly fixing a rule upon that subject. In my opinion the necessary construction of the instrument is that when a nation is designated by the decree of the league, then that decree is upon the same basis as the other decrees of the league, and the nation has no discretion and can not refuse to assume the responsibility.

Mr. LODGE. That is the conclusion I came to; but, of course, like most of the others, it requires a good many vigorous inferences.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think after these various examinations, which are quite necessary, have been made you will find, after all, that where there is a provision that the league can designate one of the nations as a mandatary, and there is nothing else on the subject, the implication is perfectly plain that there is no discretion left in the mandatary itself. In other words, it would require an express provision to enable a member of the league to refuse to obey an order made by the league.

As to these various peoples of the world, for whose future welfare we would thus become responsible, the article states that "the mandatary must be responsible (to the league) for the administration of the territory, subject to conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience or religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses, such as the slave trade, the arms traffic, and the liquor traffic." Other obligations in addition to these are also stated. Not satisfied with the service to mankind, greater than all others, which has been rendered by the establishment of a government without class, with equal opportunity, and subject to the control of the people, in the United States, and with that protection which we have extended under the Monroe doctrine to other nations in the Western Hemisphere, we thus undertake, practically unsolicited and unsought, to extend our responsibilities and cares into the uttermost parts of the earth. The expense, labor, and sacrifice of life which will be the direct result of the performance of such an obligation on the part of the United States are past calculation. The indirect injury, however, to the spirit of our Government in thus assuming, along with others, a despotism, however benevolent we may conceive it now to be, over large portions of the world is far more sinister than the losses which we will inevitably suffer directly in men and money. It is an insidious menace, undermining the principles of the localization of government, of nationality, and substituting for them the principle of despotic internationalism, in which the self-determination of all peoples will be merged.

Correspondingly, while assuming obligations of government in Asia, Africa, and Europe, this article, at once, by the same terms, surrenders to Asia, Africa, and Europe American policies which have been the prize jewels in the American diadem of state. Emergencies which have arisen in the past may arise in the future. The expulsion of Maximilian from Mexico, the protection of Venezuela from Germany and Great Britain, the freeing of Cuba from the despotism and cruelty of Spain under Lincoln, Roosevelt, Cleveland, and McKinley, in pursuance of the famous policy of Monroe, would have been impossible under a league of nations. All of these issues instead of being decided by the United States, in the light of the high ideals of these traditional doctrines would be left to the administration of an alien tribunal, established under the league of nations.

What the outcome would be no man can tell. Whatever it would be, it would be the decision which at the time corresponded with the motives and beliefs of the majority of the foreign members of the tribunal. This, of course, means the end and obsequies of American determination and control of these matters.

The Monroe doctrine is an American doctrine. If its administration is transferred to the congregated nations of the Old World, it ceases to be a Monroe doctrine. Its application, construction, and existence would then be dependent upon the mercy of the very nations against whose interests it was promulgated. Its fate can easily be foreseen.

I have in my desk verified, detailed statements of continuing outrages upon Americans lawfully in Mexico—the murder of our citizens and the confiscation and looting of their property. For six years we have allowed this, in one form or another, to proceed. It is to be presumed that some day the self-respect and honor of the American people in these matters will be protected by their Government. However, if the constitution of the league of nations is adopted, our Government will have surrendered forever its power to protect its citizens in Mexico and will have committed them unequivocally to the judgment and discretion of the other nations of the world. Our citizens may continue to be the victims of Mexican disorder, and their blood will cry in vain to their country for help. There can be no help, for the power to protect its citizens—the chief and primary function of government—will have been transferred to another.

Surely the "humane impulses" of the administration can be exercised in the performance of our obligations toward the small countries of the Caribbean and of Mexico by the most powerful Nation in the world without the aid of a league of nations. If we have tears to shed over the woes of mankind, we can shed them without stint, and are free to put into effect at will such measures as our benevolence may dictate within the traditional sphere of our influence. If we desire perpetual peace in America—and by that I mean in all the Americas—do we need a league of nations to enforce it? Have we not already in the union of the States, each one built from the sacrifices and toil and from the brains and courage of its inhabitants, a league of nations amply able to guarantee such peace in the western world as our people may deem wise and just?

The purpose of the league is stated to be universal and perpetual peace. The question to be determined by the American people is whether the establishment of these additional obligations and interests will not inevitably make for war where heretofore we have been able in the exercise of our sovereignty and under the benevolent policies of our country to preserve peace. Furthermore, there are some prices that are too high to be paid even for peace. Our fathers could have had peace in 1776 at the price of liberty, but they chose war and were aroused by Henry's cry, "Is peace so sweet or life so dear as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery?" They could have had peace in 1860 by the sacrifice of the Union, but they chose war, war without measure, to save that Union which was the palladium of free institutions.

Who can say that the sacrifices of any of the heroes who fell for the preservation of the Union in the North were too great a price to pay for the countless blessings which have come to their children and to the world, bought with their blood? We could have had peace in 1898, when the anguished cry of helpless Cuba, ground under the cruelties of Weyler, fell upon our ears. But we chose war, and who can say that the freeing of these people upon our immediate borders from tyranny and persecution and the establishment of security, industry, and order was not worth the price we paid? We could have had peace in 1917 by supinely surrendering our rights upon the high seas and abandoning the trade and commerce of our people, essential not only to prosperity but to national existence. Had we been willing to follow the advice of pacifists and take the coward's part of servile submission to the orders of a monster among the nations, to betray the trust of Government and leave our murdered citizens unavenged, there would have been no immediate war. But our Government in its essential functions would have been ultimately destroyed, because its essential function is the protection of the honor, the lives, and the rights of its citizens.

France might have had peace in the fateful days of August, 1914, when her soil was invaded and her homes devastated by the Huns, if she had been willing to pay the price. That price would have been slavery of her people, the destruction of her civilization, and with it the civilization of the world, but, to the honor of France, she chose war.

In the search for universal and perpetual peace those who advocate it at any price make no distinction between the war of conquest and lust of Germany and the holy and righteous war of defense of France. On the contrary, both now and at all times through the war, the principal advocates of peace at any price seemed rather to favor the cause of Germany than that of our own country and its allies. They seem now to be desirous of saving the vandals of devastated France and Belgium from retributive justice. Instead of peace by the victory of the allies they seemed to favor a peace of submission to the conquest of the Huns.

If their views had prevailed, the great principle of the protection of our rights and the lives of our citizens from violent aggression would have been abandoned. Germany, perhaps, would have triumphed in Europe, and, having consolidated the resources of her enemies there, would have carried her campaign of conquest to our shores. Who except the pacifists and those who then favored peace at any price can say that we should have made such a poltroon peace? Who except the cowards that would seek safety in nonresistance can say that the victorious war which we waged with our allies was not wiser than the inevitable war which we would later have been compelled to wage unaided if we had remained neutral while Germany absorbed the resources of France and England and consolidated them to her purposes? Universal and perpetual peace is much to be desired, but only when it can be obtained in honor and without the surrender of the vital interests of the Nation. Furthermore, there are occasions when the vital interests and honor of the Nation are not immediately involved, but when plans and movements are being set afoot for purposes of aggression which, if not checked, will inevitably menace both honor and safety, when wisdom dictates that such movements shall be checked in the beginning—by war, if necessary, as a last resort—rather than to allow the menace to develop to such proportion as will call for greater sacrifices in the end.

The national liberty of action to determine and carry out these policies is the most essential attribute of national sovereignty. All this would be surrendered by the constitution of the league of nations, and the destinies of the American people in all such crises would be taken from their own control and vested in the league. It can not be done, at least, in silence. It must be known, and the American people must be advised of this proposed surrender of their liberties.

It is a curious circumstance, Mr. President, that the South—and I speak of it as one of the South—which failed in its great effort for independence in 1865, having obtained control of the Government of the Union, now is about to achieve the sardonic triumph of depriving the North of its independence and setting up over it a supergovernment. The North conquered the South by force of arms; the South now seems to be in a fair way of conquering the North by a diplomatic surrender of its liberties. The South having fought the most heroic war, in many respects, in history, and having lost and been subjected to the domination of the North, now apparently has no objection to go still further and subject both the South and the North to the control of an international government. It would, indeed, be a sardonic triumph. Will the North agree to this extension of the idea of the Union to include the alien nations of the Old World? The Union, as it was idealized by Lincoln, was not only in its essence the federation of the States, but, equally as important, it was the sovereignty and independence of the United States. Without sovereignty and independence the Union of the States loses its soul and becomes a mere piece of machinery. It was for the independence and sovereignty of the States that Washington gave himself, and whose achievement placed him at the very pinnacle of human greatness. To surrender that now would be to destroy the living work of all of our mighty dead. To now place in the hands of the council of the league of nations, all but one foreigners, nearly all of them speaking an alien language, born and bred to different traditions, accustomed to a diverse environment, with different ideals and varying interests and motives, that control over the sovereign action of the American people for which so many of our precious heroes have labored would be as though it were a pitiful murder of the very soul of our fathers in their own house, builded by their hands. It would be in its result the same thing as treason, because it would be a transfer of allegiance.

The most active advocates of this transfer of ultimate control of our most cherished rights to a foreign tribunal tell us—and this is one of the most frequent arguments—that we need fear nothing, for we will have friends among the other representatives on the tribunal who will protect our interests and sympathize with our aspirations. This, in itself, is a confession of the betrayal of the great trust of government, because it is a confession that the decision of these matters, instead of depending upon the American people themselves determining their own fate, depends upon the friendship or benevolence of an alien tribunal. No doubt the American people could have depended upon the wisdom, disinterestedness, loyalty, and honor of Washington. No other in human affairs has ever been more to be trusted. It was suggested by some that he be given a crown, but the sons of liberty, though they loved Washington and trusted him without limit, realized the immortal principle that liberty is too precious a thing to be trusted to the power of any man or set of men. And so it was that they denied this power even to Washington and vested it in the representatives of the people, under the people's control, subject to the people's retirement, and set up a Constitution which is a model of checks and balances, by which the powers of government are divided, one department balancing another, and various procedures operating as checks upon each other. Many despots have been benevolent, and some of them loved their people, and yet they ruled as despots. Have the American people come to the point when, as confessed by the advocates of the league of nations, who say that in various contingencies we can depend upon the good will of the alien members of the league—they say we can depend upon the friendship of the Anglo-Saxon members of the league and others—but have we come to the point that we must submit our fate to the charity, to the good will, or to the benevolence of alien powers? That is what is proposed. Understandingly our people will not do it; and if they do so, it can not be binding upon their children. Those children, when they come into control of the affairs of the Nation, when emergencies arise, will repudiate the surrender of their liberties, assert their ancient rights, even though at the price of war. This is inevitable, and the vice of such an obligation is that it leads to repudiation, to dishonor, and to war, although it is done in the name of high ideals and perpetual and universal peace.

Mr. President, the powers vested in the league of nations by this constitution necessarily must be exercised by men. If we may suppose that the men who will first be chosen to act for the nations upon this league will be both good and wise, and that we can trust our great policies of state, of peace, security, and the honor of the United States in their hands, what guaranty can the advocates of the league give us that the changing personnel of its council, or its delegates, or a majority of them, will continue to be wise, benevolent, charitable, or humane? Good and great men have been scarce in the history of the world; and why should we assume that the league will be dominated only by the good and the great? The teachings of statesmen in the past have been to subject the officials of government to rule and to law, for the very reason that the weaknesses of human nature can not be trusted with discretion and unlimited power. The constitution of the league of nations proposes an opposite principle, where the most comprehensive powers ever delegated to an official body are vested in a number of delegates and in an executive council without checks or balances or definite rules or limitations; where the legislative, executive, and judicial power over the world is consolidated in a single body of men, with no rules of procedure except such as they make for themselves, the wisdom of their action being left entirely to the people of conflicting interests, of varying degrees of intelligence and civilization of the several nations, and to the characters of the delegates they may choose. The history of the world shows that this dependence is frail and uncertain. Inevitably this unlimited discretion will be exercised in accordance with the motives, interests, environment, tradition, ideals of the constituted members of the league, and to this heterogeneous mass of controlling influences the destinies of America will be submitted. These destinies are now under the absolute, unrestricted, unlimited control of the people whose destinies they are and who, consequently, have no motive to betray—because it would be a betrayal of themselves—acting under the set and clearly limited rules established by the classic phrases of the Constitution of the United States.

Under the proposed loosely drawn, inconsistent, ill-defined constitution of the world these destinies will be submitted to the control of nations, however civilized, humane, and enlightened they may be, who have no personal, direct interest in our destinies, but who, on the contrary, have destinies of their own to guard, and in whose guardianship we admire them for looking out for the interests of their own people, which in many aspects are in direct opposition and conflict with our own.

The Government of the United States has no constitutional power to make a treaty transferring any of its sovereign powers to an alien tribunal. No treaty which takes from the various departments of the American Government, established by the Constitution, the jurisdiction therein conferred and transfers it to an extraconstitutional body, and particularly to an alien body, and particularly an alien body composed of foreign sovereign nations, is valid. Chief Justice Taney, in deciding the case of Doe et al. v. Braden (16 How., pp. 635–657), said:

> The treaty is therefore a law made by the proper authority and the courts of justice have no right to annul or disregard any of its provisions unless they violate the Constitution of the United States.

Here is a clear implication that courts have the power to annul any treaty which violates the Constitution of the United States. The same views were expressed by Justice Swayne in the case of the Cherokee tobacco, Eleventh Wallace, page 616, where he said:

> It need hardly be said that a treaty can not change the Constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument.

Also Justice Field expressed his views to the same effect in the case of Geofroy v. Riggs (133 U. S., 258), where he "declared," as stated by Second Butler, Treaty-Making Power, page 392:

> That while the treaty-making power of the United States extended to all proper subjects of negotiation, and is in terms unlimited except by those restraints which are found in the instrument itself against the action of the Government, or of its departments, or from those arising from the nature of the Government itself and that of the States, it would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize what the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of one of the States.

As stated by Prof. Woolsey:

> The treaty-making power must be exercised for the purpose of preserving national life, and not for destroying it.

We are told by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Taft that the war in which we are now involved, and in which we do not seem to be able to make peace, was a crusade for the benefit of the world. We are told that we went to war, not for any selfish interests of our own, but for the benefit of mankind at large. Crusades and conscript armies do not go well together. Governments have no moral right to sacrifice the lives of their soldiers, and to levy compulsory taxes upon their people, merely to gratify a feeling of benevolence toward the world in general. This country, the people of the United States, would never have supported the war with Germany as they did, with such unanimity and heroism as they exhibited, upon any such basis of idealism as a crusade for the interests of the world at large. We went to war, and contributed of our substance and of our blood, to protect and defend the vital interests and ultimate independence of the United States itself, and no Government has a right to plunge its people into a war for any but a similar purpose.

It has been said that our soldiers in France were fighting for the 14 points, and yet every one of them that has ever been questioned on the subject was extremely doubtful as to what the 14 points were. The fact of the case is that the soldiers went to France because most of them were conscripted and drafted; and they exhibited there, with those that volunteered—and they were all eager in the service of the Nation—a heroism, in the face of a new species of warfare which the world had never before experienced, which added new glory to the already bright pages of American history. What were those men fighting for? Why, when they went into battle they went in with a cry, as though it were the shriek of some note of the Marseillaise, of "Lusitania!" They went into battle against the Germans because they were fighting for their country and their country's flag. Their object in that war was not to carry on a crusade, but it was to defeat the Germans.

Mr. President, there is an internationalism abroad in the land—an internationalism of the élite and an internationalism of the proletariat rampant.

There is internationalism at the top and internationalism at the bottom, and both are moving forward through different means and methods to the same destination. Germany is supporting both. The idealists and peace-at-any-price pacifists are approaching by one road. The Industrial Workers of the World and their Bolshevist allies throughout the world are approaching upon another. Both lead to the same destination—an international and despotic government of the world. Both involve the surrender of nationality and the setting up of a centralized despotism. It must be a despotism, because no government in whose discretion is centered the ultimate control of the affairs of the whole world can be free.

This movement is backed with great resources and ample funds. Such organizations as the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, endowed by a subject of Great Britain, with resources acquired in the United States, are among its most powerful supporters. These great organizations are able to employ, at high prices, influential lecturers, including even an ex-President of the United States.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator if we are to understand that statement literally?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Absolutely.

Mr. REED. That is, that ex-President Taft is under the pay of those organizations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Such organizations as I have referred to.

The founder of the society which I have just mentioned—the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace—is an open advocate of the reunion of the United States with Great Britain—in fact, he has written a book on the subject—and of the amalgamation of our Government with the British Empire. The organization of a league to enforce peace is but an enlargement of this conception. It is the same principle and a part of the same program. In a dispatch on yesterday from London it is truly stated:

The American and British viewpoints are totally different. America gets nothing out of the war except a large share of responsibility in world affairs, while Great Britain gets a powerful ally in the maintaining of peace. The British insist that America is morally forced to assume this responsibility.

Another explanation of the news that comes to us of the favoring of a league of peace by Europe, which no doubt is astounded that it is put forth by America.

I want to point out now what we are getting into.

Under the provisions of article 16 of the proposed constitution, upon any refusal on the part of the United States, as a member of the proposed league, to comply with the covenants of compulsory arbitration of all matters, as set forth in article 12, it "shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league which hereby undertakes immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or official relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between other nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not." In other words, once we have entered into this fatal covenant, which contains no provision for our withdrawal from it, our failure to obey the decrees of the league, or of tribunals constituted under the terms of its constitution, automatically makes us an outcast and a pariah among the nations of the world, and plunges us into a state of war with all the other nations composing the league.

And yet this is the covenant that we are asked to make by a number of college professors, and by Miss Julia Lathrop and Miss Jane Addams—excellent women, who have done a devoted work in the world, deserving of the thanks and consideration and gratitude of our people, and yet who have not had any experience which qualifies them to frame a constitution for the government of the world.

This proposal is also advocated by a number of college presidents, one of whom a short time ago I noticed criticizing some remarks that I had made in the Senate in opposition to a league of nations which, by its advocates upon the floor, was compared with the Government of the United States, and that is a very favorite comparison of its advocates. They want to set up over the world a government such as that which our fathers set up over the States of the American Union, and subject our Nation to those powers which the Federal Government exercises over the States. This great college professor—I think it was the president of Harvard University—said that the constitution of a league of nations did not have anything more to do with the Monroe doctrine than it had to do with the price of sugar. He seemed to think that it did not have anything to do with the price of sugar, and that shows the impractical mind of many of the advocates of a league of nations. It has a great deal to do with the price of sugar, because the purpose of such a league is to prevent war, and the price of sugar is one of the most fertile causes of war. We had war in Cuba over the price of sugar. Sugar is one of the standard bases of food; and every war that the world ever saw, in its ultimate analysis, was based upon a controversy over the food of mankind. It has to do with the price of beans. If beans had been cheap and plentiful in Mexico, we would have been saved the war which has ravaged that unhappy land. Beans are one of the principal articles of their diet.

This college president said, however, that if these objections which were made to the proposed league of nations were valid, another one could be framed which would not be subject to the objections. Evidently he was accustomed, as so many college presidents are—I used to have an idea that they were all filled with the wisdom of Socrates—to hiring men who know things, like business managers of great business institutions. They have been so accustomed to being able to employ men who could teach the varied learning of the world that if you puncture a league of nations full of holes they have not the slightest doubt that they can hire somebody who can frame up a good one for you.

This is the frightful compact, Mr. President, that we are asked to make—to surrender our destinies to the league, with the awful penalty of immediate war upon us by all the combined nations composing its membership, should we decline in any respect to obey the decrees of the league, however destructive they may be of our happiness or prosperity.

This is the substitute we are asked to make for the peaceful and happy state under which we have lived during the greater part of our national career in peace and amity with the world. We have had but few wars, and have avoided war by avoiding the cause of war. We are now asked to avoid war by multiplying immeasurably the cause of war, and by surrendering to a heterogeneous league of diverse races our sovereign rights and privileges. By such a course the independence which was preserved by the patriotism of our people and the heroism of our soldiers in the fighting which has just been concluded will be surrendered, and the guaranties of peace which victory has afforded us will be mortgaged to every nation in the world.

If this constitution is ratified without being submitted to the American people in a political campaign, where it shall have been made an issue, and upon which they will have had an opportunity to render judgment in an election, then self-government in America will have disappeared. We are facing an abyss and the American people should not be led into it blindfolded. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The occupants of the galleries will desist from any demonstrations.

DEMOBILIZATION OF TROOPS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to read a letter to the Senate as the basis of a few remarks I desire to make; and I read this letter because it is typical of hundreds of letters that I am receiving and that I assume other Senators are receiving. It is dated from a small town in my State:

DEAR MR. REED: Just a few minutes of your time. I know you have many such requests as I am going to ask of you, but this is my first one. It is this:

I have a boy who offered his services to the Government in August, 1918, and I was glad of it; but listen: The war is over. We have always employed or worked four or five hands. Two of the boys are in the Army; the others have quit and gone to farming; but none we get are experienced hands like my boy and the one that was drafted and is not out yet. This is the strange part of it: They are not working at all, or practically so.

Listen here: I got a letter from my boy to-day saying he was not working two hours a day—just lying around waiting for some one to die, as his job is in the laboratory in the autopsy of the dead. Here I am, working 12 or 14 hours a day, and my partner is doing the same. Do you think this is a fair proposition? I have done three men's work for the last two years, and they will not let my boy out now to help me do my work on the farm. Now I am needing my boy to help me the very worst kind. Here in the spring, when we need help so bad, the farmers need this and that thing done, such as we were called on the other day. We have pumps to repair, cars to load, fertilizers to unload, cream separators to deliver, and no help; and my boy is lying down there at Camp Jackson and has not done 15 minutes' work in three days. It puts me out with the Government, or with the Army officers, or wherever the blame lies.

Then he makes a request that this matter be investigated; and his son is at Camp Jackson. That is a letter from an old farmer, not always grammatical but full of good sense. I have another letter, that I am not going to read, which is from a private in the Air Service, who states that he has been making every effort to get released, and that he is there under great disadvantage, great loss, and he can not get released.

Mr. President, this war has been over now for a good while. Peace ought to have been made before this; and if we had been making peace instead of making contracts for the future, if we had been settling our own disputes instead of undertaking to provide for the settlement of all disputes that may hereafter arise, I think we would have been much nearer a final settlement of the peace conditions. But waiving that, it is certainly true that the keeping of the American boys in these camps in America is absolutely inexcusable.

I said the other day, and I repeat, that I believe the economic loss in labor plus the expense of the support in camp of each one of these men is not less than $100 a month, and a million men in camp would mean a hundred million dollars a month. We are being asked to tax our people to the very limit, and we are taxing them to that limit. We are cutting down the resources of the country and the power of production by keeping as consumers something like three-quarters of a million men, instead of turning loose that number of men and making producers of them. It is a piece of stupidity without parallel, and, I say unqualifiedly, without excuse, and the sooner it is remedied the better for our country.

How do you suppose a farmer feels who said to his boy 12 or 15 months ago, "God bless you, my son; go and give your time ,and, if need be, give your life, for your country, and I and your mother will try to struggle along and take care of this farm and keep it going," when he knows that his boy has been kept in camp 12 or 14 months; that he not only has not seen Europe but that it is now certain that he never will be sent to Europe, and it has been certain for months that he will not be sent to Europe—how do you think that farmer feels when he sees his fields going to waste and his business going to destruction while his son is confined in a camp, doing nothing but responding once in a while to roll call or turning out on dress parade?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have had in the last 60 days more than a thousand letters telling the same story related in the letter just read by the Senator. When he pictures the home of the old farmer whose boy has been carried away it recalls a letter that I received yesterday from a young wife on a farm. There is a scarcity of labor in Mississippi. This young woman's husband was unable to get labor to work his little farm last year. The season is passing very rapidly. They must begin to prepare for the crop there during the present month if they are to make a crop during this year. The boy is in one of the camps in the United States. He is not needed, but I am told by the department that they can not let him out just now.

I am glad the Senator has called attention to the matter, and I wish it were possible to do something to urge the War Department to perform its duty in regard to turning the men out, as well as paying them what the Government owes them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am getting tired, as far as I am concerned, of wasting time with the War Department. I know something of what is the matter, because I happen to have heard a conversation almost immediately after the war closed when members of the War Department were asked what was going to be done to stop the mobilization of troops who were then on the way to camps, and what was going to be done to release the soldiers who were in the camps; and at that time the statement was made, in substance, that great care would be taken lest the labor market should be overcongested by the return of these troops, and an elaborate scheme had been worked out to release first those of particular occupations, and then those of other particular occupations. Then the reason for these releases appeared a few days later when a certain distinguished labor leader protested that already the country was being overrun with a surplusage of labor.

I do not think it is difficult at all to tell who is telling the War Department how and when to release the soldiers from the Army. I think it is time that Congress took some effective action to compel the demobilization of troops in this country. I think any department that will keep nearly three-quarters of a million men lying in camp, at great expense to the Government, at great inconvenience to themselves, and at great loss to the country, after war has been over as long as this war, is incompetent or worse than incompetent. It is time to end this business. It is time to speak with indignation, because the people of this country are feeling an indignation.

The idea of somebody sitting down here at the War Department, whether he is a Secretary of War or whatever he may be, and saying that he proposes to release these American citizens in such a manner and in such form that the labor market will not be congested! As though you could benefit the labor market by compelling the labor of the country to support hundreds of thousands of idle men, for in the last analysis the burden for the support of all must come from those who produce!

I suggested at the time of the conversation I referred to if the War Department could just get it into its little head that the American people had some sense and knew something about managing their own affairs we would get along better. I suggested that it is an absolute truth, although, of course, very much doubted in these days, that the citizen who holds no office at all has as much brains in his head as the individual who happens to fill a public position; that the boy who knew enough to run a great business, as many of them did, and entered the Army as a private because he was a patriot, might actually have as much sense about his own business affairs as some lieutenant of the Regular Army who never had earned a dollar in his life, who started into West Point at 17 years of age and has been on the Government pay roll ever since, and who never had any experience in life. If they would simply say to these boys, who are American citizens and who represent the average of American intelligence and American energy and American thrift and American brains, "You can go," they would not need to watch where they went or how they went. It would be found that they actually had sense enough to go back to their homes and to their fathers and their mothers and their wives and their sisters and their sweethearts and their jobs, and that they did not need the tutelage, they did not need the guardianship, of a Secretary of War or a Chief of Staff or a Lieut. Blank, whatever his name may be.

Mr. President, I have got very great respect for these gentlemen personally, but there is a theory abroad to-day that the people of the United States do not know anything, that all the wisdom in the land has been concentered here in Washington, that the most of that has been concentered in a few departments; and yet in the majority of cases the men in those departments could not hold a first-class job in a responsible business concern in the country.

I am simply trying to appeal for the doctrine of letting the American people have a chance to attend to their own affairs. I am appealing for the doctrine that American boys should be allowed to return from these American camps.

Now, I propose to make an appeal for another class of men. There are across the seas nearly 2,000,000 American boys. The war is over. It is finally over. If it is not finally over, then Foch and Haig and Pershing and all the statesmen of Europe are madmen or worse than madmen—they are idiots—for they have had Germany by the throat since the 11th day of November; they have had her at their mercy; they have had their bayonets pressed against the breast of Germany, and in a position at any moment to destroy her; and if at this time they have left her in a position so that the armies of France and of England and of Belgium and of Italy can not take care of that situation, then they have been acting, I say, like madmen; and I am sure they have not so acted.

If this is true, why should our troops be kept there longer? If you tell me it is the lack of transportation, I ask this question: If we could send 300,000 men each month to Europe through seas that were infested with submarines and that were sown with mines, through seas that were so dangerous that every vessel had to be convoyed and had to run upon a zigzag course, why can we not, when the seas are open and clear from all danger, return them as rapidly as we sent them?

I have a letter in my possession from a colonel, a colonel who went into this war from the ranks of civil life, who, knowing or anticipating the war before most men did, prepared himself for it, educated himself for it, qualified himself in the highest degree—a man who never flinched from any difficulty, and who never shirked any danger, who never protested against any hardship as long as the war lasted. I received a letter from him a few days ago in which he said: "So far as I am concerned, so far as the officers are concerned, of course we are quartered in a way that is reasonably satisfactory; but you will be surprised," said this colonel, "when I say to you that, probably, our common soldiers are suffering as many hardships or greater than they were during the war, because," he said, "our transportation, which we had largely borrowed from France and England, has been withdrawn from us, and we are actually finding it difficult to get our supplies; and our men are staying here during the winter months, when the ground is sodden and the air damp, when the rain is pouring down in torrents day after day, when sickness is rife, and when these men are enduring the greatest kind of hardships;" and, he added, "if anyone believes that these troops want to be kept here a single minute for any other purpose than to force a just and honorable peace that individual is mistaken."

Mr. President, I have appeals sent to me every day, as do other Senators, that would melt a heart of stone—the appeal of mothers for their sons, of mothers whose hearts ache, whose eyes are blinded with tears for the want of a sight of the gallant fellows they gave birth to and whom they sent abroad in the service of their country. They want them back home, and they ought to be brought back home. I have appeals from fathers who say that their business is going to ruin—the business in which their son was one of the chief pillars and stays. They want their sons back to help save their business. I have appeals from widows for their sons to be sent back in order that they may preserve the estate that needs their care.

You can go to the War Department from now until you are black in the face, and you will get the curt answer of some military gentleman that they have a general order that can not be varied from. A general order may be necessary, but I protest that the keeping of this American Army abroad another day is a wrong upon that Army; that it is a wrong upon this country; that they should be returned at once; and the 60 or 90 days that have been frittered away are 60 or 90 tragic days filled with heartaches, filled with loss of time, and filled with a loss of money.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have very great sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Missouri with respect to the men who are in this country. I do not know any reason why we should have half a million or three-quarters of a million in camp in this country long after the war. As far as the men abroad are concerned, can the Senator advise us whether the tonnage at the command of the Government will enable us to bring the boys back from abroad more quickly than they are being brought?

Mr. REED. I can not advise the Senator whether the tonnage at the command of the Government will bring them back, but I can say that a Government that could get plenty of tonnage to carry men to Europe ought to be able to get tonnage to bring them back, and that if I were dealing with Great Britain, that has at its command so much tonnage, after Great Britain was asking and receiving of us all she receives from us, I would have the boats.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will recall that we were something over a year in sending the Army across, taking them to Europe, with all this tonnage at our command.

Mr. REED. I will answer the Senator. The Senator was not in when I began my remarks. I said we had taken them over at the rate of 250,000 to 300,000 a month, and we ought to be able to bring them back at as rapid a rate.

Mr. WALSH. That would take some eight months, would it not?

Mr. REED. Yes; but we are not bringing them back at that rate, and we are not approximating that rate. As nearly as I can make out from the statements in the newspapers, instead of bringing them home on passenger ships we are trying to transform or transmute some freighters into ships to bring them back. We were told—I saw it in the papers the other day, and I assume that it is correct—that in an interview the Secretary of War said it took 49 days to change one of these freighters into a passenger vessel.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is a member of the Military Affairs Committee and I am not, but I got the impression from what I learned about the matter that much of the deplorable condition that undoubtedly exists at the debarkation port of Brest is due to the fact that the returning armies are congregated there in such a number that they are unable to get ships with which to take them out.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think it is true, although I did not get it as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I got it in the newspapers through an interview with Senator OWEN that they have a very large number of men at Brest, which is said to be a very bad place to keep men, and they have not ships with which to move them. But the fact that they brought the men to Brest not having the ships to move them does not excuse the failure to have the ships.

It is the business to have these ships, and I repeat if we could get them over at the rate of 300,000 a month through seas that were infested with submarines and sown with mines we ought to be able to get them back through seas that are open and not in danger. They are engaged, according to this newspaper statement, and I think it is correct, in transforming a lot of old freight ships into passenger ships, and the statement purporting to come, as I said a moment ago, from the Secretary of War was that it took 49 days to change one of these ships; and when you have it changed I will venture the assertion that you will not have a very good ship to haul human beings in.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. But why is it that we do not get the ships and bring the boys back that we had to take them over? Why do we not demand them? Why do we not get them back as a right? We have certainly done enough for France and England in this war, and we are certainly doing enough now when we are controlling the price of American foodstuffs and American products for their benefit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the able Senator from Missouri said that in a letter which he had received from some commanding colonel there was a statement that the transports were being taken from us. May I ask the Senator if he understood from that——

Mr. REED. The Senator misunderstood me. Transportation in France—the motor transports, the cars, and things that haul goods over there in France.

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, the letter refers to the interior transportation in France, not transports?

Mr. REED. Yes; transportation in France was the term I used.

Mr. LEWIS. I was interested to know what that did refer to; but I nevertheless ask the Senator if he does not recognize that many of the ships which we were permitted to use for taking the men over while we were at war were ships of the countries which are generally spoken of as our allies, and now that those countries are at peace they have taken those ships for their own uses, and they are wholly out of our command, and we are powerless to control them, and if that is not one of the exceeding difficulties we are now contending with?

Mr. REED. I can not tell you just what our difficulties are, because it has been the policy of the State Department to keep as profoundly secret as possible from Congress many important facts that Congress ought to have known. So I can not tell you exactly what the situation is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. But I make this remark, if the Senator will let me finish the sentence. I have already made it. When we count the obligations that France and England are under to the United States and the obligations they are daily being placed under by the furnishing to them of foodstuffs and of raw material and the control of prices for their benefit, but at the expense of the American producer, I know they would furnish these ships if the proper kind of demand was made, and it ought to be made mighty quickly.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask my friend what method would the Senator from Missouri suggest to enforce France and Britain to put their ships at our command? I should like to have it myself.

Mr. REED. If the Senator wants to know, I will tell him what I would tell them if I was running this business. Instead of writing leagues of nations, with perpetual peace in them, instead of spending my time talking about some scheme that is to concern the civilization of the future, I would say to the gentlemen running those countries: "I need some ships. I need them now. I want you to give them to us. I believe you will give them to us." And if they did not give them to us I would see to it that every benefit and advantage they have in the American market was taken away the day after to-morrow. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries are totally disregarding the rule of the Senate. The Chair did not make the rule; the Chair does not approve of it; but it is the rule of the Senate that no marks of approval or disapproval can come from the occupants of the galleries; and it will be the very painful duty of the Chair to clear the galleries if this demonstration occurs again.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that this difficulty was foreseen by a number of Senators before ever we began to transport our Army to France. When the first appropriation bill was passing through this body with the increased appropriation for our Army, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was, I believe, the first one who brought this subject to the attention of the Senate. He insisted at that time that there should be a distinct provision put upon the appropriation bill that would require England to furnish just as many ships to return our soldiers as she furnished to take them over. If that had been done, this difficulty never would have arisen at this time.

I wish to say to the Senator I am told there are three English ships put at our disposal for the transportation of all the troops we have on the other side to this side. I do not know whether that number is correct or not, but I have seen it stated in the press, and I have also had an official of the War Department make the same statement to me.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me one suggestion, though he ought not to be interrupted, I am only anxious that the War Department shall have no further blame upon it than it should bear, and that wherever it is not responsible for any particular condition that fact should be made known and plain to the American people. May I ask my able friend from Missouri if he contemplates this thought, that while it would be an act of goodness and justness for Britain to give us any shipping she has, must we not consider that she is using many of her own ships to take her own soldiers back to their homes in Australia, in Canada, and other portions of the globe, and that that probably consumes much of her ships which heretofore she had at our service to bring soldiers over to France?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator state that as a fact?

Mr. LEWIS. I am merely stating from newspaper report. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not going to sit here all the afternoon admonishing the occupants of the galleries to obey the rule of the Senate. If this occurs again the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. LEWIS. I am compelled to reply to the able Senator that I read that in the public report, as that is the only way, of course, we can get any news touching what Britain does. If it be true, we have to consider it; if it be not true, then it will probably mean that Britain has some ships which if accessible it would not be inappropriate for this country to ask the use of. I was only calling this fact to the attention of the Senator that he might consider it in connection with his presentation of a very worthy subject.

Mr. REED. I did not mean when I asked the Senator if he stated that as a fact to tell us the source of his information, but I wanted to know whether the Senator understood it to be a fact, because of the manner in which he put the question to me; it was rather hypothetical and I did not know how to reply to it.

Now, my understanding is that Great Britain is using her ships and that she is using some of them to transport her soldiers back home, and she is using a great many of them in commerce; that Great Britain, unlike the United States, has been very forward looking and has been prepared to invade all countries with her commerce the moment her vessels were released.

Mr. President, I have also been informed by the vice chairman of the Military Affairs Committee recently that Mr. Baker said that by April we would be bringing over our troops at the rate of 300,000 a month. I hope that prophecy will turn out better than some others we have had, but if we are going to bring our troops back from Europe at the rate of 300,000 a month in April I want to know why we are not discharging them in the month of February in the American camps and getting them out, and getting all of them out. The greater the difficulty in getting soldiers back from Europe, the more that is delayed, the more reason there is for emptying the American camps and stopping this enormous drain upon our Treasury.

Mr. President, there is a limit to the resources even of America. This wonderful land, with a wealth so much greater than we imagine, has nevertheless mortgaged her future to an extent that no other nation prior to this war has ever mortgaged its future. We have dealt in billions as in former times the world dealt in millions. The apparent prosperity of the hour is that kind of prosperity which a man enjoys who has mortgaged his home for $10,000, and therefore has $10,000 in the bank as ready cash, but who nevertheless is in debt $10,000. The illustration is not happy. It would have been better if I had said the man had mortgaged his home for $10,000 and had spent $9,000 of it and had $1,000 still in bank. Sooner or later the pinch hour is bound to come, and that peace will be greater or less just as we act wisely from this time on.

The first thing manifestly to do is to stop the waste to some extent. All war is waste. Every boy taken from the farm means not only the loss of that man's time but it means more than waste, it means perhaps the farm half cultivated. That means higher prices in the market when you come to aggregate it altogether. It means that this man taken from his home lives at an expense two or three times greater than he would have lived under in his own home. It means the disarrangement of all business. It is but common sense to get these men out, to get them back, to let them cease being consumers, and let them become producers, and instead of being a public burden let them become a public benefaction.

Get the Army back as soon as we can get it back; stop the expense. Then will be the time to begin to hope, through the productive capacities of this vast Army of splendid young men, to rehabilitate our fortunes and to stop that strain and draft and drain upon our resources, which, if they be not stopped, will ultimately produce very hard times in this country.

Mr. President, the man who keeps a million men in the field one day longer than necessary deprives this country of at least $2,000,000 a day, in my opinion, indeed, I think a much larger sum. We are going to be asked to buy bonds in an enormous quantity, but the people of this country are going to be in no temper to buy bonds unless they find the Government is willing to cut down its expenses.

In that connection I desire to say the war is over. When the war began, we started in erecting acres and hundreds of acres of buildings in Washington, and we began importing clerks from all parts of the United States and putting them into those buildings. I think we must make allowance for waste; we must make allowance for miscalculation; we must be very charitable in our criticism; and yet, as I went through those buildings day after day, I was impressed with the fact that the lives and the limbs of those clerks were actually being jeopardized because they were crowded in so thickly that they were falling over each other. It was my hope that when the war was over that thing would cease, and that these clerks would be returned to their homes, at least a very large percentage of them; but you can go down through those buildings to-day and you will find that the number of clerks has been but slightly decreased.

Mr. SMOOT. In some of those buildings the number of clerks has been increased.

Mr. REED. I am informed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that in some of the departments the number of clerks has actually been increased. You can not get the head of a department to cut down his clerical help. There is first one excuse and then another given for not doing it. I am about prepared to say on these matters that the only way to retrench is to retrench, as somebody once said the way to resume was to resume.

Why, Mr. President, this Senate, discovering that these temporary buildings out here in front of the Capitol would require over a million dollars of expenditure in order to make them usable, and believing that there would be a reduction in clerks, passed a bill to discontinue the work upon those buildings. That bill went to the House of Representatives, but it was followed there by the representatives of these departments, and they succeeded in persuading the committee in the House of Representatives not to report the bill, or at least to take no action upon it. So the million or the million and a half of money is to be expended on these buildings after the war is over to house an army of clerks after the army ought to have been demobilized and returned to their homes. I do not say that to criticize the House of Representatives; I have never indulged in any criticism of that great coordinate branch of our Government; but I say it to criticize the department chiefs, who went down to the House of Representatives and pursuaded them that they had to keep this army of employees.

Mr. President, that you can heap the burden upon the people for a while—for our folk have been good-natured and have paid their money out like thoroughbreds during the war, mortgaging their incomes, mortgaging their future, and doing it gladly—is no certain reason to believe that they are going forever and a day to continue to pay these taxes, when they have a right to believe the money is being wasted.

I had intended to say a word, and I have said a good many words. It is time somebody said something about getting these armies home; it is time that they found some means down at the department whereby a second lieutenant can not keep a man lying there almost rotting in camp, who is worth four or five thousand dollars a year at home, or if he is not worth four or five thousand dollars is worth four or five dollars a day at home. In the circumlocution of camps affidavits that you have dependents upon you, solemn proof that some great calamity will befall—all these things are required before a man can get discharged who ought to have been discharged within 10 days after the war was over; who ought to have been sent home, and gladly sent home, and probably paid a month's wages to start him out with. If you had given these boys 30 days' or 90 days' or even six months' pay, as they did in Canada, and let them have gone home you would still have been money ahead, for you would have saved their keep.

It is mismanagement; I unhesitatingly say it is the grossest mismanagement. I unhesitatingly say the time where patience has ceased to be a virtue has arrived, and for one I protest against this mismanagement. I do not know whether it will do any good to protest; I do not know that it would do any good for this Senate to pass a resolution; but unless the situation is remedied very soon I am going to offer a resolution regarding it.

I want at this time to give notice that on Saturday, after the reading of the Farewell Address of Washington, which, I presume, will still be read in pursuance of the ancient resolution of the Senate, I shall address the Senate, with its kind permission, upon the league of nations.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask what bill is now pending before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

MARKET PRICE OF LIBERTY BONDS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I coincide very largely, if not entirely, with the views of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I am receiving letters every day from parents asking that their sons may be sent home; and I am receiving letters from soldiers in the camps here and in the camps abroad, asking to be sent home. Many of these soldiers state that they have positions awaiting them, but that those positions can not be held up indefinitely. Yet there does not seem to be any way that we can get them home.

There is another matter that I want to speak about, and which I think is not entirely out of place in connection with what has just been said by the Senator from Missouri. I had hoped the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS] would be here, but he has been called out of the Chamber. I see the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is here, and he is also a member of the Finance Committee. I want to ask him or any other member of the committee a question after I have read a letter, which I hold in my hand.

I have noticed in the newspapers of my State advertisements of firms or banks that they will purchase liberty bonds, inviting the holders of such bonds to come and deal with them. I received a letter from a friend of mine in Seattle, calling especial attention to these advertisements, and particularly calling attention to the fact that many of the national banks are encouraging people who hold liberty bonds to come in and sell them; also calling attention to the fact that the liberty bonds are being discounted from 5 to 7 per cent, and that the people who were urged a few months ago to buy liberty bonds and who did so at a very great sacrifice, acting under the patriotic appeals that were made to them by these same bankers, were being compelled, in order to get food and to sustain themselves, to sell their bonds at a discount to the very same bankers who had appealed to their patriotic instincts to purchase the bonds some time ago.

I took the matter up with the Treasury Department to see whether or not the Treasury was doing anything or taking any steps to try to maintain these bonds at par, and apparently but very little has been done. I wrote this friend of the situation, and I have his letter in my hand, which I desire to read. I see the chairman of the Committee on Finance is now present, and I want to call his attention to this letter with reference to liberty bonds, and then to ask him a question. This gentleman says:

> Beyond question the Congress of the United States can maintain its bonds at par. Is it right that this should be done? If so, why not do it? Should the great mass of our interest-bearing debts be permitted to get in the hands of a few, and at a "shave" at that? Already lines of men and women here in Seattle stand at the national bank counters—and no doubt do so elsewhere—waiting their turn for the "shave," notwithstanding the advice of these "patriots" not to dispose of them for less than par. People have to pay taxes, and ought to; they also have to purchase food. To do this it is calculated to set them to thinking when compelled to sell a United States bond to a national bank for less than 94 cents over the same counter which they paid 100 cents per dollar only a few months ago.
> I will admit that we may not know just how to protest, which makes it all the worse for those who stand for law and order in all things.

Now, Mr. President, what I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance, or any other member of that committee, is this: Is anything being done or is any proposition being considered for the maintenance of the liberty bonds of this country at par, especially the liberty bonds to a certain amount anyway, that are in the hands of people who by force of circumstances are compelled to dispose of those bonds in order to get a living, in order to maintain themselves? It does seem to me that something ought to be done in behalf of the clerks who, for instance, were practically forced by a departmental head to skimp and save out of their monthly earnings a few dollars with which to buy a $50 bond or a $100 bond, who now, when the necessities of life force them, in order to raise some money, to sell these bonds, and they must sell them at a discount of from 5 to 7 per cent.

It probably would not be proper or advisable to make these bonds good in the hands of the men who hold them by the thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars worth, but it does seem to me that something ought to be done, at any rate, so that the man and woman of limited means who may hold $50 or $100 or even $1,000 worth of these bonds should have them maintained at par.

I do not pretend to know very much about how these things can be done, but it does seem to me that if a fund could be provided at the Treasury, out of which bonds up to $100 or $1,000 would be redeemed at par upon a proper showing to protect the Government, it ought to be done. I should therefore like to know of the chairman of the committee whether there is any proposition being considered or whether anything has been done under which this can be accomplished?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course the Senator understands that one of the most difficult questions that can confront any nation is that of always keeping its government obligations at par. There has not been a time since we began to issue liberty bonds—and especially is this true of the latter issues; in fact, it is absolutely true as to all of the issues except the first—when they have commanded par in the markets of this country.

Mr. LODGE. Except the three-and-a-halfs.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said except the three-and-a-halfs—and they are now below par. The Government, through the Secretary of the Treasury, has of course been very much concerned about this situation and has discussed with the Finance Committee possible ways and means of removing this condition. There is a provision, as I now recall, for a sinking fund, which sinking fund is not adequate, I think, and should be increased; but it was thought at the time that if a sinking fund were provided, it would help very materially to keep these bonds at a higher level. I do not think anybody thought that it would be possible for some little time, even with a large sinking fund, to bring them immediately to par.

One of the troubles about keeping these bonds at par grows out of the fact that a great many people have bought them through loans and upon the installment plan. They did not themselves have the money to invest, so they went to banks and borrowed it; the banks extended them credit and gave them time in which to pay, so as to permit them to make payments as they were able. In many instances these purchasers have found themselves unable to meet their payments, and consequently unable to hold their bonds. In other instances persons who have bought these bonds have found that they needed the cash which they had invested in the bonds. This situation has forced them to throw great quantities of these bonds upon the market. That is one reason that has caused a decline in the liberty bonds.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not asking for the reasons for or causes of the decline.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am giving the reasons, so that I may finally inform the Senator as to a statute which is now under contemplation by the Treasury Department and by the committees of the two Houses.

There is another scheme, which has become a sort of a system in this country on the part of designing speculators, which has had a great effect in pressing down the price of these bonds in the market. It is a scheme whereby issues of stock—wildcat stock, we sometimes call it; stocks of different kinds—are taken by agents and peddled all over the country. Wherever they can find a credulous person in possession of some of the liberty bonds he is offered these "high-interest bearing," "high-profit earning" stocks, according to the stories of the agents, for these low-interest bearing bonds; and they succeed in gathering up, so the Secretary of the Treasury advised the committee, enormous quantities of these bonds, which are immediately thrown upon the market and converted into cash at any price that can be obtained for them. That has had a very great tendency toward depressing the price.

To meet that situation, the Secretary of the Treasury has sent to the Finance Committee and to the Ways and Means Committee of the House a bill which he has prepared, which possibly may meet and overcome the evil; but that is a question yet to be determined. That bill is under consideration. I am very much inclined to think, if that bill passes, it will stop that method of exploiting the holders of these bonds and the throwing the bonds in such vast volumes upon the market.

Outside of a sinking-fund method and outside of another method which has probably helped to some extent to keep these bonds from going even to a lower level than they have now reached is the practice of the War Finance Corporation of each month setting apart a fund for the purpose of purchasing these bonds in the open market. I do not know how much that fund is, but I am advised that in recent months this institution has put in the hands of its agents in New York, and probably in Chicago and at other points, many millions of dollars.

Mr. LODGE. I think they have set aside for this purpose something over $200,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to say that, in the aggregate, up to this time I think that corporation has invested something over $200,000,000 in the purchase of liberty bonds for the sole and only purpose of trying to keep them from falling to a lower level or in the effort to raise them to a higher level. Those are methods that ordinarily would accomplish a greater result than seems to have been accomplished in this case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator—he may have stated what I am about to suggest, but if so I missed it—surely we put in one of the bills passed by Congress a provision for a special fund to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the nature of a revolving fund, to purchase bonds with a view of sustaining their price.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thank the Senator; we did that. So that the Secretary of the Treasury, I will say to the Senator from Washington, and the committees of the two Houses in charge of this matter have been alert and have, within their limitations, been doing what seemed to them to be expedient and necessary to help against the situation to which the Senator from Washington calls attention, and which, I think, is a very grave situation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Can the Senator tell me how the revolving fund to which he has referred is used? Is it used to buy bonds promiscuously or can an individual take his bond to the Treasury and get it redeemed at par?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I think it is used largely in the markets where bonds are bought and sold for the purpose of maintaining a standard price.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the committee considered any proposition that would make it possible for the holder of a hundred dollar bond to go to the Treasury Department and, upon a showing of his original ownership and of his necessities, have that bond redeemed at par?

Mr. SIMMONS. No, Mr. President; and I think, if the Senator will reflect, he will reach the conclusion that it is impossible for the Government to guarantee the par value of these bonds, unless the Government is ready and able to redeem all of them, if it becomes necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, does not the Senator think that a plan like that could be worked out?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think, Mr. President, that if the Government were able to redeem all of its bonds there would be no necessity of issuing any more bonds.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not suggesting and did not put a proposition that to my mind would involve the redemption of all these bonds, but there are people who own a $5,000 bond, a $10,000 bond, a $20,000 bond, or a million dollars in bonds. About those people I am not worrying, although I should like to see all of our bonds at par. I am not worrying particularly about bonds of the larger denominations to which I have referred, in the hands of people who are able to hold those bonds; but it seems to me, as I said a while ago—and I confess that I do not know very much about these financial matters—that we could provide a fund, and hedge it about with such restrictions as would prevent the Government being flooded with these bonds, under which the holder of a $100 bond or a $500 bond, on a proper showing and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury might prescribe, so as to prevent the bonds being poured in, could present them to the Treasury and have them redeemed at par. It may be difficult to work out such a plan, but it seems to me something of that kind could be provided, and I wanted to ask whether the committee had considered anything of that sort?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I will say to the Senator that no such proposition has been presented to the committee or discussed by the committee. That would be a very difficult proposition to work out. Of course, we could not very well say that the Government will redeem certain bonds of certain denominations and will not redeem bonds of other denominations. If it were desirable to provide that the Government should set apart a fund to be used in the purchase of the bonds of such holders as might be in distress and might by force of circumstances be compelled to put them upon the market, that could be done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I have in mind, something of that kind.

Mr. SIMMONS. That could be done, but I do not know whether or not that would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it seems to me that something of the sort ought to be considered. It is a very important matter. The difficulty of it should not dishearten us if it is possible to work it out. The Senator has suggested in two sentences what I have really been trying to get at. The class that the Senator describes is the class I wish to take care of, namely, those who have a $100 bond and have to dispose of it in order to get some money on which to live—people who are in distress. The plans and methods the Senator has described have not taken care of the situation; they have not prevented these bonds from going way below par, and something ought to be done to meet this particular situation.

Mr. President, the man who has a $5,000 bond knows that the bond is going to be redeemed some day, and that when it matures it is going to be paid in full by this Government; everybody knows that; but what I should like to see done is to provide a fund of some sort to take care of the bonds that will be taken care of when they mature, of course; but which should be taken care of now, in order to meet the distressing conditions that confront some of our people. I wish that some effort would be made to create a fund in the Treasury Department that could be used in that very way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desired to make a suggestion with regard to this subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; I am through.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we are struggling against an unfortunate situation. The bonds were sold at an artificial price. The exemptions and the rates attached to them were not sufficient to make them sell at par in the market when they were placed. We relied on the patriotism of the country to buy those bonds for more than they were worth. The result is, of course, that, as they were not sold to meet the market when they were issued, they have never been able to meet it since, because they were sold above their real value.

The 3½ per cent bond was made a desirable bond, and it remained above par until very recently certainly, although carrying the lowest rate of interest of any of the liberty bond issues; but it was given an exemption, which held it up. The other bonds never were worth what they were sold for when the loans were placed; that is the trouble. The difficulty of meeting such distressing cases, as the Senator has described, has given me, for one, a great deal of thought; but it is very hard to see how we can remedy the situation, because, if we begin to redeem the $100 bonds, we shall find a great increase in the number of hundred-dollar bonds to be redeemed at par. We have made some provision on this subject, which the Senator from North Carolina has pointed out, but it has been only palliative; and now everywhere in my city the newspapers are full of advertisements of readiness to purchase these bonds, to be bought by people who can afford to hold them.

The fundamental trouble is in not having met the market when the bonds were issued. If that had been done, people would either have bought them below par, or they would have bought them at par when they were worth it. We have a very difficult situation, and I, for one, confess that it is very hard to see how it can be met.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I were the Senator from Washington, in answering that letter I would advise the writer of it that up to the present time we have issued over $16,000,000,000 worth of bonds, that there is staring the country in the face at the present time a further issue of thirteen to fourteen billion dollars' worth of bonds, and with that amount of bonds in circulation it will be absolutely impossible, as long as money is worth what it is to-day, to maintain those bonds at par.

If we should agree to redeem at par all $100 bonds, every issue of bonds hereafter would be of $100 bonds, and it would simply mean that in the case of every loan that was put up and sold it would be only a very few months until the Government would have to redeem in some way the whole amount of the loan.

The Senator could say further to the writer of the letter that at the rate of 4½ per cent a taxable bond, such as is provide for in the law now, will of necessity sell for less than par. Money to-day is worth from 6 to 7 per cent; and therefore a bond of this kind that is taxable will not bring in the market more than about 94 to 94½ cents on the dollar.

If we want to make a change in the value of the bonds already issued, the terms of the bonds must be changed; and I do not believe that will be done. The Senator from Massachusetts has well stated that these bonds when sold, at the rate of interest they were carrying, were not worth par by any manner of means; and I know thousands of people who subscribed for liberty bonds with the distinct understanding that they would sell the bonds, and they were perfectly willing to pocket the loss.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely.

Mr. SMOOT. Millions and hundreds of millions of dollars of bonds have been sold in that way, and bought for that very purpose.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. They were perfectly willing to give that 5 or 6 per cent to the Government. That is the case with many people; but now the bond is meeting the market, as every other obligation is to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. And it will have to meet the market hereafter, with an additional amount of bonded indebtedness.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks the exemption from taxation of the Federal farm-loan bonds, and the attracting of money in that direction, has affected in any way the market value of these bonds?

Mr. SMOOT. Just as soon as the Federal Farm Loan Board offer a bond issue, inasmuch as the bonds are nontaxable, as the Senator knows, they are taken immediately. The Federal Farm Loan Board could issue bonds to-day, if we should authorize them to do so, to the extent of two billion, of three billion, or five billion dollars and sell them, without a doubt, in a very short time.

Mr. KENYON. What reason or justice is there in exempting those bonds from taxation and not exempting what we term liberty loan bonds?

Mr. SMOOT. I will answer the Senator very frankly. Because of the fact that Congress was appealing to the farmers of the country, and for that reason the bonds were exempted. I think that is the proper way to answer the question, and I think I ought to answer it just exactly in that way.

Mr. KENYON. It did not really help the farmers particularly, did it? It helped those who wanted to buy a tax-exempt bond.

Mr. SMOOT. It certainly will help the man who buys the bond. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. KENYON. And it will keep on affecting the liberty bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know that there is anything else I desire to say, unless the Senator wants to ask me a further question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I wanted to say just a word myself.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will yield just a moment, I will add that one of the bills that we passed—I forget the date—provided a revolving fund of $500,000,000. The Senator will remember that right after that bill was passed our 4½ per cent bonds advanced from about $95 up to about $98 on the hundred; but then the sales began in such large quantities that they soon drove down the price of the bonds. If the Government should undertake to buy all the bonds that were offered, it would bankrupt the Government immediately, just as the Senator from North Carolina has said; but we provided that revolving fund, thinking that perhaps a purchase of bonds at some critical time would tend to stabilize the price of the bonds. I do not know but that it has done so; but the $500,000,000 is a mere bagatelle when you take into consideration the vast quantities of bonds that are passing daily in transactions of commerce in this country.

I will say that a great many of the advertisements come from stockbrokers. The stockbroking business to-day is unprofitable. There is very little transfer of stocks in any part of the United States. Thousands of stockbrokers are failing all over the United States, and those that are living are living from hand to mouth. If they can make one-sixteenth of 1 per cent upon transactions in liberty bonds, they are just that much ahead; and they are trying to maintain their business until better times come through the transfer and purchase of these liberty bonds.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall send this RECORD to my constituent. It probably will not bring him very much consolation.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will not the Senator also send to his constituent the votes on the different appropriations that are going on in Congress? That ought to interest him, too, I am sure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He will acquaint himself with the aggregate amount of our appropriations, anyhow. As I say, it will not give him very much consolation. We have had practically a confession here that it is impossible for the Government to take care of the situation that I have described, and that the writer of this letter has described to me. I do not like us to take a position of that kind.

The Senator from Utah says that if all the obligations of the Government were presented for redemption at once it would bankrupt the Government. I think I know enough about finance to agree with him in that statement; but that is not what is proposed to be done at all. It is suggested that a special fund be created to redeem bonds under particular conditions, and the proof of particular conditions. Now, I admit that that would be hard to work out. I admit that if the bonds were selling on the market at $95, and if they knew that in case a certain showing were made to the Government they would be redeemed at par, an attempt would be made to get these bonds in the hands of people who could comply with those conditions; but, Mr. President, our people are not all perjurers. They are not all people who would try to defraud the Government or deceive the Government. I believe that if a fund were provided under which bonds to the amount of, say, $500—I do not mean $100 bonds—could be presented to the Treasury and redeemed at par upon proof that the person presenting the bonds was the original purchaser of the bonds—not an assignee but the original purchaser of the bonds—and that it was necessary for him to secure money to take care of distressing conditions, and that was the reason why the bonds are presented for redemption, there would not be a flood upon the Treasury under such circumstances, with stringent rules. I am merely suggesting an outline, of course.

Of course, it may be, upon mature consideration, that that could not be worked out; but it does seem to me that we ought to try to do something to work out this situation and take care of it. This revolving fund only benefits the man with money. He is the only one that gets any benefit from the revolving fund that we have had, except the reflex action upon the bonds. They go into the public bond market and buy bonds from brokers—from men who are able to carry the bonds. These men probably want to sell their bonds in order to get money to invest. I am not interested in those people. I am interested, of course, in our bonds and in our obligations; and I should like to see some fund or some way provided, or an attempt made to provide it, under which the men who bought these $50 or $100 bonds by skimping and saving and denying themselves can now, when stress comes upon them, go to the Government and get the face of the bonds, instead of having to go to some broker or banker and dispose of the bonds at a large discount.

I hope we will not stand here confessing that we can not do anything to meet that situation. I hope a serious attempt will be made by the proper committees and by the Secretary of the Treasury to suggest some plan under which the situation can be met.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that I am very glad he brought up this matter. It is one that ought to receive very serious consideration; and I have no doubt the Senator's remarks this afternoon may lead to some reflection that may eventuate in some scheme that will be helpful.

I want to say to the Senator, however, that I do not recall and I do not think that there is, a single country among the belligerents whose war bonds are to-day selling for par. The same fate befell the war bonds of England and France and Italy and Germany that has befallen our war bonds. As the Senator from Massachusetts says, of course these bonds were issued under very extraordinary circumstances. They were taken by our people, however, in a spirit of patriotism, with full knowledge at the time they were taken—except in the case of the first issue—that bonds previously issued of the same character, with the same rate of interest, were selling below par. I do not know now exactly what was the price of our liberty bonds of the second and third issues at the time of our last liberty-bond sale——

Mr. SMOOT. Ninety-seven and something.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that it was 97 and something, a little bit higher than they are now; but every purchaser of one of the last issue of liberty bonds bought them with full knowledge of the fact that they were not worth par in the open market; and so, if we are to have another issue of those bonds every purchaser will buy them with full knowledge that they are not worth par in the open market. As long as the spirit of patriotism in this country is sufficiently alive to make a flotation of these bonds possible under those conditions we will continue to sell our issues, but when that spirit disappears and these bonds have to be sold upon a commercial basis, of course you can not float them at 100 cents on the dollar with the knowledge that they will not, as soon as purchased, be worth that much money.

As the Senator from Massachusetts has very correctly said, there is but one complete remedy for that situation. What the Senator suggests would give some relief to a certain class of bondholders, and it may be that there is a certain class that is entitled to special consideration and for whom some relief provision ought to be adopted. But, Mr. President, the only way in which we can be assured that these bonds will maintain their value in the market at the price at which they are sold by the Government is either by the extension of the exemption from taxation now allowed by law, or by an increase in the interest rate. That, I think, is pretty generally understood in this country, and the question is, Are we ready to further exempt bonds from taxation, and are we ready to further increase the rate of interest?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, since the discussion of this afternoon I telephoned to the War Department to ascertain the number of soldiers in the United States at the time of the signing of the armistice and how many had been discharged. The statements made here in debate almost made it appear that the officers of the Army and the Secretary of War were willfully negligent in the work of demobilizing the Army. Why, it seems to me that anyone who knows Secretary Baker, and knows of his tremendous energy—that he works day and night—will agree that it does not seem fair or right that he and the officers under him should be condemned when they are doing the very best that can be done, and are making a record that is most commendable in effecting the discharge of the soldiers.

Mr. President, I inquired how many soldiers had been discharged from cantonments and Army posts in the United States, and was informed that there had been discharged up to to-day 1,156,000, and that the number in the United States on November 11, 1918, was 1,676,510. Thus, from two-thirds to three-fourths of the soldiers that were in the cantonments and fortifications and forts of the United States at the time of the surrender of the Germans have been discharged by the War Department.

I will ask any fair Senator whether that is not a remarkable record. You must remember that it takes time to discharge men. They have to be examined; a certain number that are in hospitals can not be released; it takes time to make the physical examinations of millions of men by a limited number of physicians; it takes time to prepare the data for the permanent record the Government must keep of each soldier.

I asked how many soldiers had been transported from France since the 11th day of November, 1918, and the answer was given that 232,000 had arrived in the United States, and that 60,000 are now at sea bound for American ports. The war came to an end very suddenly. The United States was not prepared to transport its soldiers. We lacked the number of vessels that were necessary for that purpose. We have been unable to get either France or Great Britain to furnish ships for the purpose of transporting soldiers. Now, Mr. President, when we consider the fact that Great Britain has soldiers from Australia, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, soldiers from Canada and India that must be returned, you can readily see that she is pretty well occupied with her own returning soldiers, and that consequently her ships are very largely used for that purpose.

Mr. President, we find also that these other nations are engaged in similar tasks, in service which they regard absolutely necessary and essential. When Senators say that the War Department is asleep when it has demobilized two-thirds or three-fourths of the Army in the United States and has demobilized the troops in France at as rapid a rate as it is possible to transport them to our shores, it seems to me that they are indulging in criticism that is unfair, and they are not giving credit to men who are trying to do their duty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell me why we still have in the camps in the United States approximately three-quarters of a million men?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have not that number.

Mr. REED. When was it reduced below that number?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The number that have been discharged up to to-day, according to a telephone message from Gen. March's office in the War Department, is 1,156,000 men.

Mr. REED. How many does that leave?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That leaves 560,000 men.

Mr. REED. What are those half million men doing in camp all this time?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it takes time to discharge men. They are discharged after an examination. Many of them are sick and can not be discharged now.

Mr. REED. Oh, but, Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to say that these are sick men?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not say that all of them are. There are certain numbers on the sick list. Many of those who have passed the physical examination have been released.

Mr. REED. Yes; many of them have gone, but 500,000 of them are still here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true; but, nevertheless, the proportion of those that are sick is larger among those who remain than among those who went. Now, as I said to the Senator, it takes time to demobilize men. It took a great many months to demobilize the men in the Civil War. The great parade of the soldiers of the Union in this city did not take place until months after the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. It requires a large number of men to remain at cantonments, forts, and camps to guard and keep them in good condition until complete demobilization has taken place and until Congress determines what we will do with our cantonments.

We have had criticism continually. The War Department has done nothing that was right, according to some. No matter what is done, it is wrong; and yet I make the statement that no nation on earth ever made the preparations for war that the United States did with greater dispatch nor transported to a foreign country the number of men that the United States landed in France in so short a time.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the work that was done. I want to show just what has been the record in transporting our soldiers to France. There was a great deal of discussion here in the past about the slowness of the War Department in transporting troops overseas. Morning after morning Senators would ask, Why do we not get the men over to France? Why do we not get them on the firing line?

I have a comparison between Great Britain's action and the action of the United States. Here are the figures: In the first period of the war, from the 14th day of August, 1914, until the 1st day of January, 1915, England sent to France only 480,000 men. From that time until the 1st day of January, 1916, England sent to France only a sufficient additional number of men to make a total of 1,000,000. There was nearly a year and a half that England, presumably much better prepared for war than we were, had spent in getting across the channel of a few miles into France only 1,000,000 soldiers. By the 1st of January, 1917, the total number of soldiers that Great Britain had transported to France was but 1,500,000, and by January 1, 1918, the total number she had landed there was 2,000,000 men.

Look at the record of the United States. I warrant that no one can say but that the record of the War Department in the preparation for war and in the transportation of soldiers to Europe has been far better than that of any other nation in the history of the world—far better than that of Great Britain.

The war started between the United States and Germany on the 6th day of April, 1917, and from that time until the 11th day of November, 1918, the United States transported and landed in France about 2,000,000 men. I can give you the exact number. The total number of men transported was 2,002,175. Not in four years, not in three years, but in one year and a half the United States Government had collected these soldiers, drilled them, provided transportation for them, and had landed them in France. Is there any record of any nation in the history of the world equals that in preparation for war?

When you remember that for the first year and a half Great Britain transported to France only 1,000,000 men, you can readily see that in our year and a half we have doubled the record of Great Britain, which had a passage of only 42 miles crossing the Channel in order to land her soldiers in France, while we had a distance to traverse of more than 3,000 miles.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I will answer the question if I can.

Mr. REED. While England had landed only 1,000,000 men actually in France, how many million had she trained in her own country?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I suppose quite a number, but she never took all of them over.

Mr. REED. Oh, well, but as a matter of fact had not she trained a greater army than she had sent to France, and was she not simply holding that army in her own country for the finishing touches?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think so. I think she was holding some, and she was, of course, training soldiers. But, Mr. President, so was the United States. The very fact that on the 11th of November, 1918, at the time of the signing of the armistice, we had in the United States in the cantonments and in the forts and other places 1,676,510 men shows that we were training men also and did not have time to transport them in that short period of time.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator, of course, is discussing an entirely different question than that which I discussed. I said nothing about demobilization of the Army. That is no answer to the fact that you are not getting men back home as soon as you should to say you got them over as quickly as you ought to. But I wish to call the Senator's attention——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to remind the Senator that I have been answering criticisms which have been made, and which I say have been made principally upon the other side of the aisle, to the effect that there has been delay in nearly everything the War Department undertook; and it is a record that is much better than that of any department in any government that ever prepared armies for war.

Mr. REED. I wish that were true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If you will allow me to put these figures in I will show it is true.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Senator a question about his figures. Of course, anybody can make up figures when he starts to get a result. I wish to know if it is not true that England, with her population—I am speaking about England, Ireland, and Scotland; Great Britain we will call that to contradistinguish it from the British Empire—had not raised, equipped, and trained and had ready there at the front, or ready for the front, only a few miles away, an army millions greater than the figures which the Senator has given?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that she did have some men in England. There is no doubt about that; just as we had 1,600,000 men in the United States at the close of the war. There is no doubt in the wide world but that the speed and the expedition with which these men were put to the front by England was slow compared to that which the United States developed in transporting 3,000 miles every soldier that we landed in France.

I will state to the Senator, with respect to these figures, that they have been compiled by the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Crowell, and they show the exact number of men that were enlisted and the number of men that were transported. They show the manner in which the various departments furnishing supplies had complied with the speed orders that were urged.

Mr. REED. Does that show that we had enough shells on the front?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, you can not declare war on the 6th day of April and expect to have manufactured and shipped all the necessary materials, especially when it was necessary in many cases to build factories for their manufacture, and expect to deliver them in time for a battle six months thereafter. That would be a physical impossibility.

Mr. REED. The Senator said these figures showed the system used in a way that led me to believe that we had performed something marvelous. I am not here criticizing and do not want to get him into that line of discussion, but I will say to the Senator that if he is undertaking to demonstrate to the country that we sent our men into battle fully prepared and equipped, he had better keep away from that question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I think the records are accurate. They have been compiled very carefully.

Mr. REED. I will show you Gen. Pershing's telegram in a few moments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to show the Senate just what we did. The Army in Europe on the 11th day of November, 1918, amounted to 2,002,175. In the States we had 1,676,510; in the Insular possessions and in Alaska we had 55,735; a grand total in our Army, excluding marines, of 3,707,132; including the marines the grand total was 3,734,420.

Mr. President, England had perhaps between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 men. I do not believe that they had more than that, if they had that number. We raised ours in 18 months and sent 2,000,000 of them to France 3,000 miles away, while England took four years and three months to raise her army and had in France at the time of the surrender 2,000,000 men.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, however, will admit that with all the men we sent to Europe England transported over 60 per cent of them?

Mr. SHAFROTH. England did transport a great many; there is no doubt about that. We did not have the vessels. But England was very anxious then to get them over. She was much more anxious at that time to get them over and save her forces there than she is now to get them back.

Mr. SMOOT. What the Senator states is absolutely true.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no doubt about that, and we can not get ships on that account.

Mr. SMOOT. But we could have done so if the resolution that was offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and upon which he delivered a speech in the Senate and which was finally referred to the Foreign Relations Committee and lies there now perfectly dead——

Mr. SHAFROTH. What is it?

Mr. SMOOT. A resolution that there should be an agreement between this country and England that she would grant to the United States the same shipping facilities after the war to get our men back into this country that she offered to get them over to France.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That shows great foresight on the part of the Senator from Iowa, and perhaps it ought to have been considered; but if it was not taken up it was the fault of Congress, it was not the fault of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know about that; I will not say that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There might have been said, if we had passed that resolution, that we were delaying the sending of troops over there.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. SHAFROTH. One can criticize anything that is done, I care not what it is. Right now the contention was made in the early part of the discussion to the effect that President Wilson is delaying the soldiers coming back by negotiating for a league of nations to prevent future wars instead of only fixing the terms of peace in a treaty.

When Senators criticize that effort they are criticizing not only the President of the United States but they are criticizing every Government that is at the peace table. Is it possible that the President ought to have interposed an objection to try to establish a permanent peace when all the powers seemed willing and anxious to make provisions to prevent future wars? Senators must remember that when they criticize that fact they are criticizing every one of our allies, because every one of them wanted this league of nations determined upon before there was a treaty of peace outlined. Everybody knows that if we do not get a league of nations before we get the treaty signed, we never will be able to get Germany into any such league. We can force her now by reason of the fact that in the settlement of the peace terms we can make those terms absolute. When it is announced that the President of the United States urges a league of nations to prevent wars, critics say then that the cause of the delay in bringing our troops home is the President. Oh, yes, it is the President that is delaying demobilization, when, as a matter of fact, the force that was most insistent upon a league of nations was the Government of Great Britain, even more so than the United States.

The Senator from Missouri has suggested that America is simply one nation and that we are to be in a league with eight foreign Governments, and that therefore these eight foreign nations might be against our one, our own Government. What could Great Britain say? The representatives of Great Britain could say, We have India; we have Canada; we have various other possessions with populations amounting to five times as much as that of the United States. We find ourselves in the condition of being one nation in a league with eight foreign nations; the eight might be against Great Britain.

If you are going to be controlled by an argument of that kind, you can never have a league of nations. It is impossible to have one, because each one will say, "We have to yield something and therefore we will not go in," and this war with all its horrors, with its tragic losses both in life and in property is liable to be precipitated again by a trivial incident such as the killing of an archduke. Can it be wrong for nations to agree that they will stand together in preventing war?

I never believed that there were people who would object to peace, to a permanent peace. It was that for which we declared throughout the liberty bond campaigns. The burden of our speeches was that this was a war to end all wars, and now we find objection to even moral suasion being used for the purpose of preventing war. Every time one of us made a statement in behalf of liberty bond subscriptions we emphasized that this is a humane war; this is a war of unselfishness on our part; it is a war to save civilization, it is a war to prevent the recurrence of these horrors; and now we find Senators ready to object to any kind of agreement that will put into the treaty some kind of a stipulation that will prevent war or even have a tendency to prevent war.

Mr. President, we may not get the strongest league of nations, but I am in favor of a league of nations, even if there is but one clause contained in its constitution, a declaration that each nation agrees to respect the territorial boundaries of the nations as they exist at the time of the signing of the treaty, and that they are to aid all of the nations in maintaining the same.

We should go further and use our power for the purpose of preventing invasion of any territory of any nation unless the aggressor submits the controversy to a court of arbitration.

If we are able to get only that agreement, we have something that will stop nine-tenths of the wars of the world, because nine-tenths of the wars are for conquest, nine-tenths of the wars are for the purpose of grabbing territory, and if you once obtain an agreement that no nation can invade another, that no nation can take from another any part of its territory, the incentive or inducement for war will cease.

Mr. President, I have been diverted from these figures, and I wish to call attention to them because they show a remarkable record not only as to the troops which were embarked and transported but also as to the manufacture and shipment of war supplies. We began to transport our soldiers in American ships in May, 1917, and we increased the number until in June, 1918, we transported during that month in American bottoms 115,903 of our American soldiers. At the same time we were using the British tonnage and vessels of the other allies.

The total number of soldiers transported in American ships during the war was 896,449. The number transported in British ships was 1,047,374; the number in French ships, 48,691; the number in Italian ships, 61,608.

Mr. President, after the declaration of war we had to pass through both bodies of Congress conscription laws which were long and vigorously fought. We had to give considerable time for the eligible men to register for service. We had to list the 10,000,000 eligible men and give time for the claiming of exemptions and deferred classifications. We had to train the men for actual service by months of drilling. We had to construct enormous cantonments, to build ships, to manufacture guns, artillery, munitions of war, and clothing in gigantic quantities. When we take into consideration all these matters, and the speed with which they were put into the service, ready for fighting upon the battle line, it makes a most remarkable record. There were 2,056,122 of our soldiers transported.

I wish to call attention to other things the War Department has done. The cargoes that were sent to the American Expeditionary Forces from April, 1917, to November 1, 1918, in short tons to the supply service are as follows: I find that there were shipped to France in the Quartermaster's supplies 2,149,400 tons; in engineers' supplies, 1,314,300 tons; in ordnance supplies, 989,900 tons; in the Signal Service, 115,500 tons; in medicinal supplies, 88,900 tons; in the mortar transportation, 113,300 tons; in the aviation department, 51,400 tons; in Red Cross supplies, 31,900 tons; in the miscellaneous, 43,000 tons; making a total of the shipments of supplies by the War Department to France of 4,897,600 tons.

Is not that a great record? The war came upon us suddenly; the war ended suddenly; and the result of these shipments and the preparation and manufacturing and getting ready of the same is the most remarkable record in the history of the world.

Mr. President, in some of the instances they had to go into the forests and find the spruce and cut it green and season it, and then had to manufacture it into the shapes that they needed. Is it possible that men can fairly say that it should not take time to do those things; that men who worked day and night for the accomplishment of the same should be condemned?

Mr. President, if officials are to be held to account in the degree suggested by the criticism offered here we should require the services of one having the magic of Alladin with his wonderful lamp who can create in an instant great armies and enormous supplies.

I wish also to call attention to something else that was done. Here is the production of munitions for the United States Army from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918. Here were the complete units that were manufactured:

Artillery in complete units, 75-millimeter guns, 932; 3-inch, 75 millimeter AA guns, 97. I shall not read the whole list, but I will get the total. The total is 1,647 cannon that were produced in the United States for the United States Army from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not mean to say that these 75-millimeter guns were made in this country, does he?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am showing the complete units of these that were made.

Mr. SMOOT. In the United States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the United States, production of munitions in the United States for the United States Army from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How many?

Mr. SHAFROTH. One thousand six hundred and forty-seven.

Here is a list of the complete rounds that were manufactured in the gun factories and in the munition factories of the United States. I shall give the total. These include those for the 75-millimeter guns and for all the artillery. We find that there were 17,203,000 complete rounds for the artillery of the United States that were sent to France.

We had other factories at work; we had other things to do; and the same War Department that seems not to be able to do anything to suit some people, Mr. President, has manufactured of helmets, 1,975,000; of machine guns, 130,000; of machine rifles, 52,000; of rifles, 2,507,000; of pistols and revolvers, 666,000; of rifle and machine-gun ammunition, 2,879,000,000 rounds; of pistol ammunition, 328,000,000 rounds.

Oh, the War Department was sleeping; it was doing nothing; it was absolutely oblivious to the necessity of getting our troops over to France!

Of tractors, it built 32,409; of tanks, 69; of smokeless powder, it manufactured 198,000,000 pounds; of TNT, 101,000,000 pounds; of ammonium nitrate, 91,000,000 pounds; of picric acid, 37,000,000 pounds.

Mr. President, the War Department had other duties to perform. It had to ship and deliver ordnance materials to the American Expeditionary Forces. Here is a statement showing the total amount of complete units that were shipped up to November 15, 1918. There were 454 cannon shipped to our forces; there were British and French deliveries to November 11 of 3,091; a total of 3,545. The amount of artillery ammunition, in complete rounds for the artillery, was 9,066,420.

For the other ordnance the total is not mentioned, but of rifles there were shipped 1,800,000; of pistols and revolvers, 615,000; of machine guns, 49,350; and of machine rifles there were 38,000 shipped.

The rifle ammunition which was shipped was 1,629,300,000 rounds; of pistol and revolver ammunition there were shipped 233,848,000 rounds. Many grenades, tanks, and tractors were also delivered.

Mr. President, they were somewhat busy in doing those things.

I want now to state the production of munitions in the United States for Great Britain and for France which were sent over to those countries by the United States:

For Great Britain, field guns, complete units of 361 in the artillery and of extra guns 216.

The limbers and vehicles delivered were 278 in number.

For France there were shipped 70 of the complete units, 525 extra guns, 50 extra carriages, 70 limbers and vehicles.

In artillery ammunition the amounts that were shipped to Great Britain were 3,568,001 rounds; for machinings 2,888,840.

Complete rounds for the artillery, 3,577,040 rounds.

Yet the War Department was asleep!

Mr. President, we find that the airplanes which were made between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, were as follows:

Combat De Haviland fours, 3,227.

Combat Handley-Paige, 101.

Training—elementary, 5,346.

Training—advanced, 2,474.

Making a total of 11,148 airplanes which were shipped overseas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Just a moment. Those were the figures of production. Of those shipped overseas, the first were 1,985.

Mr. REED. What were they?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They were combat De Haviland fours. Combat Handley-Paige (parts), 100; training—elementary, 0; training—advanced, 0; making a total of 1,985.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me finish the figures in regard to the engines, and then I will yield to the Senator. There were produced of combat—Liberty motors, 13,554; shipped overseas, 4,383. Combat—Hispano, 469; shipped overseas, 245. Training—elementary engines, 10,568; shipped overseas, 0. Training—advance, 5,221; shipped overseas, 200; making a total product in the United States between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, of 29,832, and shipped overseas, 4,828.

Now I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I merely desire to know if the War Department has furnished those figures to the Senator as an actual representation of the airplane situation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. At the time of November 11, 1918; yes, sir.

Mr. REED. I charge that they are deliberately misleading as to the facts.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know about that.

Mr. REED. I charge that the investigation made by the Military Committee made an absolute demonstration that up to the time the war closed our airplane program was a substantial failure. I am sorry to have to say this. I have made no attack upon the War Department except for failure to bring back our soldiers; but I say to the Senator from Colorado that if the War Department has the insolence to send figures of that kind here in regard to the airplane situation it needs checking up, and it will get it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The airplane program, which was made the subject of debate in this body, was behind in April, May, and June of last year because an immense amount of work had to be done by way of preparation. Factories had to be erected, railroads built to the forests; they had to cut the spruce timber green in the forests, to season it, and then to manufacture it into forms. All that takes time, and of course they could not have, and did not have at that time, the number which we anticipated and hoped they would have; but that shows no inefficiency; it merely shows they were behind in their contracts; it shows, as a matter of fact, that they were doing good work.

Mr. President, I want show another thing which the War Department has done. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri, whose reference was only to the bringing back of the soldiers, that the equipping of the soldiers has been criticized in this body almost continually. I have some data here with reference to the United States squadrons at the front. A squadron is equipped with from 15 to 25 airplanes. On April 30, 1918, we had 3; on May 31, we had 12; on June 30, 1918, we had 13; on July 31, 1918, we had 14; on August 31 we had 26; on September 30 we had 32; on October 31 we had 43; and on November 11, 1918, we had 45.

A comparison of enemy planes brought down by the United States forces and United States planes brought down by enemy forces will show that the United States planes lost to the enemy were 271, while the enemy planes lost to the United States numbered 491. That shows a record of efficiency on the part of our soldiers which was more than twice that of the German Army, which had been supposed to be, and has been heralded to be, the most expert, the best equipped, and the most perfect military organization in the world.

Mr. President, there was something else done by the War Department. I refer to railroad transportation equipment produced and shipped to the American Expeditionary Forces from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918. Of standard-gauge locomotives there were produced 1,691. Does it not take some time to build locomotives? Of that number there were shipped overseas, 1,141. Of narrow-gauge locomotives 445 were produced, and 406 were shipped overseas. Of standard-gauge cars 19,516 were manufactured and 16,372 shipped overseas. It takes time to manufacture cars; it takes time to construct locomotives; it takes time to make cars of both narrow-gauge and standard-gauge pattern. Yet we did all this in 18 months, without any preparation whatever.

As to automobile transportation, of two-wheel-drive trucks, 55,563 were produced and 30,417 were shipped overseas in 18 months. It takes time to make automobiles and it takes time to transport them 3,000 miles from our shores. It takes time to get them from the factory to the seaboard, especially in view of the fact that the railroads of this country were congested to such an extent that the shipments could not get to the port of departure without long delay; yet it is said that we were sleeping on our job.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator mean now to argue that we are entitled to any glorious record on account of trucks? Let me read a telegram from Gen. Pershing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. On account of what?

Mr. REED. On account of trucks.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. REED. The telegram to which I refer is as follows:

OCTOBER 13.

Subparagraph (a)—

Failure to float reconnaissance and staff observation cars, to fill tonnage allotment, resulting in improper equipment of regiments and uneconomical diversion of passenger vehicles urgently needed for other purposes. Vehicles should be available and tonnage allotted, but only 55 reconnaissance cars and 75 staff observation cars arrived or were reported by ships during September and October. Please cable prospect for balance for October and November.

Failure to float light repair trucks greatly handicapped repair ordnance work. General motor transport situation does not permit diverting other transports for this purpose. Two hundred and sixty-four reported shipped in August and others presumably available. Tonnage allotments made and total arrivals or reported by ships to date, only 114.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I really do not see any criticism in that, except that they were in a hurry and, of course, anybody who needs equipment of any kind is anxious to get it. That is simply a request to have it expedited.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator see any criticism in the statement of the shortage? Does he see any criticism in this—

On account of the nonarrival of motor transport and animals as heretofore requested, our situation with respect to animal transport is becoming increasingly and alarmingly serious.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be true, but England had been in the war for four years trying to do things, and her supplies were short also.

Mr. REED. But the Senator has just been arguing that everything was supplied; and when I start to read him of a serious shortage, he replies that England was also short. Now, what does the Senator say to this one line? I presume he will also reply that England did something—

Unless supplies are furnished when cabled for, our armies will cease to operate.

PERSHING.

Does that sound very encouraging?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, Mr. President, of course we were anxious to get our soldiers over there, and no doubt Gen. Pershing was also; and, as shown by the statement I have here, the number of soldiers we transported overseas from April to November amounted, in the respective months, to 117,244, 277,000, 306,000, 281,000, 251,000, 174,000, and 30,000. Of course, if Gen. Pershing had stated, "I want 5,000,000 troops," we could not have forwarded them; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. REED. I was not talking about troops.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, the same thing is true as to supplies. They have to be manufactured; it is necessary to have the bottoms in which to ship them; many things have to be done, and, unless a person knows the exact situation, he can not appreciate the magnitude of the undertaking.

Mr. REED. I know that some things were done, and some things were not done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. REED. What I am replying to is this pretense of the department that they have done everything so marvelously well; and, when I show that there was a shortage, the Senator replies that England perhaps did not do as well. That is hardly an answer.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, it is an answer, because all things are relative; there is no doubt about that. If a demand is made for something before it can be obtained or manufactured, it is absurd to say that there is negligence on the part of anybody for not immediately sending it.

Mr. REED. The Senator claims that they performed their duty perfectly——

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.

Mr. REED. And then, when it is shown that it was performed imperfectly he says that everything is imperfect.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I mean to say that their undertakings were more nearly perfect than similar undertakings of any other nation that ever attempted such a task.

Now, Mr. President, as to four-wheel drive trucks, the number produced in the United States was 16,934, and the number shipped overseas, 9,420. Of ambulances there were 10,893 produced, and 6,981 shipped overseas. Of motor cars 17,666 were produced, and 6,989 shipped overseas. Of motorcycles 28,310 were produced, and 16,188 shipped overseas.

Mr. President, the War Department had also other duties to perform, and I wish to call attention to some of them. Here is the list of "Clothing and equipage stocks overseas November 1, 1918":

Stocks on hand in France and days' supply based on Gen. Pershing's new automatic allowances, effective November 1, 1918:

Number of blankets in United States, 4,294,000. Stock overseas, 1,119,000.

Number of days 2,000,000 men could be supplied with stock overseas in blankets, 425; in jerkins, 159 days.

Coats, stock in United States, 3,991,000. Stock overseas, 1,419,000.

Number of days 2,000,000 men could be supplied with stock overseas, 154.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know that a great many of those were made by Spain and England and France?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; not those that were shipped overseas.

Mr. SMOOT. They were overseas, it is true; but the Senator knows that we have spent now about $30,000,000,000, and we certainly ought to get something for that $30,000,000,000; and the Senator must know, if he knows where that clothing for overseas service was made, that a great part of it was made in England and Spain and France.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The criticism has been continual——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not criticizing at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator has been giving a thrust once in a while; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. But when the Senator stands up here and gives the Senate information, and leads them to believe that all these things were made in the United States, I can not agree with him.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I read the title as to what this was.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And this is what I say the War Department reports under that title.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt that they had those things on hand, but American money purchased them from foreign countries.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, certainly American money paid for them. We pay for our things. If we had had a shortage of a few blankets, we would have heard something from Senators upon that subject. If we had had a shortage of coats, we would have heard Senators, in a chorus of denunciation, proclaiming against the stupidity of the War Department. I do not know where the articles came from, but I do know they were there, and they were ready for the service of the soldiers.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator really invites criticism, I could say to him that it could be based upon the very things that the Senator has just mentioned; but I am not criticizing. What I wanted to do was to give the Government all the money that could possibly be spent, and I wanted them to get the goods wherever they could get them in the world; but I do not want credit given where credit is not due.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The heading of this was read. It gives this statement:

Clothing and equipage stocks overseas November 1, 1918.

Stocks on hand in France and days' supply based on Gen. Pershing's new automatic allowances effective November 1, 1918.

Now, whether they were purchased in Spain or whether they were purchased in the United States, I do not know; but we know that a great many were purchased in the United States.

We find that in the case of drawers the stock in the United States was 15,746,000, which must have been made in America, and the stock overseas was 5,304,000, enough to supply the Army in France for 202 days.

I do not want to go through all of this list of supplies purchased by the War Department for the Army.

In the supply of stockings, there were in the United States 16,290,000 pairs, and 8,753,000 pairs were overseas.

In the stock of coats, 4,142,000 were made, and 2,141,000 were in stock overseas.

This includes all of the furnishings and stock on hand, both for the soldiers in the cantonments and the soldiers in France.

There were 8,850,000 pairs of shoes in stock in the United States, and 2,033,000 pairs overseas. That shows evidently that there were manufactured in the United States at least 6,000,000 pairs of shoes, because that is the total stock now in the United States; and if you take that comparison you will find that very few of these goods, compared to the total manufactured in the United States, were manufactured in foreign countries. England had soldiers to supply. Spain did not; but Spain is not a great manufacturing country.

In the case of gloves, there were 3,734,000 pairs in stock in the United States, and 2,682,000 overseas.

In the case of overcoats, the stock in the United States was 3,691,000, and the stock overseas was 477,000.

In the case of raincoats, the stock in the United States was 1,620,000 and 550,000 overseas.

Winter undershirts, 13,806,000.

Mittens, 3,070,000.

Caps, 2,931,000.

As to diseases in the Army, I saw an account in a newspaper the other day showing by far the smallest percentage of deaths among our soldiers compared to the deaths from disease in the Civil and Spanish-American Wars, notwithstanding the fact that the most fatal epidemic known for centuries had existed during the last six months of the war.

Mr. President, such is part of the record of the War Department, and it demonstrates that there is no comparison between what the United States has done in the period of one year and a half and the results shown by other nations covering a much longer period of time.

I have always felt that when officers of the Government are endeavoring earnestly to do their duty, when they are working day and night for the success of this great war, they should not be subjected to the condemnation and the criticisms which have been made concerning their actions. No man is perfect; no man can do everything in the short time that is available for preparation for a great war; but we do know that here is a record giving each particular item, and I challenge comparison with any other nation as against that which was done by our own United States. This applies not only to the Secretary of War, whose record has been phenomenal, but it applies to all the other departments that have bent their energies toward the success of this great victory which we have achieved in behalf of liberty and civilization.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In behalf of the War Department, let me say that we have nine days more of this session of Congress. We have 14 supply bills necessary to pass to run the Government. The Army bill came over here this morning. Unless we make some progress, there will be no money with which to run the War Department in any way. Now, I was very much interested in the figures that the Senator read; but those bulletins from the War Department have come down here regularly for the last six months, and I was going to make this suggestion in order that we might pass the appropriation bills that are necessary to take care of the Army.

The Navy Department have a very good provision in the legislative bill. They provide an appropriation for the Navy to write its own history of this war. It might be well for those interested in the War Department to supplement that appropriation by providing an amount for the War Department to write its own history, instead of sending in bulletins; and then we might get right down to business and pass the appropriation bills.

I want to suggest to those who are interested in the War Department that we might compromise this matter, so that we could attend to business, by providing for an appropriation to authorize the War Department to write its own history; and I shall be very glad to accept that amendment, if the Senator or somebody else interested will offer it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I am one of the Members of this body who very seldom occupy the attention of the Senate. I never make a long speech. I have spoken about an hour, and the tirade against the administration occupied from 15 minutes of 1 o'clock until 15 minutes of 5 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I assure the Senator that I am not discussing him in this connection. I am talking about the bulletins that come down here. This is only one of a number.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; that may be. I had no intention of speaking to-day or at any other time upon this subject; but while Senators were laying emphasis upon the large numbers of soldiers in cantonments and the lack of excuse for not releasing them I went to the telephone and obtained the exact number; and the real facts, which, added to the information contained in this document made up by the War Department, show a record of efficiency that is marvelous, indeed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks in the RECORD the tables to which I referred.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Clothing and equipage stocks overseas, Nov. 1, 1918.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3797) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. MYERS. I ask leave that the reading of the amendments may be dispensed with. I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments, and request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt the Senator from Montana in reference to this particular bill, but there is an appropriation bill before the Senate which was reported some days ago, and it has been before the Senate the entire day and no progress has been made on it.

Mr. MYERS. This is just a request for a conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I expect to move an adjournment at half past 6 o'clock, so that these matters may be taken up in the morning hour to-morrow. There are but nine days left of this session, and I think the Senate ought to give some opportunity for the consideration of the supply bills that it is necessary to have passed.

Mr. MYERS. This will take only a minute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I intend to move that the Senate adjourn at half past 6 o'clock, so that Senators may have an opportunity to bring up these matters in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. MYERS. But I can not do it then. This has no place in the morning hour. There is no heading of business at all for it. This is a privileged question, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). This is a message from the House and is a privileged communication, as the Chair understands. The Senate has heard the motion of the Senator from Montana that the Senate refuse to concur in the House amendments and asks for a conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MYERS, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

DEMOBILIZATION OF TROOPS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very sorry to take a minute or so, particularly after the remarks of the Senator in charge of this bill; and I think his remarks are entirely justified.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They were not personal at all.

Mr. REED. I know they were not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I simply wanted to proceed with the appropriation bill; that is all.

Mr. REED. In what I said this afternoon I undertook to call attention not to the general shortcomings of the War Department but to the fact that our soldiers are being held in camp and that they are not being sent home as rapidly as we want them—at least, not as rapidly as some of us want them. I did not undertake a criticism of the way in which the War Department had conducted the war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I did not say that the Senator had. I was criticizing generally the statements that had been made in the last two or three months in this Chamber, principally by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. REED. Well, the Senator got me so confused and mixed with Senators on the other side and with the criticism that I confess I could not differentiate between myself and them; but that is all right. The Senator never means to do an injustice to anybody, and I know he would not do one to me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir.

Mr. REED. But I wish to take a minute to call attention to the fact that every time anybody calls attention to anything that is wrong the cry is always raised, "You are criticizing everything that is done." That is the cloak under which refuge is taken in every case.

Now, I want it understood that the Congress has a right to criticize. It is true that there are a good many men who have lost the power of criticism. There are some men who are under some kind of hypnotic influence that has made it impossible for them to do anything except to exclaim, "Me, too!" to every proposition which comes over to them. They stand in the light of the great white throne of glory, blinded, and they do whatever they are told to do, regardless of their opinions. In fact, they cease to have any opinions. Now, that is just a little nauseating, and I do not wonder that the Congress comes into the contempt of the public and into the contempt of the Executive. I do not think it is the business of Congress to stand here and pick flaws with everything, but neither do I think it is the business of Congress to do nothing but stand here in the attitude of glorification, singing "Te Deum laudamus."

The thing that I want to say at this moment is that I am sorry the War Department is sending out any such mess of figures as it gave here to-day. I am sorry it has resorted to it. There were many good things done in this war; many things were splendidly done; but I will tell you that the best job that was done in this war was not done by the War Department. It was done in the homes of America, where there was raised the best material for soldiers that God ever put on this earth. That job was not done by the War Department. Another thing the War Department did not do: It did not produce the wealth of this country. That was produced by the people.

Now, far be it from me to stand here and harshly criticize. Many things may be praised, but when the War Department sends in figures here, trying to convince this body and the country that every supply was on hand, that everything was just as it ought to be, that it performed miracles, that it had airplanes that darkened the skies, and all that sort of stuff, it is not telling the truth, and it is not reflecting any credit upon itself.

I am going to read a telegram, and I have a lot more like it. I am just going to read it to show how misleading figures can be:

SEPTEMBER 13.

Experience of last three months, during which our tonnage receipts fell far short of our expectations, made it necessary to call attention in most positive terms to conditions which have resulted——

Mr. SMOOT. Was that in 1918?

Mr. REED. Oh, yes.

It has been necessary to place combatant troops in the lines shortly after their arrival in France. Divisions have at intervals been employed in quiet or active sectors according to their degree of training, but all must be employed if we are to reap full advantage of the present favorable situation. In most essential articles of engineer and quartermaster equipment we are over our estimated allotments for June, July, and August, but all other departments are short in percentages figured on a tonnage allotment basis, as follows: Ordnance Department, 33 per cent; Signal Corps, 52 per cent; Chemical Warfare Service, 51 per cent; Medical Corps, 23 per cent; Motor Transport, 81 per cent; and railroad transportation, 20 per cent. At the present time our ability to supply and maneuver our forces depends largely on motor transportation. The shortage in motor transportation is particularly embarrassing, now due to the shortage of horses for our horse-drawn transports. We are able to carry out present plans due to the fact—that we have been able to borrow, temporarily, large numbers of trucks and ambulances from the French. We have also borrowed 15 American ambulance sections from Italy. The shortage of ambulances to move our wounded is critical. Attention is called to our shortage in motor transportation, as contained in our cable 1606, subparagraph A. These shortages have been augmented by troops arriving since that time. In this connection attention is called to the fact that we have already been called upon to equip with motor transportation 8 of the 10 divisions which have come over to us from the British.

Now, notice this—

We have reached the point where we can no longer improvise or borrow. The most important plans and operations depend upon certainty that the home Government will deliver at French port material and equipment called for. It is urged that foregoing be given most serious consideration and that tonnage allotted for supply of Army in France be sufficient to deliver material and equipment properly proportioned in kind and amounts to meet the needs of our troops. The need of motor transportation is urgent. It is not understood why greater advantage has not been taken of deck space to ship motor trucks. Trucks do not overburden dock accommodations nor require railroad transportation, which in fact it relieves. Can you not impress this upon shipping authorities?

PERSHING.

Now, I have a stack of these here, and I do not intend to read them, for there is no use encouraging people, but I do not want very much more of this stuff sent over by the War Department or I will read it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say merely one word at this time about the custom that has grown up in the departments here in Washington. There is not a citizen in the United States who does not know that there has been some splendid work done by every one of our departments. We have had some officials in the departments who could not have done better, and no one else could have done more than they did, but there were other officials who were a total failure, and it ill becomes anyone to try to make an excuse for them.

I have noticed of late that if there is a criticism either in the House or in the Senate the same parties who are criticized send up a load of stuff from the departments and get some one to get up in the Senate or the House and read it as an excuse. I think that that practice ought to be stopped. Senators can get all the information they desire at any time they wish it without having some little official down in one of the departments who has been criticized, as soon as he hears about it, send a telephone message up and send a whole lot of stuff to encumber the RECORD.

I am one who has not uttered a word of criticism in relation to the war and the caring for every department of it, but that does not mean that I do not know that there have been criminal mistakes. That does not mean that I do not know the waste has been indefensible, and the people's money has been squandered by the hundreds of millions of dollars, and there has not been any return from it. My whole thought and idea was to win the war, and I did not care if the head of a department came before the Appropriations Committee and asked for a billion dollars; I did not go into the question as to whether it was all wanted immediately or not; I made the statement upon the floor of the Senate that I was going to vote for all that was asked, and I would hold the administration responsible for the expenditure of the money. The time will come when they will have to answer for it, Mr. President. If it is well spent, the American people will know it, and if it has been squandered in any way the American people will be advised of it.

AMERICAN SHIPPING PROBLEM.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that when the Senate convenes on Monday, the 24th instant, I shall present a brief diagnosis of the American shipping problem arising out of the recent world war.

MARKET PRICE OF LIBERTY BONDS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to refer for just a moment to the statement made by the chairman of the Finance Committee with reference to liberty bonds. It is a good ways from that in the RECORD now, but he made one statement that I do not think ought to be passed over without notice. He stated that all those who purchased the 3½ per cent liberty bonds did it knowing that the bonds would go below par.

Mr. President, those who are accustomed to dealing in bonds probably knew that, but in my judgment the great mass of the people who purchased a small amount of bonds—a $50 bond or a $100 bond—did not know it. As a matter of fact, men went all over this country stating from public platforms that every man who bought a $50 bond was simply investing $50, and he would get that $50 back with the interest whenever he wanted it. That was uttered by four-minute men all over the country, by representatives of the Government, by Senators and Representatives in Congress, and by the Secretary of the Treasury himself in his trips throughout the country. As I said, the men who are accustomed to deal in bonds probably knew that they would be below par, but the ordinary citizen in purchasing those bonds thought he was getting $50 worth when he got a $50 bond.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, bearing upon the point which the Senator from Washington has called to the attention of the Senate, I desire to have the Secretary read a letter which I have received in reference to the bonds and the price at which they are selling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SLAB FORK COAL CO.,
Slab Fork, W. Va., February 17, 1919.

Hon. HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: From the papers I see that Mr. Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, has asked Congress to place before the people in April a so-called victory loan.

I supported four liberty loans and will support the victory loan. But unless either Congress or Secretary Glass does something to raise the liberty bonds scattered about the country to par, I fear we of Raleigh County, W. Va., will have a hard time raising our quota.

The four-minute men and others led the people to believe that bonds were money, and the United States liberty bonds would all be of the same value. Since work has gone to the bad many miners are selling their bonds, and don't understand why a $50 bond is only worth $46 or thereabouts. The bond sharks are doing a thriving business. I understand that $50 bonds have sold at Slab Fork for $35.

Many business men who subscribed for $1,000 to $5,000 of bonds are worried over the market condition of the bonds and are not as enthusiastic about the coming victory loan as we would like to have them. And if this victory loan bond is made so inviting that it will drive the liberties lower on the market I very much fear the mining world will do but little, if anything, in the coming victory drive.

Exempt all liberty bonds from taxes. Give the same rate of interest for liberty bonds and victory bonds and you will restore confidence and invite thrift.

Yours, truly, W. GASTON CAPERTON,
General Manager.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at line 24, on page 43, and read as follows:

Bureau of War Risk Insurance: For expenses of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as authorized by law: For salaries of the director and commissioners, and of such deputies, assistants, accountants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, $9,509,630; stationery and minor office supplies, $150,000; miscellaneous expenses, including telephones, telegrams, freight, express, foreign postage, not exceeding $100 for street car fares, and not exceeding $500 for law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $25,000; printing and binding, to be done at the Government Printing Office, and necessary printing of forms, etc., for use abroad may be done abroad, $125,000; furniture, equipment, and supplies, $175,000; traveling expenses (exclusive of field investigations), $5,000; salaries and expenses of employees engaged in field investigations and expenses of not more than eight temporary branch offices, $1,000,000; in all, $10,989,630: Provided, That all employees appropriated for by this paragraph shall be engaged exclusively on the work of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance during the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I never noticed when the bill was under consideration by the committee the item in line 13, on page 44, "exclusive of field investigation," $5,000 for traveling expenses. I thought all travel allowances were for field investigations. This is new, is it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will have to look into the matter. I will say to the Senator I do not remember whether it was carried in last year's bill or not.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not a copy of last year's bill before me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will find it in a minute. I am inclined to think that this is a reappropriation.

Mr. WARREN. If it were in the last bill it would be noted in the committee print, would it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that that is the current law; it is the customary language.

Mr. SMOOT. I have just turned to the committee print and I see that those words were used in the last year's appropriation bill. I see it was put in by the House and I will not object to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill whether he is satisfied with the wording of the provision, beginning on line 9, page 44, which reads:

Printing and binding, to be done at the Government Printing Office, and necessary printing of forms, etc., for use abroad may be done abroad, $125,000.

It does not seem to me that that conveys a clear intention. It provides that the work shall be done at the Government Printing Office and then that it may be done abroad if for use abroad.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a general law that all printing of that class shall be done at the Government Printing Office. There is an exception made in this particular case where it is impossible to do it at the Government Printing Office. I think that is all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would it not be necessary, then, to separate the items and provide specifically for printing abroad?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This language has been carried in the bill, as it is now, for some years and never has given any trouble. We have operated under it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill with reference to line 15. It reads:

Salaries and expenses of employees engaged in field investigations and expenses of not more than eight temporary branch offices, $1,000,000.

Where are these temporary branch offices? What are they for? Why are they temporary?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator will pardon me for just a moment. If I can turn to the hearing I can give more full information. My understanding is that there were certain temporary offices to aid in the expedition of the work of classification and investigation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Where were they located?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not read all the hearing, but this will give an idea. The Senator will find the same matter was discussed by Mr. Brown, who was then acting chief of this bureau, and Mr. Nesbit, on page 1019 of the hearings before the House committee. This throws light on it. It is stated on page 1020 by Mr. Nesbit:

At least 40,000 allotments and allowances are paid to people in foreign countries—15,000 in Italy, 2,500 in Greece, and in 15 or 16 other foreign countries. These cases all require investigation.

These outside offices were established for the purpose of investigating the validity of the claims for allowances.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Those offices are really in other countries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding is that some of them are in the United States; that not all of them are in foreign countries, but a part are in foreign countries and a part in this country. It is to facilitate the question of investigation as to whether the allotments were valid and not fraudulent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suppose that they were considered necessary during the exigencies of the war, and when we get down to a normal basis they are expected to be done away with.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose when the war is over and we get down to a normal basis a very large proportion of the machinery of this office and the expensive work will be abolished, although the office itself will be a permanent office in the future.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; and there will be a very large force too.

Mr. President, I simply want to say that, as the Senator understands, when this bill was brought out of the subcommittee it was put through the full committee very speedily, and some of us at work elsewhere did not have an opportunity to go over the bill very fully when it was reported from the subcommittee. While I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations I did not have an opportunity to participate very much in the consideration of the bill. As I said, it was called up and hurried through, and my recollection is in the afternoon when the Senate was in session. There were some matters I had to look after and I could not be there. If I ask questions about some of the items that is the reason why.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am only too glad to give any information that I can in reference to this bill. I am only too glad to have the attention of the Senate directed to the bill. This bill takes care of the salaries of all the executive departments of the Government and it would be very hard for the Government to run without it. We have been in session to-day for over six hours. We have read one page of the bill. At this rate I think we will get through probably a dozen pages before the 4th of March, but as long as the time is occupied in the consideration of the bill I have no objection at all.

Mr. President, I am going to move for an executive session for a few minutes, as one of the Senators desires to refer a nomination. That will take only a minute. Then I wish to announce when that is over I intend to move that the Senate take an adjournment until 11 o'clock to-morrow, but I want to ask the Senate as far as this particular bill is concerned, if it is possible, to let us get down to-morrow and really consider the bill, because I think it really would be a reflection on the Senate if we finally scrapped these great supply bills without a reasonable effort to pass them.

In the last analysis, Mr. President, the principal business to which Congress should direct its efforts is to pass the revenue bills to raise the money to run the Government and to pass the supply bills that will take care of the machinery and operations of the Government; and very little along that line has been done at this session of Congress.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4723) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15835. An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 20, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 19, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the brave men who answered the call of the colors when the world was imperiled, and those who braved the dangers of the ocean, who did their work and did it well, and are now returning to the land they love, with new laurels added to the American soldier, with Old Glory upheld and sustained through the perilous fight—her stars and stripes still streaming o'er us with added luster.

Some are coming back strong and well, others sick and wounded. Some are left where they fell on the field of carnage.

May those who come back have a warm welcome and be held in sacred memory by all true lovers of liberty.

God grant that the principles they fought for may live and be a blessing to mankind. Grant that the dead may live in our memory, the wounded be ours to care for. In Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BARNHART, for one day, on account of illness.

LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY ADDRESS OF MR. SLOAN.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by Hon. CHARLES H. SLOAN, of Nebraska, on the life and character of Lincoln before the Grand Army of the Republic, the Woman's Relief Corps, and other patriotic organizations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] on Lincoln's Birthday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HON. JOUETT SHOUSE.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the appointment of my colleague, Hon. JOUETT SHOUSE, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks leave to print in the RECORD a speech about his colleague, Mr. SHOUSE, becoming Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

S. 3646. An act to grant rights of way over Government lands for dam and reservoir purposes, for the conservation and storage of water to be used by the city of San Diego, Cal., and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 107. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Francis Asbury; and

S. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution providing that one term of the United States District Court for the Eastern Judicial District of Oklahoma shall be held annually at Hugo, Okla.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and had appointed Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. JONES of Washington as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries from consideration of House resolution 562, calling upon the President for certain information in accordance with section 12 of the shipping act approved September 7, 1916.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the resolution, and it will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to report to the House of Representatives for its information all the facts within the knowledge of the United States Shipping Board, as required to be reported by section 12 of the act entitled "An act to establish a United States Shipping Board, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, including the recommendations made by the United States Shipping Board relating to seamen's wages, equalization of the higher cost, if any, of building ships in American yards, and the method or policy adopted for operating American ships in competition with foreign-owned ships, whether by the United States Government or by private corporations or individual American citizens; also full information as to the plans which have been adopted for providing stations for furnishing fuel for United States vessels in all parts of the world.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order that the resolution is not privileged. What committee has the resolution been referred to?

Mr. MANN. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It strikes me from hearing it read that it calls for a question of policy. Of course I have not seen a copy of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. I will give the gentleman a copy. The gentleman's impression is a very natural one, from listening to the reading of the resolution; but what the resolution calls for is a statement of fact as to recommendations which have been made by the Shipping Board as to certain subjects. That is purely a question of fact.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that I was merely reserving the point of order until I could read the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, I understand; but what it calls for is recommendations, among other things, which have been made as to equalization of costs, the payment of seamen's wages, and the policy to be pursued, so it does not call for any conclusions.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I see now that it does not call for any explanations, but merely for facts.

Mr. MANN. It calls for recommendations which have already been made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on discharging the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries from further consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RETENTION OF UNIFORMS BY SOLDIERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 13366, known as the bill for the retention of uniforms by the soldiers, be laid before the House, and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who has served in the United States Army or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman willing to let that go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. MOON. We are very anxious to get through with this. I do not think it will take over half an hour.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. MOON. I ask unanimous consent to read the statement in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to have the statement read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1088).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 36, 39, 40, 41, and 49.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 37, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, and 73, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That hereafter all days, other than the holidays enumerated in the act of July 28, 1916, making appropriations for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, set aside by the President of the United States as holidays to be observed by the other departments of the Government throughout the United States shall be construed as applicable to the Postal Service in the same manner and to the same extent as the executive departments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $850,500 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane mail service between such points, including service to and between points in Alaska, as he may determine. The Postmaster General in expending this appropriation shall purchase, as far as practicable, such available and suitable equipment and supplies for the aeroplane mail service as may be owned by or under construction for the War Department or the Navy Department when no longer required because of the cessation of war activities, and it shall be his duty to first ascertain if such articles of the character described may be secured from the War Department or the Navy Department before purchasing such equipment or supplies elsewhere. If such equipment or supplies, other than emergency supplies, are purchased elsewhere than from the War Department or the Navy Department, the Postmaster General shall report such action to Congress, together with the reasons for such purchases. All articles purchased from either of said departments shall be paid for at a reasonable price considering wear and tear and general condition. Said departments are authorized to sell such equipment and supplies to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to deliver immediately to the Postmaster General, as he may request, and as hereinbefore provided, such aeroplane machines, supplies, equipment, and parts as may be serviceable and available for the aeroplane mail service, the same to be out of any equipment that the War Department or the Navy Department has on hand or under construction, the War Department and the Navy Department appropriations to be credited with the equipment turned over to the Post Office Department: And provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for aeroplane mail service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "$1,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"Provided, That hereafter rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes on which daily service is performed shall receive $24 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage, and rural carriers assigned to horse-drawn vehicle routes on which triweekly service is performed shall receive $12 per mile per annum for each mile said routes are in excess of 24 miles or major fraction thereof, based on actual mileage: Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1920 the pay of carriers who furnish and maintain their own motor vehicles and who serve routes not less than 50 miles in length may be fixed at not exceeding $2,250 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senate restore the word "herein," at the end of line 15 on page 28, and add the following: ": Provided, further, That no assistant postmaster or supervisory official at offices of the first class shall receive a less salary than $100 per annum in excess of the sixth-grade salary provided for clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service, nor shall an assistant postmaster at any office of the second class be paid a less salary than that paid the highest-salaried clerk or letter carrier employed in such office: Provided further, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangement with the Post Office Department, or to employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation: And provided further, That the increased compensation at the rate of 10 per cent and 15 per cent for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and the increased compensation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, shall not be computed as salary in construing this section. So much as may be necessary for the increases provided for in this act is hereby appropriated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes,' approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term 'rural post roads,' as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road a major portion of which is now used or can be used, or forms a connecting link not to exceed 10 miles in length of any road or roads now or hereafter used for the transportation of the United States mails, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart: Provided, That section 6 of said act be further amended so that the limitation of payments not to exceed $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make, be, and the same is, increased to $20,000 per mile.

"SEC. 6. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act, as herein amended, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following additional sums: The sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and available immediately; the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and the sum of $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; said additional sums to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act: Provided, That where the constitution of any State prohibits the same from engaging upon internal improvements, or from contracting public debts for extraordinary purposes in an amount sufficient to meet the monetary requirements of the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, or restricts annual tax levies for the purpose of constructing and improving roads and bridges, and where a constitutional alteration or amendment to overcome either or all of such prohibitions must be submitted to a referendum at a general election, the sum to which such State is entitled under the method of apportionment provided in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, shall be withdrawn by the Secretary of the Treasury from the principal fund appropriated by the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, upon receipt of the certification of the governor of such State to the existence of either or all of said prohibitions, and such sum shall be carried by the Secretary of the Treasury as a separate fund for future disbursement as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That when, by referendum, the constitutional alterations or amendments necessary to the enjoyment of the sum so withdrawn have been approved and ratified by any State, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of certification from the governor of such State to such effect, shall immediately make available to such State, for the purposes set forth in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, the sum withdrawn as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under its existing constitution and laws: Provided further, That in the expenditure of this fund for labor preference shall be given, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, but any other preference or discrimination among citizens of the United States in connection with the expenditure of this appropriation is hereby declared to be unlawful.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture all available war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for use in the improvement of highways, and that the same be distributed among the highway departments of the several States to be used on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid, such distribution to be made upon a value basis of distribution the same as provided by the Federal aid road act, approved July 11, 1916: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, at his discretion, may reserve from such distribution not to exceed 10 per cent of such material, equipment, and supplies for use in the construction of national forest roads or other roads constructed under his direct supervision.

"SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $3,000,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the sum of $3,000,000, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the sum of $3,000,000, available until expended by the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with the proper officials of the State, Territory, insular possession, or county, in the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within or partly within the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources of the same or desirable for the proper administration, protection, and improvement of any such forest. Out of the sums so appropriated the Secretary of Agriculture may, without the cooperation of such officials, survey, construct, and maintain any road or trail within a national forest which he finds necessary for the proper administration, protection, and improvement of such forest, or which in his opinion is of national importance. In the expenditure of this fund for labor preference shall be given, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

"The Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 72: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Strike out the language proposed by the Senate, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That no officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be detailed for work on the roads which come within the provisions of this act except by his own consent: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture through the War Department shall ascertain the number of days any such soldiers, sailors, and marines have worked on the public roads in the several States (other than roads within the limits of cantonments or military reservations in the several States) during the existing war and also the location where they worked and their names and rank, and report to Congress at the beginning of its next regular session: Provided further, That when any officer or enlisted man in the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps shall have been or may be in the future detailed for labor in the building of roads or other highway construction or repair work (other than roads within the limits of cantonments or military reservations in the several States) during the existing war, the pay of such officer or enlisted man shall be equalized to conform to the compensation paid to civilian employees in the same or like employment and the amount found to be due such officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines, less the amount of his pay as such officer, soldier, sailor, or marine, shall be paid to him from the 1920 appropriation herein allotted to the States wherein such highway construction or repair work was or will be performed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 13308, entitled, "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees as to each of said amendments.

The Senate recedes from amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 39, 40, and 41. These amendments proposed to increase the compensation of supervisory officials in post offices of the first and second class, inspectors in the post-office inspection service, and assistant division superintendents in the Railway Mail Service, receiving salaries in excess of $2,200 per annum, from an increase of 5 per cent, as proposed by the House, to approximately 10 per cent, as proposed by the amendments of the Senate.

The managers upon the part of the House agree to amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, 12, 13, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 42, and 43, which necessarily increases the amount of the appropriation for the payment of salaries to postal employees provided for in the various sections of the bill, because of the legislation contained in section 2, which extends the temporary increases, with slight modifications, hereinafter explained in connection with amendments 51 to 69, inclusive, provided for in the current fiscal year. The bill as it passed the House did not provide for the increased appropriations in the various sections of the bill necessary to carry out the provisions of section 2, except by general language making available the necessary funds without specifically stating the amount. The Senate, by its amendments in the various sections of the bill, made the necessary increases in the total amounts.

On amendment 8: Increases the compensation to postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third class from $35,000,000 to $36,500,000. This is necessary because of the legislation proposed by the House and concurred in by the Senate authorizing the Postmaster General to readjust the salaries of such postmasters, effective July 1, 1919, in accordance with the law regulating the salaries of postmasters prior to the war, except that in making such adjustment no allowance shall be made for the revenue derived from increased rates on first-class mail.

On amendment 9: Increasing the number of assistant postmasters from 50 to 60 at salaries not to exceed $3,000 per annum becomes necessary because of the advance in salary of postmasters at first-class offices in consequence of the legislation authorizing the readjustment of the salaries of postmasters at offices of the first, second, and third class.

The managers upon the part of the House agree to amendment 22, providing for the promotion of 85 per cent of clerks in first and second class post offices from the fifth to the sixth grade and the promotion of 15 per cent of sixth-grade clerks to special clerks in grades of $1,300 and $1,400 in view of section 2, which supersedes the act of March 2, 1907, classifying clerks and city letter carriers in first and second class post offices, and restores automatic promotions. Under the reclassification act of July 2, 1918, clerks and carriers are automatically advanced $100 per year to the sixth grade at a salary of $1,500 per annum. The managers upon the part of the House agree to amendment 23 because the language stricken out is unnecessary in view of the reclassification act of July 2, 1918.

The managers on the part of the House agree to amendment 24 substituting the word "hereafter" for the word "thereafter" which was a clerical error in the print of the bill as it passed the House.

On amendment 25: Agreed to by the managers of the House, inserts the word "practicable" in the legislation proposed by the House requiring the employment of a substitute clerk if available rather than requiring a regular clerk to work overtime. The effect of the legislation as it passed the House, as pointed out by officials of the Post Office Department, would in many instances seriously interfere with prompt handling of the mails.

On amendment 30: Increases the amount for temporary and auxiliary clerk hire and for substitute clerk hire from $5,000,000, as proposed in the amendment of the Senate, to $6,000,000, which the Post Office Department insists will be necessary for the service during the next fiscal year. As it passed the House the appropriation was for $6,500,000.

On amendment 36: As proposed by the Senate strikes out the House provision which diverted $60,000 from the appropriation for vehicle allowance, etc., for the erection and equipment of a garage on a site owned by the Government adjoining the post-office building in the District of Columbia and inserted in lieu thereof an amendment authorizing the Postmaster General, in his discretion, to contract for pneumatic mail tube service upon such terms as may be agreed upon in the cities of New York and Brooklyn, and further provided that pending acting by Congress the properties of the pneumatic mail tube service within the basements and subbasements of post-office buildings in Philadelphia, Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Chicago, and St. Louis be not removed, but remain undisturbed without expense to the Government. The Senate recedes from its amendment respecting the pneumatic mail tube service and also the amendment striking out the provision for the construction of a garage. The bill as agreed upon contains no provision concerning pneumatic mail tube service.

On amendment 37: Relates to the compensation for the transportation of mail on Lake Winnepesaukee from the post office at Laconia, N. H., who furnishes his own equipment. This provision has been included in all recent appropriation bills. The unusual circumstances surrounding this contract, in the opinion of the conferees, justifies the legislation.

On amendment 38: Increases the amount that the Postmaster General may expend for Aeroplane Mail Service from $300,000, as proposed by the House, to $850,500, and the language proposed by the Senate lodges with him larger discretion respecting the character of equipment that he may purchase from either the War Department or the Navy Department for the service where such equipment is no longer necessary for war purposes. The language of the amendment, with certain modifications, agreed to by the House, directs the Postmaster General to purchase such supplies and equipment either from the War Department or Navy Department, if suitable for the Aeroplane Service, at a reasonable price, considering wear and tear and general condition; and in event purchase of equipment is made elsewhere, a report shall be submitted to Congress, together with the reasons for such purchases. Provision is made that separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for Aeroplane Mail Service. In the opinion of the managers of the House, the language of the Senate amendment is an improvement of the provisions of the House. The increased amount was shown to be necessary, in view of the fact that $300,000 would not be sufficient to continue the experiment for Aeroplane Mail Service upon a basis that would demonstrate its usefulness in the Postal Service. With the sum of $850,500 proposed the department explains that it will be enabled to establish one representative aeroplane mail route approximately 1,100 miles in length and provide the necessary equipment therefor. It was represented that any less sum would not be sufficient to insure a fair or thorough experiment.

On amendment 44: Agreed to by the House managers, increases from $1.20 to $2 per day the amount that may be allowed railway postal clerks assigned to duty in railway post-office cars while on duty for more than 10 hours from the time of beginning their initial run. The practice of the department is to divide the sum into four equal parts, allowing, under present law, 30 cents for each meal and 30 cents for a bed. The conferees are of the opinion that 30 cents for these items is not sufficient under present conditions. Under the law the clerk is entitled only to the amount expended by him, not to exceed 30 cents per item.

On amendment 45: Increases the appropriation for wrapping twine and tying devices from $420,000 to $560,000, which the department insists is necessary to take care of the growth of the service.

On amendment 46: Increases the amount of $1,500,000 proposed by the Senate to $2,000,000, for the purchase, manufacture, and repair of mail bags, etc. As it passed the House, the appropriation was for $2,435,000. The increased appropriation over the bill last year is necessary because of the growth of the service and the immense quantity of mail bags necessary for the over-seas mail service, where it is explained that large quantities of mail bags have been lost or used by the War Department for emergency military purposes.

On amendment 47: The increased appropriation is necessary to carry out the provisions of section 2, which increases the salaries of rural-delivery carriers 25 per cent in excess of their basic salary, which is an increase of 5 per cent over the increase proposed by the House.

On amendment 48: The language proposed by the Senate continues the allowance of $24 per mile to rural carriers in each mile traveled in excess of 24 miles and increases for the fiscal year the compensation for motor-vehicle carriers who serve routes not less than 50 miles in length from $2,160 per annum to $2,250 per annum, an advance over the current temporary increase of 5 per cent.

On amendment 49: This amendment restores the provision of the House appropriating $1,250,000 for village delivery service and also provides service in communities adjacent to cities having City Delivery Service.

On amendment 50: This amendment decreased from $1,000,000, the amount provided for experimental motor-vehicle truck service, to $300,000 and prescribes the conditions under which the experiments may be made which in the opinion of the conferees is necessary and essential to a determination of the wisdom of such service.

On amendments numbered 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69: These amendments extend to employees in the Postal Service increased salary allowances because of the high cost of living throughout the country. As it passed the House the increased allowance was made permanent law. The Senate by its amendments limits the increases to the next fiscal year.

Section 2 of the bill as agreed to in conference in effect is the same as proposed by the House with the exception that it is temporary and increases the compensation for rural-delivery carriers and motor-route carriers, on routes in excess of 50 miles in length to 25 per cent in advance of their basic salaries, or 5 per cent in addition to the increases proposed by the House. Section 2 is further amended by a provision agreed to in conference as a substitute for an amendment proposed by the Senate, which provides that in offices of the first class no assistant postmaster or supervisory official shall receive a less salary than $100 per annum in excess of the sixth grade salary provided for clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service and in offices of the second class that assistant postmasters shall not be paid a less salary than that paid the highest-salaried clerk or letter carrier employed in such office.

Section 2 restores automatic promotions to clerks and carriers and railway postal clerks. The per cent increases for employees as provided in the current appropriation bill is continued for another year. The $200 increase for assistant postmasters and supervisory officials whose salaries are less than $2,200, as provided in the current bill, are continued, and the salaries of such employees in excess of $2,200 are increased 5 per cent, the same as in the current law.

On amendment 70: The language of the Senate amendment contained in section 3, which creates a commission to investigate and readjust the salaries of postal employees, is accepted by the managers on the part of the House in lieu of the language as it passed the House.

On amendment 71: The managers upon the part of the House concur in the Senate provision which amends the definition of rural post roads on which Federal aid may be applied in their construction and maintenance and increases the limit of $10,000 per mile, which may be expended, to $20,000. Section 6 increases the appropriations available for Federal aid by $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and a like sum for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; and also provides that the amount allotted to the various States shall be held as a separate fund in the Treasury for future expenditure in such States where the fundamental law of the State prohibits appropriations for internal improvements until such States have amended the fundamental law so as to be able to participate in the funds provided. Provision is also made, other conditions being equal, that in the expenditure of the fund preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Section 7 directs the Secretary of War in his discretion to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture, for distribution among the several States upon the same basis of distribution as provided in the Federal aid act of all available war material, equipment, and supplies not needed for the purposes of the war.

Section 8 increases the appropriations for the construction of roads and trails within or partly within the national forests from $1,000,000 per annum during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1919, 1920, and 1921, by $3,000,000 per annum, and also contains a provision that preference shall be given in the employment of labor, other conditions being equal, to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Section 9 prohibits the detail of any officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the construction or repair of roads that come within the provisions of the act except by his own consent, and further directs the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain through the War Department the number of days and the location where such soldiers, sailors, and marines have worked on the public roads, other than those within the limits of cantonments or military reservations, and directs that in such cases their compensation shall be equalized to conform to that of civilian employees in similar employment, the amount found to be due to be deducted from the allotment in the 1920 appropriation to such State wherein the work was performed, less his compensation as such soldier or sailor, and paid to him from the allotment of such State wherein the work was done. The same provisions are made applicable to soldiers, sailors, and marines who may be in the future, during the existing war, detailed to work upon such roads.

On amendment 73: The House recedes, which is merely a correction in the number of the section.

JOHN A. MOON,
THOS. M. BELL,
A. B. ROUSE,
H. STEENERSON,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr MOON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I think it hardly necessary to discuss this bill except in a very general way. You are familiar with the bill. The report is rather complete, and the statement of the House conferees is, I think, a fair statement of the effect of the provisions of the bill and of the Senate amendments.

Mr. Speaker, when the bill left the House it carried in round numbers $357,000,000. However, the House must understand that that amount did not include the increase of salaries for clerks and carriers as provided in the bill. There was at the close of the bill a general provision that made the appropriation available for the payment of increase of personnel allowed in the bill for carriers and clerks as it had been in the previous bill.

The computation of that amount would have increased the figures of the bill as it left the House from three hundred and fifty-seven millions to three hundred and ninety eight millions in round numbers. So it is but fair to say that the bill as it reached the Senate carried nearly $400,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the gentleman's computation, the increase of salaries was about $30,000,000?

Mr. MOON. Nearly forty million, taking all the increases.

Mr. GARNER. That is an increase in the present fiscal bill?

Mr. MOON. Yes. The Senate made seventy-odd amendments to this bill, but a great number of the amendments are due to the fact that they did not calculate the amount of the salaries upon the basic law, as the House had done, but it included the amount of the increase of salary. That accounts for a great many amendments that the Senate put on.

The Senate added various provisions to the bill. I do not deem it necessary to discuss all the items in the bill, but I will take up a few of the more important amendments.

We provided for the clerks and carriers, with their salaries and automatic promotion and permanent law. The Senate insisted that that should be a temporary provision and not permanent, by reason of the fact that both Houses, they said, had agreed to a commission for the purpose of adjusting and making salaries permanent and that all the other departments of the Government had made the salaries temporary. We felt that there was some force in the position under these circumstances, and therefore we yielded to the suggestion of the Senate that the salaries should be made for the fiscal year ending June, 1920—making them temporary and not permanent.

On the question of rural carriers the Senate insisted on an increase in their pay. It was thought by the House conferees that that question ought also to abide the action of the commission, but so persistent was the Senate that in order to have an agreement on the matter at all the majority of the House conferees agreed to the increase in the pay of rural carriers to the amount of $60 apiece per annum. That is also temporary.

A commission was provided for, to be appointed by the Vice President on the part of the Senate and by the Speaker on the part of the House, of five men from each body, to consider the question of salaries, the readjustment of salaries in the Postal Service, and the House accepted the language of the Senate amendment because it is broader and more comprehensive, I think, and more satisfactory than the language of the House.

On the question of motor trucks the House placed $1,000,000 in the bill for the purpose of establishing motor-truck communication between the country and cities, particularly in that portion of the country where the rural routes were not paralleled by the railroads. It seems that the experiment heretofore made, or many experiments, were made along the lines of parallel railway and dirt roads. In the collection of the matter to be transported a large class of the first-class mail was diverted from the railroads to the trucks, and the trucks were given credit for it, and the space occupied by the Government on the railroads was not utilized for the purpose that it ought to have been.

In other words, the experiment was not just what it was intended to be. I may as well speak frankly about it, the Postmaster General did not desire, it appears from the hearings before the Senate committee, a larger sum than $70,000 for the continuation of this experiment. The Fourth Assistant wanted the increase the House gave, $1,000,000, for that purpose. After some difficulty the Senate, by a narrow vote, passed the proposition for $300,000 to continue the experiment and provided lines along which the experiment should be made in rather a satisfactory way.

The House conferees thought it best to agree to the $300,000 and waive the $1,000,000 proposition as carried in the House bill.

On the aeroplane question there was practically a total change from the House provision. It was very clear that the number of machines which were authorized to be purchased by the House were not at all suitable to aeroplane service to the Post Office Department. It transpired that only a very few routes, one a long one, could be established and maintained under the appropriation of $850,500 which was agreed to.

The House conferees thereupon adopted the Senate provision for the increase in the Aeroplane Service.

There was also in the Senate an amendment that provided for the use of pneumatic tubes for the department, a provision requiring that the tubes be left in the condition they were supposed to be in, in order that the Government might take up that service if it deemed it advisable hereafter. The House conferees felt that that question had been closed, and that the tubes as used heretofore were not of the character and type and value that they ought to be in carrying the mail; that they were only carrying 12 per cent of the letter mail in the tubes in great cities, and that if used at all they ought to be large enough to carry all the mails. So we resisted very strongly the reviving of the pneumatic-tube question at all, and upon that question the Senate yielded. Everything was stricken out of the bill in reference to the tubes.

The supervisory salaries provided for in the bill by the Senate amendments the House could not agree to, because they were largely the salaries of men already receiving the highest amount in salary, and we felt that if there was any change to be made in the salary of that class it ought to be in the salaries of those who were receiving less than $2,200 instead of those who were receiving more. The Senate receded from its position on that question.

I believe that those are the more important features of the bill, except one exceedingly great and important amendment that was made by the Senate, in which the House concurred with some amendments. That is the appropriation of $200,000,000 for good roads in the United States. The appropriation is in pursuance of the existing good-roads law. The amount appropriated is divided for use into three years, $50,000,000 to be immediately available, $75,000,000 available next year, and $75,000,000 more available the next year, with the provision in the bill that preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers in the performance of the work.

A great deal of work has been done during the war on roads partly military and partly civil, if I may apply that term to them, by soldiers and by civilians. By the side of the soldier, who was getting $1 a day, worked the civilian at about $4 a day or $5 a day. We have provided that all of the soldiers of the United States who were detailed to that work and who performed it in part should be ascertained by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that the amount of the service that they rendered should be ascertained and that they should be paid the amount that the civilian employee received who worked by his side, and that the amount should be charged to the quota of the State where the work was done, because the road was built in that State and for the benefit of the State.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. That would not be retroactive for soldiers who have already rendered that work?

Mr. MOON. Oh, yes; it is required that in the use of the appropriation here, wherever a road has been built—that is, already built and the work was done by soldiers—that they shall have the pay that the civilians got who assisted in the work at the time, and it also provides for the future, that the soldiers shall have the preference in this work.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How did they happen to build roads purely for the benefit of the State, or does the benefit of the State come in only indirectly?

Mr. MOON. They did not build the roads purely for the benefit of the State. They built the roads primarily for military purposes, but they were along such lines of highway that they inured to the ultimate and final benefit of the State, and in most instances the State cooperated in the construction of those roads. It is in that class of work where a gang of white men and negroes worked for the State and were getting $4.50 and $5 a day for the work, while the soldier detailed by the Government to perform the Government part of the work or the military part of the work was given $1 a day. We are providing that that soldier wherever he performed that work shall now have the same amount as the others received.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Were there any other roads built than roads connecting a town to a camp, over which to haul the supplies to the camps?

Mr. MOON. It appeared before us in the conference that at Camp Humphreys, in Virginia, there is a short road that was exclusively for military purposes, connecting the camp with the depot. That road is not of much benefit to the State of Virginia, but it was of great benefit to the United States at the time. It may not be of great benefit hereafter; but the fact remains that in the construction of that particular road, which perhaps is of less benefit to either State or Federal Government than any road we know of, the soldier worked for $1 a day in making the road, while a civilian received three or four or five dollars a day. The soldier should have equal compensation with the civilian.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Who employed the civilian—the Army?

Mr. MOON. Yes; all of it was done under the Army, or cooperation between the Army and the State.

There is one other instance I know of where the Government of the United States is building to one of its cantonments a road 6 or 8 miles in length, where, by mutual consent, the county cooperated with the Government and paid one-half of the construction of the road. It is a very fine road; a concrete road about 60 feet wide. It was originally constructed, of course, by the county, but the Governemnt had torn it to pieces and it was then repaired in that way.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How did they happen to mix the civilians and the soldiers—because they could not get enough civilian labor, or because they did not have enough soldiers?

Mr. MOON. They could not get enough civilian labor, and then the State could not employ the soldiers.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I thought the gentleman just stated that these roads were built under the supervision of the War Department.

Mr. MOON. All of the roads, of course, were built under the supervision of the War Department. The participation of these counties in the matter was simply for the furnishing of money for assistance, and in some instances that was not done at all. Of course, where the State has employed men and paid them we have nothing to do with it; but where we have employed soldiers, and that is the only point there is in the matter, to assist in the construction of a road, where the soldiers worked side by side with civilians, whether it was done by the joint action of the county and the State and the Government or done by the Government alone, the soldier was under the control and jurisdiction of his Government—was detailed for that work at $1 a day—and we propose to give him for what he has done heretofore as much as the men that helped to do the work at his side received at the time. We think that is fair. We provide also in that bill that no soldier shall be detailed for work under the provisions of this act except by his own consent.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Just one other question. Does this also apply to soldiers who did road work overseas in France?

Mr. MOON. No. I do not know of that.

Mr. RAMSEYER. They did a lot of road work over there.

Mr. MOON. I know; but this applies to roads in the United States.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Were these roads of which the gentleman is speaking built strictly under appropriations of the Army, or were they built out of moneys that we provided several years ago in the regular governmental roads-building proposition?

Mr. MOON. They were supposed to be strictly military roads, although the county and the State participated with the Government in construction in some instances.

If they pay for it out of appropriations for military purposes it ought not to come out of this fund.

Mr. SNYDER. Out of the money provided for military purposes only the military must have employed the citizens who worked alongside of the soldiers.

Mr. MOON. I think in most instances they did.

Mr. SNYDER. How can you provide in this act to pay soldiers through the Army to bring them up to an equality with the civilians who are employed by the Army? I should think the Army would have to pay the soldiers out of their appropriations rather than for them to be paid out of this.

Mr. MOON. It is merely a correction of an act of injustice. It is a matter of bookkeeping, whether the War Department or the Agricultural Department should pay. If we put our soldiers by the side of other men who work on public works, whether we paid it or somebody else paid it, and the civilian employees were paid $4 or $5 a day, while the soldiers did not get but $1, in our judgment the soldier ought to have the amount to make the pay equal to that of the civilian for the work they are performing of the same kind and character.

Mr. SNYDER. I quite agree with the gentleman, but is it not a fact in this case the civilian was employed in work alongside the soldier you just reverse what the gentleman says? Is it not a fact further that all these cantonment roads were built wholly by soldiers during all the period of the war, who were only paid $1 a day?

Mr. MOON. Well, that may be true; I do not know how it was in all of them, but wherever the soldier did work and all were paid alike, $1 a day, it was all right, I presume.

Mr. SNYDER. The only point I am making is that if there was a short spur road built outside of a cantonment upon which a body of civilians and soldiers were employed, I can not see any more reason why the soldier who did that work outside of the cantonment should get additional pay than the men who built the road inside. I think if one gets the additional pay they should all get it who were road builders.

Mr. MOON. I think inside of cantonments, having no one associated with him except fellow soldiers, and they are all doing work for the Government of the United States at a particular price of $1 a day, neither one was prejudiced in the matter.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. MOON. The gentleman can not ask questions and not give me time to answer them. While that condition existed there was nothing to complain about particularly, but the soldier can properly complain when his Government employs a gang of civilians at $4 or $5 a day and puts them to work and tells him to go to work on the same job and only pays him $1 a day. I think he has a right to complain of that discrimination.

Mr. SNYDER. The point I am making is there is considerable complaint on the part of soldiers at least who build roads and other mechanical work inside of cantonments; there is a great deal of complaint on the part of those men. Now, you have provided that those who work with civilians outside shall have additional money and——

Mr. MOON. I have said to the gentleman there are very few instances of that kind I am informed. It is a very small amount involved so far as the provisions of that work are concerned.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I will.

Mr. KING. In the case where soldiers at Camp MacArthur were put out to work on a county road, will it cover a case of that kind?

Mr. MOON. On a county road?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir; where their arms were taken away from them six weeks ago, and they were placed there upon a road to work. Would this cover that case?

Mr. MOON. Is the gentleman sure they were ever placed there?

Mr. KING. I do not know anything about it, but that is the information——

Mr. MOON. I do not know anything about it either; the gentlemen will have to get the construction of the department.

Mr. KING. I am asking the gentleman's construction of the law which he is preparing.

Mr. MOON. We can never construe the law in reference to a particular state of facts unless we can obtain the state of facts necessary to obtain an intelligent construction.

Mr. KING. If it was a fact, would it come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MOON. If what was a fact?

Mr. KING. If the soldiers at Camp MacArthur were placed at work upon a county road in the State of Texas before being discharged, would they receive the same pay as a civilian?

Mr. MOON. I should think they ought to receive full pay.

Mr. KING. Just one more question I would like to ask the gentleman. Under this provision, will soldiers at Newport News, working on the municipal water-works plant, receive the pay?

Mr. MOON. I do not think water works has anything to do with good roads.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I agree with the gentleman about paying soldiers the same amount as is paid to other employees, but as to charging it up to the States I do not exactly undersand. For instance, in my State they have built a good many miles of road which will not be practically of any use after the close of the camp. Those are built 30 feet wide, whereas 16 feet would be all that would be necessary. Will that entire cost be charged up to our State whether the roads are of use to us or necessary; would they be charged up to our part of the fund?

Mr. MOON. I think it ought to be and is under this provision. You have the roads and ought to pay for them.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I would like to get through with this, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This additional appropriation of $200,000,000 for good roads—is that to be expended in the same way that the original good-roads law provides now; that is, with the cooperation of the States, dollar for dollar?

Mr. MOON. Exactly; wherever the State puts up money the Government puts up an equal amount, and it is on the basis of population, area, and roads. There is no change in the provisions of the original law at all.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is just an increase in the amount of appropriation?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. MOON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNYDER. If what the gentleman has just said, that this money is to be expended in the regular way, through the governmental road-building act, there can not be any of the money spent unless a State makes application for the expenditure of such money. Is that correct?

Mr. MOON. I take it so.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Is it the expectation of the committee that any of this money can be used during the coming summer?

Mr. MOON. Fifty million dollars is appropriated for this present fiscal year.

Mr. SNELL. How much of the money that was appropriated under the other act is yet unexpended?

Mr. MOON. I do not know just what the amount is, but I will ask unanimous consent now as an extension of my remarks to place in the RECORD as Exhibit No. 1 a statement from the department as to the amount that will go to each State.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXHIBIT 1.

Apportionment of funds under Federal aid road act and under proposed amendment thereto.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that none of that money has been expended yet?

Mr. MOON. I do not know. I will say to the House that this is a rider on the Post Office bill and that this question will be better answered by the chairman of the Committee on Roads. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has no jurisdiction of the same as an original question. We have obtained jurisdiction by reason of its being a Senate rider. But I can later give the gentleman the information. The report is not before me.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate that fact; but it was brought into the House on your appropriation bill, and under the condition of the finances of the Government I think we should have some definite information before we add an appropriation like that on any appropriation bill—that calls for an expenditure of $200,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think I can answer that question in part. I understand that there is about $50,000,000 available of antecedent appropriations.

Mr. MOON. I will say that there is a statement about it in the report.

Mr. SNELL. As given out by the Labor Committee, only $4,000,000 of that money has been expended.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that it is larger than I thought it was. The amount to be available from antecedent balances is larger than I thought. The balances available from former and present fiscal years, due to interruption of war, from Federal and State sources, is about $70,000,000.

Mr. MOON. That is from the paper that we will put in the RECORD. You will all have it before you.

Mr. SNELL. It ought to be before the House. It is a question of whether or not we ought to put it on the people. I think it is important to know whether we will be able to spend the money during the coming season.

Mr. MOON. I am sure you will spend all the money you want to on this or anything else that you get it for.

Mr. SNELL. There are certain conditions to be met before we can spend the money. We must lay out roads, and, as I understand it, many of the States have never made a provision for spending this money, and we should have that information before the House.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield.

Mr. BROWNE. I asked the Secretary of Agriculture the other day under whom the road funds are expended. He informed me there were over 7,000 miles of roads built under the last appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. Do you mean that there have been 7,000 miles of roads built under that appropriation?

Mr. BROWNE. Seven thousand miles of road built under the Federal aid act with the amount that different States contributed toward it.

Mr. SNELL. Do you mean built or just provided for? Do you mean they were just surveyed?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to these gentlemen to have a debate?

Mr. MOON. No, sir; but I will let them run for about a minute.

Mr. BROWNE. I was going to state to the gentleman that over $25,000,000 has been expended in the last Federal road act of $75,000,000.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Speaker, may I observe here that I most heartily approve of this appropriation of $200,000,000. And I do not appreciate very much any captious criticism. I know we are very largely involved in the war debt. We have spent millions of dollars for armament and for all the purposes and paraphernalia of war. I know of necessity that in the conduct of a great war like this, both at home and abroad, there must have been very much money improperly spent, whether corruptly spent or not, of course we could not know. I know that some of this work you speak of may have been unnecessary. But those things are behind us now. The $20,000,000,000 of money we used we have to meet and pay. That being true, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire how this is to be done except by taxes from the people. Of course, you appreciate the fact, and I do, too, that this Government can be and ought to be run for less than one-half of the amount that is expended in its administration, even when we wipe away these war boards and all the instrumentalities in a clerical way for war purposes here. We ought to destroy more than two-thirds of these commissions that are in operation to-day under the Government. We ought to consolidate departments.

It may be we ought to consolidate even Cabinet positions in the interest of economy. We ought to ultimately reduce salaries. We ought to take the necessary steps for that purpose. We ought to realize that in this Government we have to tax the people and issue bonds to pay the amount of this debt. Only the interest can be paid now. To undertake to levy taxes to pay the principal would be practical confiscation of the people's property. Then let us have as simple a Government as we can, and do away with all the boards that we can dispense with, and all the salaries that we can dispense with, and greatly reduce the Army, put it at the minimum figure, and bring our Government down to the lowest possible figure at which it can be administered economically. And then what comes? There still remains an immense debt that must be paid; and if you pay it, gentlemen, you have got to repeal, and repeal, and still further repeal, numbers of laws that you have enacted here, not only on the pretext and for the purposes of war, but laws which you enacted before this war began, restricting the commerce, the business interests, of the country.

You have to deal with these economic propositions now, because you are passing from a position of war into a position of peace. In addition, a reconstruction is upon us, under which you can not get your revenue unless you increase your business and commerce and foster and encourage all the material interests of this country. You can not do that unless you take the steps necessary to expand your commerce, your business interests, agriculture, mining, and manufacturing in the United States.

Therefore one of the greatest propositions, I think, involved in the whole question is not a recession from public economies, but an advance movement along that line, and there is no better one than a good-roads proposition, and that ought to come at the very hour and minute of the reconstruction of the business interests of the United States that must follow this war. Unless you develop and our people prosper, you can not get taxes to pay public debts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that this bill as it left the House carried appropriations and authorizations to the amount of about $400,000,000?

Mr. MOON. Yes. The reason it showed on its face $360,000,000 I believe I stated.

Mr. MANN. How much does the gentleman figure the bill as reported from the conference committee will carry in appropriations and authorizations?

Mr. MOON. It will carry a fraction over $600,000,000, in my judgment. The exact figures have not been made, but it will carry something over $600,000,000.

Mr. MANN. So that in conference it has been increased over 50 per cent?

Mr. MOON. I thought the gentleman understood the reason why the figures of the House were different. It was this: When we were in the House we calculated everything on the old law of salary, which made about $358,000,000 or $359,000,000. But we made provisions in the act which we did not compute, as you know, in the bill. We provided for increases which, if they had been computed in dollars and cents, would have amounted to about $400,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Four hundred million dollars in the House increased to over $600,000,000 is an increase of 50 per cent.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman is correct in the fact that this appropriation for good roads increases it $200,000,000, which is a third of the total of the $600,000,000.

Now, I was about to observe before yielding to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Speaker, that in the condition in which we find our fiscal affairs we ought to do all we can to encourage the business interests of the country. To expand is necessary to secure prosperity, and prosperity alone produces large taxes. Taxes of all kinds must be reduced. You can not have people engaged in manufacturing and agricultural and mining industries in this country for profit if you are going to take every dollar of that profit and put it into the Federal Treasury. You have to give encouragement to them if you want to get the revenues sufficient to pay this debt not only by a reduction of national governmental expenses, but you have to give a reduction in taxation against the citizen. If you do not you break him down and make it impossible for him to raise the revenue to pay your debt. And you have to quit your disputes about tariff and lay any tariff tax that will produce revenue, but never so high as to create monopoly and trusts nor so low as to destroy industries and reduce labor to low conditions. Let us come to the consideration of these questions which will encourage, upbuild, and foster all of the material interests of our country in order that you may get the revenue to meet your debt. In other words, you have to have an enlarged United States commercially in all its business lines to meet these great obligations, with the removal of all improper restrictions on the people. Good roads will do more than all other things to bring unbounded prosperity to our country.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to inquire if it is the purpose of the gentleman to give some time to others? He has now occupied 45 minutes of the hour.

Mr. MOON. We have got more than an hour if we want it. I have occupied that time largely in answering questions, which I thought altogether proper. I am going to yield to the distinguished gentleman later. I yield 10 minutes now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. STEENERSON. I had supposed I would control the time on this side, and it was my purpose to yield to the gentleman from Illinois; but if the gentleman from Tennessee proposes to yield to him, all right.

Mr. MOON. I had an hour, and I used 40 minutes of it, and I have a right to do anything I want with the balance of it. I will give the gentleman from Minnesota some and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] some time, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] some, and then I am going to save enough of the hour to move the previous question.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman intend to give me some time?

Mr. MOON. I said I would if you wanted it; yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much time does the gentleman desire? Have I only an hour, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. That is all.

Mr. MOON. How much does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. MADDEN. Ten minutes.

Mr. MOON. How much does the gentleman from Minnesota want?

Mr. STEENERSON. I want some time when the gentleman gets through. I have two or three applications for time.

Mr. MOON. I want to be frank with the gentleman, and——

Mr. STEENERSON. I thought we could make some arrangements in advance, so that I would know what my rights are.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman ought to know what his rights are under the rule. I have the hour. Under that I can move the previous question.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not care.

Mr. MOON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Minnesota may have all the time he wants. I will give the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] 10 minutes and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE] 5 minutes, and that will leave me 5 minutes. Then I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota can have what time he wants.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman from Minnesota be recognized.

Mr. MOON. The gentleman from Illinois knows that unless we have some agreement I will lose the floor.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The gentleman can take the floor and move the previous question.

Mr. MOON. How much does the gentleman desire?

Mr. STEENERSON. I think I will require about half an hour.

Mr. MOON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that that time be given the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to have a little time, if I may be permitted to take it. I have just come in from my committee room, where I have been trying to assist in preparing another enormous deficiency bill. I have not had time, as one Member of the House, to read the conference report. I have been able only to go through it hop, skip, and jump. There ought to be four or five hours' debate on this proposition, so that we may understand it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, including the 40 minutes I have occupied, there shall be two hours' debate upon this question, 20 minutes of that time to be controlled by myself and an hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. That would be 1 hour and 20 minutes more in all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MOON. I said I would ask unanimous consent that 1 hour and 20 minutes more time should be given to this debate, making 2 hours in all, 20 minutes to be controlled by myself and 1 hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want that 1 hour and 20 minutes to be added to what the gentleman has already used?

Mr. MOON. Yes. That makes two hours in all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time be extended one hour, which will leave 20 minutes to be controlled by him and will give the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. And that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. MOON. And that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. And at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] desire to proceed now?

Mr. STEENERSON. No. It was my intention to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] five minutes.

Mr. MOON. And I yield him 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. For four years now I have been working as strenuously as I knew how in an effort to get legislation which I consider of great importance and quite essential to the future welfare of the Post Office Department. That legislation consisted in arranging an automatic scale of promotion, giving higher standards of compensation to the carriers and clerks, and to the railway mail clerks. The House with full knowledge of the facts voted substantially unanimously for the enactment of a permanent law giving clerks and carriers a new status. Unfortunately, when the bill went over to the Senate, that body decided to make the law temporary, and while the conferees of the House sat for several days, insisting very strenuously upon the House provision of the bill, we were compelled ultimately to yield to the pressure of the Senate, because we did not want to take the responsibility of the Senate defeating the legislation for all other branches of the Postal Service.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr GARNER I want to say to the gentleman that I think he is to be congratulated upon his success in securing an increase of payments to postal employees of about $40,000,000, as I gather from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], because according to the best information I can get about $5,000,000 of that will go to Chicago, and the Chicago people ought to pass resolutions very complimentary to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Texas, but I think he does not quite comprehend the facts in the case. Unfortunately, Chicago will get a very small portion of this, although I would be glad to see them get a large portion; but I have not been working on this legislation with any idea of promoting the welfare of Chicago. My work is intended to promote the success of the Postal Service all over the United States, and I think experience shows that because of a lack of proper compensation for men engaged in this important service the service has run down materially in all the great centers of the country. These men were permitted to enter the service on a basic salary of only $800, and it took them five years to get up to the basic salary of $1,200, and you can not get men of the type required in the service to work for that compensation. My thought was that the increased compensation provided for in the bill as reported back from the conferees—namely, a minimum of $1,000 and a maximum of $1,500—is not a war-time compensation at all but a peace-time compensation, only adequate for the important duties these men are called upon to perform. The same thing is true with respect to the rural carriers. I was anxious to see their increase made permanent. I was anxious to see the increase of the rural carriers combined with the increase of the city carriers and the clerks and made permanent law. It ought to have been made permanent law without any question; but the Senate did not agree with us. I am proud that every conferee appointed by the House stood like a stone wall in favor of the permanency of this legislation in all its aspects, and yielded only because they did not want to assume the responsibility of defeating the legislation entirely. But provision has been made by the conferees for the appointment of a commission to consider the whole question of salaries in the Postal Service; and I assume this commission will be appointed before the adjournment of this Congress, and it will probably be engaged in the work of investigating and adjusting salaries all during the coming summer. I am quite certain that no salary will be reduced, but, if anything, salaries will be increased above what we provide in this bill. The Postmaster General already, in a communication to the conferees, says that the supervisory officials of the Post Office Department are not getting sufficient compensation, and that increases ought to be made along the line among those supervisory officials. Now, the supervisory officials are the high-paid men in the department, and while I recognize the ability of these men, they are already getting a good deal more than the men whose compensation is provided for in this act. They are entitled to more than they are getting, because some of these men are very able, and if they were employed in commercial life they would receive a good deal more compensation than the Government pays them.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. What provision does this bill make, if any, for an increse in the pay of the fourth-class postmasters?

Mr. MADDEN. The basic law provided for the payment to fourth-class postmasters of the first $50 cancellations quarterly. Last year we make it $80 quarterly. This bill provides for $100 quarterly, so that is quite an increase.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Twenty dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. Twenty dollars a quarter, or four times twenty, or $80, a year.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Twenty dollars a quarter over what their pay was last year?

Mr. MADDEN. Twenty dollars a quarter increase; yes. So the fourth-class postmasters have been provided for in this bill very generously. Yet there are over 10,000 fourth-class postmasters in the United States whose compensation is less than $50 a quarter, and perhaps this is very much less than it ought to be. There ought to be some readjustment of that, and doubtless there will be when this commission gets to work and knows the facts in the case. Then there are other men whose compensation as fourth-class postmasters almost reach the line of third-class postmaster compensation, and there it turns out that they have a good deal of expense in connection with the work. The work is voluminous and perhaps we do not pay them what we ought to pay.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Can the gentleman tell us what provision was made in the line of clerk hire for the third-class offices?

Mr. MADDEN. The clerk hire for third-class offices has always been paid out of a lump-sum provision allotted to the Postmaster General and distributed to the third-class postmasters, the minimum for the lowest third-class postmaster being $300 per annum. It went up to $400, $600, and $800. Now we make the $300 $450, the $400 $600, and the $600 $900, and the $800 $1,200, making an increase of 50 per cent over what they received before.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Has there been any increase in the amount allowed the fourth-class postmaster for fuel, light, and so forth?

Mr. MADDEN. No; that has never been done, and there is no change in that respect.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. The allowance paid to the third-class postmasters for clerk hire is a fund he can expend in any way he may deem best?

Mr. MADDEN. He can expend the allotment accorded to him by the Postmaster General in such manner as the best interests of the service require, and he is the judge of that.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. With certain limitations.

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. If he has a $900 allowance and he can hire a clerk for $600——

Mr. MADDEN. He can not take any part of the $900 himself. Oh, no; it must be paid to the clerk. The postmaster is not permitted to take any part of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any provision in the bill that limits the employment of a janitor to any post office not canceling a certain amount of stamps?

Mr. MADDEN. There is no provision to limit the amount of work any man may do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understcod that there would be no janitor at any office where the receipts were less than $20,000.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not been in the House all the morning. Has the gentleman reached the subject of the rural carriers?

Mr. MADDEN. I have, but I shall be glad to answer any question the gentleman may wish to ask.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What arrangement was made about the rural carriers?

Mr. MADDEN. The rural carrier section provides for pay for each mile over 24 miles, and the extra mileage pay is made permanent, and in addition to that the compensation of the rural carrier is increased 25 per cent.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the road question. We are in a period of transition that requires preparation for the employment of men who are coming back from the front. If there ever was a time when every public institution in the land, county, State, and Nation, should make provision for more opportunities for employment, this is the time. Everybody seems to be fearful about entering upon new enterprises. Labor conditions are in a state of uncertainty. Nobody knows what the wage scale is to be. The price of materials fluctuates; it may go up and it may go down, and no man in the United States cares to enter upon a new undertaking. That creates a state of doubt in the public mind. That state of doubt will undoubtedly create a state of stagnation if it is continued far enough.

Then the duty of the public functionaries is clear, and that duty in my judgment calls for provision, calls for action, so that employment of some kind out of the funds of the public Treasury may be used to advance the interests of different sections of the Nation.

Although we are in debt, and we have created obligations due to the war that are onerous and gigantic, we still owe an obligation to the country to dissipate the state of doubt that is being created by the refusal of private individuals, companies, and corporations to enter upon new adventures, so to speak. For every man we employ by the creation of new works in the State, county, and Nation will tend to encourage private employers to enter upon new work, and when we encourage that I think we have done a patriotic duty.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How soon could this work be begun?

Mr. MADDEN. I anticipate that a great many of the States have already made provision. Take, for example, the State of Illinois. The people there have already voted $60,000,000 in bonds to construct new highways. Fifteen millions of that $60,000,000 will be available as early as April of this year. Fifty millions of the $200,000,000 in this bill is available for distribution during the fiscal year of 1919. That means between now and the 1st of July. The State of Illinois undoubtedly would get its proportion. The State of New York, I understand, already has in contemplation the construction of a large mileage of roads, and there is provision in this bill for allotments to States like New York through the increase of the limitation of the cost per mile. For example, the basic law provided that no allotments could be made to any State where the cost per mile of the road was more than $10,000. That, of course, would cut out of the allotments from these appropriations States like New York and perhaps Ohio and Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I have two or three minutes more?

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. We now fix the limit at $20,000 a mile, because the character of road being constructed by those States costs that much, and so we open the doors to the participation by these States in the benefits to be derived from the immediate use of money which will give employment to men already out of work.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The work here contemplated does not necessarily compete with private enterprise, because it is not likely that private enterprise will do such work.

Mr. MADDEN. The only thing it does is this: We do not compete with private enterprise, but we find employment, which private enterprise will not take the risk to find. Finding the employment, we encourage the purchase of new supplies and the opening of new avenues of employment, and thereby we begin to create the confidence which is necessary to maintain the equilibrium of proper business conditions.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, we all understand that the gentleman from Illinois speaks always to the fact, and I desire to get his judgment upon the question of unemployment. Will the gentleman state whether he thinks there will be a great deal of unemployment if public enterprises are not entered upon?

Mr. MADDEN. I am afraid there will be; it looks that way now. Let me take, for example, the case of a young man who has just returned from France, who held a high rank in the Army—a genius in his own line. He took several days to investigate conditions which would confront him upon his return, and he reported back to me, after he had given two weeks of careful study to the question, that every man with whom he came in contact was afraid of the labor conditions, the uncertainty, afraid of the fluctuating costs of supplies, afraid of the conditions that abound in the country, and they all said that they were going to hold back and would not enter upon any new enterprise, and he himself, anxious to enter upon new enterprises, said that he would wait for the next six months or a year to see what would happen. If that feeling is general throughout the country, and I think it is, then our duty is clear, and we are performing a patriotic function when we participate with the States in the development of public enterprise.

Mr. FESS. Does this appropriation contemplate cooperation with the States?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; it is only used for that purpose and nothing else.

Mr. HASTINGS. Would the gentleman permit me to state that Oklahoma will also ally herself with States like Illinois and New York in this good-road movement? Already the State of Oklahoma is considering the issue of $50,000,000 of bonds for good-road work.

Mr. MADDEN. I think all of the States are alive to the necessities of the case, and I am very glad they are. I have advised it everywhere, and I think now, above all times, is the time for municipalities and counties and States to take the lead, and if Federal cooperation can be had in connection with their activities so much the better. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent Mr. MADDEN was granted leave to extend and revise his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, the last Federal highway law passed July 11, 1916, provided for an appropriation of $75,000,000 for highways, besides $10,000,000 for highways through the national parks. The question was asked here in regard to the amount that had already been expended. I have a letter here from the Secretary of Agriculture or from the Director of Roads in that department, and he says that all except $25,000,000 has been apportioned among the several States.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much of that has been actually expended up to the present time? I ask the gentleman to please answer that question for the information of the House.

Mr. BROWNE. I shall do so before I get through with my remarks. In the State of Wisconsin I know that we have expended quite a good portion of the share apportioned to us. Of course, road work, as all other work, has been held up on account of the war, but the gentleman can not find any great fault because all of this money has not been expended. It is there; it has not been wasted. The argument was originally advanced that the money would be wasted, and a good many were skeptical about Federal aid when we passed the Federal aid act, but to-day every highway commission in the United States, and there are 48 of them, is heartily in favor of Federal aid for roads. It has stimulated road building more than anything else in the last 100 years. To-day there are over 7,000 miles of road projects that have been examined and approved by the Federal Government, and the machinery is all ready. Almost every State in the Union is ready to begin work on its system of roads and pay one-half the cost of the roads as soon as this appropriation is available. Some of these roads have not only been surveyed, but they have been graded, and the preliminary work has been done.

I want to say a word in regard to the labor question involved here, the question of unemployment. We know there will be millions of men out of employment when war industries and the Army are demobilized. Various public works have been suggested to give employment to these men, but I think none of them is as practical as road work. In the first place, every one of the 48 States has to put in at least dollar for dollar for the aid given by the Federal Government in this work. This will be a check on extravagance. So far the States have put in more than the Federal Government has; they have put in more than dollar for dollar, and with the road machinery all ready, with the State highway organizations all ready in these 48 States, without any delay whatever they can take the surplus labor and put it to work on the roads. Road work furnishes employment not only for skilled labor—civil engineers and skilled mechanics—but also for common, everyday labor.

And there is no kind of work that will furnish such a diversity of labor as road work. The work is out of doors; it is healthful employment; and, as I say, for every dollar expended by the Federal Government the State has to put in a dollar beside it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. I will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand the reward we are going to give these boys for fighting is to give them a job with a pick and shovel when they come back.

Mr. BROWNE. If they want it. They need not accept it; but a million of men will be out of employment who are now engaged in the war industries, and while they are demobilizing and readjusting themselves we can use these men upon the roads.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman has had any experience in road building, I would like to ask the type of men in the State of Wisconsin who go to work on the highways? Does the gentleman think a very large percentage of the men coming back from the war will be applicants for a position with pick and shovel?

Mr. BROWNE. I think they will be.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman is highly mistaken.

Mr. BROWNE. There will be civil engineers——

Mr. SNYDER. A very small per cent.

Mr. BROWNE. And there will be laborers; there will be all kinds of laborers. I know men to-day just out of the Army who have gone out to work as civil engineers and in other capacities in different States on the roads——

Mr. SNYDER. This, then, is a proposition to provide civil engineers with jobs?

Mr. BROWNE. I have simply taken civil engineers as an example.

Mr. SNYDER. I have not any doubt it looks good to them.

Mr. BROWNE. We have seen right down here in the South—it has been brought up here to-day—that men were getting $4 and $5 a day for working on roads.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman, in my judgment, is hitting the right point.

Mr. BROWNE. Right down here our soldiers were asked to be given the same amount, and they have been given the same amount for working on the roads, and I think with the wages which the different States and localities can furnish there will be thousands and thousands of workmen who will be very glad to work on the roads in that out-of-door employment. It is not all with a pick. There are different kinds of work and different kinds of skill used in road work. Now, another thing. The appropriation passed by the Sixty-fourth Congress for Federal aid, July 11, 1916, was the first appropriation made by the Federal Government for over 100 years. Our city friends objected to it because the Federal aid did not extend to the cities. This is a rural highway proposition. There does not a dollar of it go into any city over 2,500 inhabitants, and to such cities only where the roads are a part of a rural highway system. Now, when we stop and think for a minute that at least 90 per cent of all the appropriations that Congress makes go into the cities and only about 10 per cent go to the country, taking into consideration at this time, too, that $50,000,000,000 of our wealth is in our farms and property on the farms, and that 50,000,000 of our people out of our 100,000,000 population live in the rural communities and in cities and villages of less than 2,500, we are led to the conclusion that it is only a matter of justice to appropriate some money that will directly benefit our rural population.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell me where he got the information that only 10 per cent of all the appropriations made by the Congress goes outside of the cities of this country?

Mr. BROWNE. I got it from people who compute it.

Mr. SNELL. It is just a general statement, no real authority?

Mr. BROWNE. No; it is from authorities who have given it consideration. Now, another proposition here. During this war we know this: All the war industries have been located in the large cities, mostly throughout the East, because they could be more advantageously used, and as a result the labor from all over the country has flocked to the cities, and millions of dollars have been spent there. The pay rolls in a great many cities have doubled and trebled, and the population has increased several hundred thousand in some cities during these war times. Now, much of the wealth that has accumulated in the cities during this time has been at the expense of the country. The country suffered from this war, the small town has suffered during this war, and it is only fair from an economical standpoint to bring some of this money that has gone to the cities back to the country. We know that in the year 1917, right in the city of New York, there were five men who made a net income of over a million dollars a month, the five making over $60,000,000 in a single year. We know there were five others who made a net income of over $27,000,000 in a single year. We know in the year 1917, during the war, we created nearly 8,000 millionaires, while in all the 140 years of our national life we had only about 14,000 millionaires. I am just simply illustrating that the cities during these war times have grown richer. The city banks are full of money, and the country, the rural community, has suffered by the war; the country bank has suffered greatly and the country people in general have.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The country now is going to be protected by the price of wheat, is it not?

Mr. BROWNE. We fixed the price of wheat, to the injury of farmers. Our farmers made a sacrifice. It would have been a great deal better for the farmer if we had not fixed the price of wheat. We did not fix the price of a great many city products. We tried to fix the price of steel but could not do it, and as a result the steel companies have made a great deal more than ever at any time in their history.

Mr. TREADWAY. Before the gentleman gets away from the subject of roads, which is very interesting, I would like to ask him two questions in reference to that matter.

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to finish up what I was going to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWNE. Can I have some more time?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I want to ask the gentleman two questions. The first is, How many miles of road have actually been built under the original road act, not arranged for but actually constructed? Second, What has been the total expenditure by the department so far in furnishing the preliminary details, which I judge the gentleman refers to when he speaks of the machinery being ready to operate? I think those are two pertinent questions as applied to the subject we are supposed to be discussing.

Mr. BROWNE. I do not know just exactly the number of miles of road, but I know this: I wrote to the Director of Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, and in his letter of February 15, 1919, he says this:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1919.

Hon. EDWARD E. BROWNE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BROWNE: Your letter of February 14 citing the apportionments to the States under the Federal aid road act for the first four years has been received, and the figures you quote are approximately correct. At the present time $25,000,000 remains to be apportioned under the original act.

With regard to the attitude of the States in taking up these apportionments under the law there is no doubt whatever. They are doing everything they can and appear eager to secure the assistance which the Government extends. As to their financial ability to absorb the appropriation under the present act there has been no trouble so far with the first four apportionments. On December 31, when the first three apportionments only were available, amounting to approximately $29,000,000, projects had been initiated by the States covering approximately $22,500,000, and six months still remained of the current fiscal year. As of the same date agreements (contracts) had been entered into for approximately $10,300,000.

When it is considered that during the last year a very strenuous effort was made through the Capital Issues Committee and the United States Highways Council to limit bond issues, to restrict transportation and materials, and to force the general postponement of the highway programs in the several States the above showing indicates that there was no lack of financial resources available to the States to meet Federal aid. Even under the conditions existing, some States, notably Texas, submitted projects in excess of their apportionments, and no State lost any of its aid by reason of the time limits fixed by the law.

The fourth apportionment listed in your letter was made on January 7 of this year and is available to the States until two years from June 30 next before it lapses, so that it appears entirely probable that this apportionment will likewise be absorbed by the States within the allotted time.

We know that several States have authorized, or are about to authorize, very substantial bond issues, notably Illinois, Pennsylvania, California, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, and other States have made legislative appropriations specifically to meet the entire apportionment under the law throughout the five-year period. With this disposition so generally in evidence there appears to be no doubt that all of the appropriation covered by the present act will easily be taken up within the prescribed time.

This bureau has no specific information that would indicate the exact capacity of the several States to absorb further appropriations, but if the time limit is not restricted below that of the present act in force it appears very probable that the States are desirous and ready to make provision for very heavy expenditures on road improvement.

Yours, very truly, P. ST. J. WILSON, Acting Director.

FEBRUARY 14, 1919.

P. ST. J. WILSON,
Chief Engineer, Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, Department of Agriculture.

MY DEAR SIR: I understand the allotment of Federal aid to the States has been as follows:

1916	$4,850,000
1917	9,700,000
1918	14,550,000
1919	19,400,000
	48,500,000

$75,000,000
—48,500,000
26,500,000

This would leave $26,500,000 which has not been apportioned to the States. Please let me know whether these are the correct figures and whether the highway department believes that the States are in a position to undertake road improvement on a scale which the Post Office appropriation would justify.

I am heartily in favor of this road legislation and want to get the facts.

Yours, very truly,

Now, that is as far as I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. TREADWAY. That does not answer either question, does it?

Mr. BROWNE. I know in the State of Wisconsin, where I am familiar with the road work, we have a system of 5,000 miles of roads, and we have used our Government funds—I think practically all that was apportioned to us up to that time. We took it as fast as the road law that we passed provided for. Of course, under our road law all of it was not available, or would not be available until 1920 and 1921, under the original act, and of course we were delayed during the war. That is not an argument against the road system or does not show any extravagance or any waste. The great doubt in the mind of some when we started in on Federal aid was waste, but there has not been any waste.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is there any way of proving that up? I am trying to find out what the establishment of this machinery you refer to has cost the Government so far. If the establishment of machinery is an expensive proposition, there has been waste.

Mr. BROWNE. The Government does not do any work on the road, but simply looks at the road after it is built. They first have to approve of the project when it is put on paper and see whether it is a main traveled road that meets the requirements of the law—a thing that is anticipated under this act. After that is done the State has to make estimates, and the Federal road department must approve of those estimates; and after the road is built they look over the road, and if it is built according to specifications they approve it and pay the amount the Federal Government is to pay, not exceeding 50 per cent; and they can not pay any amount until more work has been done on the road than the amount they are to pay as their share.

TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM.

President Wilson, in his message before Congress December 2, 1918, said:

What the country chiefly needs is that all possible means of transportation should be developed—its railways, its waterways, its highways, and its countryside roads.

The highways must be considered just as much an essential part of our transportation system as the railways and waterways. Every wagon road serves a local use, a State use, and a national use. Over every wagon road are carried the crops from the farm to the near-by railroad station, and from there the products of the farm find their way into interstate commerce, and many times do not reach their destination until they cross the seas and are sold to the foreign consumer. It is the stupendous wealth of the farm which begins its journey in wagons over the country roads that, after supplying our home demands, finds its way abroad to turn the balance of trade in our favor and to bring to our shores the golden stream of wealth that makes for national prosperity.

WHAT FOOD ADMINISTRATOR HOOVER SAYS.

The Food Administrator, Mr. Hoover, in September, 1918, told the regional directors of the highway-transportation committee:

For 10 years after peace comes the productivity of the United States will be called upon to help. The world is never more than 60 days ahead of famine between harvests, and in consequence of the draining of men from the usual occupation of food production large areas of Europe to-day are facing starvation. If we are to do our duty by the world and ourselves, we must utilize every means to increase production and distribute food efficiency.

The rural motor-truck express using the highways of the country commands every moral support of which we are capable. It is obvious that highway development must precede or be carried on simultaneously with motor-truck development. The cost of hauling over the average unimproved roads has been estimated by good authority at 21 cents per ton-mile. The cost of hauling over improved roads is estimated at less than 13 cents per ton-mile, making a saving of 8 cents per ton-mile.

GROSS TONNAGE.

The gross tonnage to be hauled over the highways of the United States on an average year is over 700,000,000 tons. This computation was made by a joint committee of Congress on Federal aid in 1914. The average haul computed at 9 miles makes a gross saving on the transportation over improved roads of 72 cents per ton. This, multiplied by the gross tonnage, gives $504,000,000 the saving per year through improved roads. In other words, the United States has been paying a penalty of more than $504,000,000 per year in the excessive cost of the transportation of our agricultural products alone because of its neglect of its highways. The heaviest tax that the people of the United States are paying to-day is the poor-road or mud tax. Quite a portion of this tax falls on the ultimate consumer and is shared by the laboring man in the city as well as the producer on the farm.

GOOD ROADS.

The question of good roads concerns everybody. At one end of every road is the farmer with his crops for sale, which aggregated last year over $15,000,000,000. At the other end of the road is the city with its people waiting to be fed, with merchants waiting for trade, and with the railroad waiting for goods to transport. To whose advantage is it to have good roads? For the farmer to come to town it is clearly to the advantage of the merchant in the city and the railroads as much as it is to the farmer. Every man's house faces on a road that connects with every other road and leads to every other man's door and to every market place throughout the land. The farm and the farmer are the great and abiding support of the city.

WAR CONDITIONS.

Our Labor Department tells us that there are now many thousands of men who want work, that are out of employment. In the course of a few months there will be demobilized at least one and a half million soldiers. In a few months the millions of men that have been engaged in manufacturing munitions and other war material will be demobilized. The United States must be ready to take care of this surplus supply of labor. The men who have been in the Army and Navy must be given work until they can get back to their former employment. War industries must be given time to adjust themselves. The only solution of this very important and critical situation is that the Federal Government engage in some great public work that will give employment to labor. Many suggestions have been made as to the kind of public work this Government should engage in.

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT WILL SOLVE THE LABOR PROBLEM.

I contend that the improvement of our highways will solve the labor problem. Improvement of our highways will give employment to the skilled engineer, draftsman, and common laborer, and to many of our crippled soldiers. Every man that has any work in him can be utilized in road building, which will afford a healthful, out-of-doors employment.

NO DELAY NECESSARY.

Each one of the 48 States has a splendidly organized highway department, and most of the States have mapped-out road systems, with specifications, surveys, and plans already approved by the National Government. Many of our State legislatures are now in session, ready to make appropriations to enable them to place a dollar beside every dollar appropriated by the National Government for highway improvement. The National Government has tens of thousands of trucks and other road machinery that will be turned over to the highway departments under this bill and will be of inestimable value. The Federal-aid law, which was passed by the Sixty-fourth Congress and became a law July 11, 1916, has been tried, found workable, and has greatly stimulated road building throughout the United States. The apportionment of the money appropriated by the Federal Government has been considered the fairest and most equitable apportionment of public funds among the several States that has as yet been devised. Every State is satisfied, and the rural population in every State in the Union is asking Congress to make this appropriation. There will be no delays, no experiments. Each of the 48 States has the necessary organization to begin work on the great trunk highways within its borders. Nothing is lacking except the cooperation of the National Government for this appropriation for which this legislation will provide.

ECONOMIC JUSTICE.

In the last two years the people of the United States have had only one objective, and that has been winning the war. Able-bodied men all over the United States who were not in the military service of their country responded to the call of the Commander in Chief, President Wilson, and have worked long hours in producing munitions of war, building ships, and in the various war industries. Every law of trade had to give way to efficiency in the location of the great manufacturing plants. As a result the large cities, especially those cities in the eastern part of the United States, had their populations increased by the hundreds of thousands, their pay rolls many times doubled and tripled. These fortunate localities and many of their citizens have greatly profited by the war.

Contrast the prosperity of the city with that of the country.

FINANCIAL DEPRESSION IN THE COUNTRY.

During the period of the war the country, including the small towns and cities, has suffered great financial loss. It has responded patriotically to every demand made upon it by the Government, but it has made great sacrifices to do so. The country banks have been unable to accommodate many of their former patrons, and it will take years before the rural part of this country will recover from the effects of this war. Many small industries throughout the country were unable to carry on their business because they could not get material and labor, as they were not manufacturing war supplies or products that were deemed essentials, and as a consequence were obliged to go out of business or fail.

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT.

The expenditure of several millions of dollars in the rural communities of each of the 48 States and the employment of thousands of men will bring back to the different rural communities some of the money that has accumulated in the cities by reason of the segregation of our great war industries and will greatly add to the prosperity of the rural communities during a time when they are readjusting themselves to new conditions. To-day we are threatened with a slowing up of production. We are at the same time threatened with an increased labor supply by reason of the disbanding of three and one-half million soldiers and the demobilization of from five to ten million men in war industries. Every effort should be made to prevent panic and financial distress. The high cost of living will not be altered to any extent, because the purchasing price of a dollar has practically been cut in two. If our soldiers return home jobless, with empty pockets, and the millions of laboring men that have been working in the war industries are thrown out of employment while those industries are adjusting themselves to new conditions, this country will face the most severe crisis that has ever confronted it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, have the Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress gone absolutely stark mad in a desire to expend money? Have we absolutely forgotten that the time has come right now when we must stop making these extravagant lump-sum expenditures? Are we absolutely unmindful of the fact that every dollar of this must some day be paid from the savings of the people? Have we become so accustomed to dealing in hundreds of millions and billions of dollars that we can not get our feet down to earth and look at a proposition in a sane and businesslike way? When we have just passed a revenue bill, or a tax on our people, so big that you did not dare to levy it at one time for fear that it would absolutely strangle the business of this country, a bill so large that the American people, as rich and powerful as we are, are obliged to take four bites before they can swallow it, the time has come for the American Congress to stop, look, and listen. And I tell you right here now that unless the Members of this House do this, and in some way consider the people who pay the taxes, somebody else will be here to do it for you. They will not keep us here.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. In just a minute I will yield.

Now, as I look at this proposition it is not a question of whether you are in favor of good roads or not. Practically every man is in favor of good roads. It is simply a question of whether we can afford it and need to appropriate this money at this time. I believe that we should cut our garment according to the cloth, and we certainly have no cloth to cut this garment out of at the present time.

Now, the chairman of this committee made quite an extended talk in regard to economy and what we must do. He also said we had expended $20,000,000,000, but that was a matter behind us and we need not bother with that now. Let me tell you, gentlemen of the House, he is very much mistaken. It is very much before us. The paying of that twenty billions is yet to be done, and the American people will know it when they pay it. He calls for economy and then brings in a proposition to this House to embark on a problem where the initial expense is $200,000,000, and then says he had no information in regard to it. I asked him that question, and he said it was put on at the other end of the Capitol and he did not know anything about it. I want to gain some information. Do the people want us to continue passing these appropriations without any information or not? I do not believe they do.

Now, the recklessness with which we add riders to appropriation bills, I think, should be called to the attention of the whole country.

The time has come when they should be cut out. Nine times out of ten these riders are such they will not stand on their own footing, and it is necessary to attach them to some appropriation bill in order to get them through the House, and thus force us to vote for them or defeat the whole bill, and they know we can not do that.

Now, let us consider for just a minute what the actual conditions are in connection with the road situation. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] asked some questions that are very pertinent to this legislation and I am going to answer him. We have left under the original appropriation of $75,000,000 over $70,000,000 unexpended. In the two years it has been available we have spent only a little over $4,000,000, and there are over $70,000,000 available at the present time, and that is more money than you can possibly spend this year and the proponents of this bill know it, but they want to take advantage of the situation and get the legislation on the statute books and the money appropriated regardless. Now, the gentleman asked the question as to how many miles of road have been actually built under this appropriation. I can tell him. There have been just 45 miles completed up to the present time in the whole country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNELL. In just a minute.

Mr. BANKHEAD What information is that based upon?

Mr SNELL. A report from the Labor Department, issued yesterday. That is my information.

There have been approved by the Agricultural Department for Federal aid under the original act, which really does not mean very much, 7,889 miles of road. That is, plans have been made for building that much road this year. And every thinking man knows that is more road than you can possibly build this year, and when you can not expend this money you now have on hand what on earth is the use of appropriating more at this time when we have so much money that necessarily must be raised and paid by the American people this year?

Mr. TREADWAY. Can the gentleman answer the other question I asked the gentleman from Wisconsin, as to the cost of establishing the so-called machinery, or operation, which I take to be in cooperation between the Federal Government and the States?

Mr. SNELL. No, sir. I have not any information along that line.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not possible that the $5,000,000 to which he refers has something to do with that expenditure in view of the fact that only 45 miles of road have been constructed in that cooperative manner?

Mr SNELL. Maybe so. Although Federal aid for State roads has been available since 1917, only eight States report road projects involving Federal aid completed. The department states that Arkansas has completed one project of 5.1 miles.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. In just a minute. California, two projects, 6.7 miles; Louisiana, one of 4 miles; Massachusetts, one of 13.8 miles; North Carolina, one of 8 miles; Vermont, one of less than 1 mile; Washington, one of 3.5 miles; West Virginia, one of 2.5 miles. That is all that has been done so far. But there have been approved, of projects in those States, to be built out of money on hand at the present time, nearly 8,000 miles of the roads. But they have not yet been touched, and not a stroke of work done upon them.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I know this applies to California and all other places, that the Capital Issues Committee refused to grant its consent to the use of funds for the construction of these roads, and therefore during the war the road construction has been delayed because of the need of funds.

Mr. SNELL. I entirely agree with the gentleman, and I have no contention with him on that matter. But I do maintain that we have more money on hand at the present time than we can possibly spend economically during this year, and when we already have that money on hand there is no reasonable excuse for appropriating at this time on this bill a provision carrying $200,000,000 more money. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman was talking about the excessive amount of labor seeking employment, and about the soldiers returning home. Is it not a fact that there is no place in the United States where better results can be had to improve the situation than by putting unemployed men and returning soldiers to work on these roads, where they can work together?

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand so at all. From what I know about returning soldiers, they do not intend to do pick-and-shovel work. The most of them did not before they went to war and certainly will not now.

Mr. RAKER. Why not?

Mr. SNELL. Because throughout our State such pick-and-shovel work of road construction is largely done by foreigners.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, 90 per cent of the roads now being constructed are done by machines.

Mr. SNELL. Then you do not need to have this legislation in order to provide employment for more labor in this country. [Applause.] And that is one reason why it is presented at this time. There certainly could be no other reason.

Mr. RAKER. But it requires labor to run the machinery.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, yes; but only a comparatively few, and the main argument is to furnish employment for labor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What part was contributed by the Government toward the construction of these roads?

Mr. SNELL. Fifty per cent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand that is the case in this bill also?

Mr. SNELL. Yes. I understand the same conditions are to continue.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This bill carries $200,000,000?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; in addition to the original $75,000,000.

Now, in order to spend the money economically you have got to work out a complete system in each State, and there are very few States at the present time where that system has been completely and comprehensively worked out, so that they are in a position to spend this money at this time, and it will be impossible to get the benefit, so far as the employment of labor is concerned, during the present year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Can the gentleman name me the States that have not the machinery provided under this original road bill?

Mr. SNELL. I can not give you the names.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understood the gentleman stated there were few that had.

Mr. SNELL. I said there were some that had not. There was a misunderstanding on that.

Now, the contention I make is that we can not afford at this time to make the appropriation, because we can not spend the money even if we have it.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not?

Mr. SNELL. Because you have not the machinery to do it, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I do not, and the gentleman from New York does not know it.

Mr. SNELL. I do know it.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no. The gentleman from New York is just making an assertion without any facts.

Mr. SNELL. But my assertion is just as good as yours. Can the gentleman tell me how you are going to make surveys and plans and make the general arrangements so we can economically spend this money this summer?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. In nine cases out of ten the surveys are already made and everything is prepared to go on with the work. All that we need is the money and the men.

Mr. SNELL. You have got more money appropriated now than you can possibly use this year.

Mr. MADDEN. Seventy million dollars divided among 48 States is a mere bagatelle. The gentleman seems to be arguing against the opportunity of his own State for going on with the improvements.

Mr. SNELL. My own State has more roads laid out now than they can possibly build this year, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. MADDEN. That is just as I said; they have got more laid out than they can build.

Mr. SNELL. But the money is all arranged for this work, and we can not use this extra money this year.

The whole question is whether you can afford at the present time to appropriate this sum of money that you do not need at present and can not possibly spend during the present year. I say no. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I want to call attention to Senate amendment No. 38. We amended the bill on the aviation provision. The department asked for $2,185,000 to carry out certain mail routes. We cut that down to $300,000 and provided that the Army should carry mail whenever called upon by the Post Office Department. We directed the Army to turn over the personnel and the machines. Now, for some reason or other the Post Office Department did not want that. They went to the Senate, and they told them they could not carry the mail with Army fliers, and they had that provision stricken from the bill and asked for more money. Now they have got $850,000.

Gentlemen, I want to tell you this, that the aero mail of this country is doomed to failure. They can not make good. They refused the machines and personnel which we wanted to give them. They want to carry it out with $850,000, and it can not be done.

You will recall that at the end of the discussion the chairman of the committee said they would start that day with the Chicago and New York line. I told you then that the Post Office Department did not have the equipment or the personnel to start the Chicago and New York line; and, gentlemen, they have not carried a letter from New York to Chicago, and they can not do it for another year.

It is easy for the gentlemen in the Post Office Department to come and testify before a committee, but their testimony on aviation matters is pathetic in their ignorance of the subject.

Now, if we want to develop the industry, if we want to develop the aero mail in this country, we will have to go about it right. We have started right. We have saved this year on the appropriation something like $60,000,000 on aviation that the Navy and the Army and the Post Office Department have asked for. The only way to do it, gentlemen, is to starve these people into their senses, to cut out their appropriations until they all decide to come in with a unified, single air service, the same as England, France, and Italy have; and then, with the ingenuity that we have here, and the factories and the facilities that we have, we can develop the best air machines in the world. Now, I just want to point out that if anybody expects that the Post Office Department is going to establish an aerial mail service in the United States, he should get rid of that idea, because they can not do it. This is just $850,000 being wasted.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Briefly; yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would it be practicable to have an aerial mail service in the Northern States, and to continue it through the winter months, during the inclement weather?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not at this time. To give you an example, they complained that they could not use the Army machines. I went to New York a few days ago, and went to Belmont Park, and they were starting four machines from New York to Bellefonte, Pa. I pleaded with every man on that field who had charge not to send out those machines on that day. It was hazy, the clouds were low, and it was impossible to make it. They said, "Oh, we fly in every kind of weather." That was not being smart; that was showing they did not know anything about aviation. They sent out those four machines, and not one of them reached its destination. Three of them crashed and one of them landed near Philadelphia. Then they came before the Senate committee and said, "Why, the machines are no good. Mr. LAGUARDIA, of New York, was on the field one day, and he saw that we could not make it." It was not the fault of the machines; it was simply the fault of their judgment.

Mr. RANDALL. What was the practice on the front? Did the machines all wait for good weather before they went up?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum here. I make the point of no quorum present. You shall not rob the Treasury by improper legislation without a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BURNETT). The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-two Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson	Farr	Maher	Stafford
Barnhart	Flynn	Miller, Minn.	Stephens, Miss.
Benson	Francis	Mott	Stevenson

Fairfield	Lufkin	Smith, T. F.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 323 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I made the point of order that there was no quorum present. There were less than 60 Members on the floor. A quorum have answered—more than 300—and half of them have gone already. I know of no way to mandamus the membership of this House, including myself.

I have 10 minutes to discuss this matter, and unless you are better informed about it than I was 30 minutes ago you do not know what it is. But it is for employment, to pay out $200,000,000 on a hop, skip, and jump. Now, in 10 minutes I can not say much, but I am going to say a little. Have you stopped to think of the condition that this country is in and that the world is in? The world has eaten up and shot away during this world war $179,000,000,000. We have loaned a part of that—$8,000,000,000, and more to follow after—and we have not got it back. We have made a debt to pay interest on, that we know about, that will cost $1,000,000,000 a year, to be raised by taxation or by borrowing. God knows what the total appropriations of this Congress are to be and what will follow in the incoming Congress. I do not know and you do not know. But here is a proposition to appropriate $200,000,000 for cooperation with the States when we have not spent $15,000,000 for cooperation in the several years since that law was passed.

Oh, gentlemen, it is so easy to appropriate. We are to be confronted with the proposition to spend $100,000,000 to drain land and to buy cut-over land. I have not received a letter or a request from any soldier for that proposition. How many have you received? Hold up your hands. Not one. There is a propaganda going on all over the country to have us make this appropriation to buy cut-over land. I have had letters from people who have cut-over lands to sell; plenty of them. I had a civil engineer come into my office last week, and have had several letters from civil engineers going back into civil life. I said to one of them, "Are you a farmer?" No. "Do you expect to go upon them and get a home?" No. "What is your interest in it?" "Why," said he, "I want employment as a civil engineer; I am an educated man." There is the size of it. [Laughter.] So much for that.

Who pays in the last analysis this thousand millions of dollars interest annually on this great public debt—and it will be fifteen hundred millions of dollars interest on the public debt before the expiration of the next Congress? Who pays it? The man that consumes pays it.

"Oh, but we want to give employment to the soldiers." Good God! how many of the soldiers that are coming back would accept employment in road building? Not one-tenth of 1 per cent. It was the exclamation of Madame Roland when about to be executed, "O Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" Talk about "caring for the soldiers." I am for taking care of them, as we pledged ourselves to do and as we ought patriotically to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Really, it does not make any difference who is employed out of this money; the mere fact that somebody is employed, whether a soldier or not, will add an opportunity for soldiers to find other employment, because it creates other activities that need employment.

Mr. CANNON. Who speaks now? My honorable colleague, for whom I have great respect. He says, "It does not make any difference whether we employ a soldier or not." Now, are we going to employ foreigners? Flimsy! It is not worthy—I will not say it is not worthy of my honorable colleague, whom I respect and love; but if he can not give a better excuse than that, it ought to be turned down. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, gentlemen, I am at work in the committee room on another deficiency bill. Somebody whispered and said, "Do you know the Post Office appropriation bill is up?" I left the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] in there alone by himself to continue the work. I wanted to come in and see how I ought to vote on this proposition. Why, gentlemen, the soldier will take care of himself when he comes back—three million or three million and a half of them. They were good stuff when they went into the Army [applause], and those who come back wounded we will care for. We will care for them by compensating them as they are entitled to be cared for. We will pay the insurance where life is lost. We can not do too much for the soldiers; but, oh, what mistakes we are liable to make in saying "We are taking care of the soldiers." I want the soldier to get what we appropriate for him. [Applause.] I do not want the cry to take care of the soldier under false pretense of caring for the soldier and then squander the appropriation for something that does not take care of the soldier.

Say, do you know how much we have already expended and what the debt is? If you have not reckoned it up, you do not. Do you know what is to be paid as interest? If you have not inquired, you do not.

You may say, "Oh, well, I would like to have it when I go back to Illinois, Minnesota, or Iowa; I would just like to take home this thing to appeal to the people and say, 'Here is what we have done for you.'"

Yes; what else have we done? We can not eternally borrow to pay the interest on the public debt. We can not eternally borrow to fill up the vacuum we are creating by providing money not needed and that we can not get except by borrowing. Now, one of two things is to happen: On the one hand the world debt is to be repudiated—and I warn gentlemen that you have got to meet that issue—or it is to be charged over upon the consumers of the country—and we are all consumers, and the tax burdens of our respective States and the National Government will pile up and up and up.

If I am right, I want you to think along that line and vote as I shall vote; for if I am but the one man against this conference report I shall vote against it. The way to get a Post Office bill is to turn down this conference report and send this bill back to conference with the Senate conferees, with the instruction not to agree to this $200,000,000 appropriation for construction of roads throughout the country when the $60,000,000 appropriated in 1916 is substantially unspent. Mr. Speaker, this Congress ceases to exist on the 4th day of March, 1919. You Democrats are in the saddle until that time and are responsible for unwise appropriations. We Republicans of the House will become responsible after the 4th of March next for the action of the House. As one Member, I will not vote for this appropriation.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a table furnished by the Agricultural Department showing the amount of the $200,000,000 of good roads that will go to each State in the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, we have heard some criticism upon this conference report, but I think on careful consideration you will agree with me that it ought to be adopted. The statement has been made that the House has yielded on a great many points of disagreement with the Senate. Most of those points were matters about which there was no dispute, because they consisted in specific increases in salaries which we had increased in the general provisions of our bill, so that a great many of these Senate amendments were simply carrying out legislation that we had already provided but which we had not specified in each instance. So far as extravagance is concerned, I want to say this, that the Postal Service is a service established for the convenience of the people and ought to be carried on for their benefit at cost, or approximately at cost. This service consists, as you all know, in the payment of salaries of clerks and carriers and officials, inspectors, postmasters, and so on, and we all know that salaries generally have been increased within the last two or three years, so that if the bill carries a larger sum than before, it is explained by the fact that compensation of every kind—for labor and for official services—has increased generally. The receipts of the Post Office Department in the last fiscal year were something over $380,000,000. The normal increase for a period of years has been about 6 per cent per year, so that if we have the same ratio of increase in that as in the past we would increase the rates something like twenty or twenty-one million dollars a year. Last year showed a surplus over expenditures in the Postal Service of something like $20,000,000, and if this bill gives a $40,000,000 increase in salaries we are simply bringing it up to where it ought to be. It can not be charged as extravagance when you pay your servants who do the work for you, who carry these letters by day and by night through rain and sunshine, what they ought to receive in compensation and which corresponds with the compensation in other employments. That is not extravagance. Take the compensation of the rural carriers. Congress last year increased it 20 per cent, and we made that increase permanent in the House bill. The Senate increased it to 25 per cent. Before the House yielded, a matter was brought to our attention which was very instructive to me and which influenced my mind. The House had provided for a garage at Union Station, down here near the post office, to cost some $40,000 or $50,000. The Senate struck it out. The postmaster of Washington, Mr. Chance, wrote a letter, which was read to the committee, in which he said that the present garage is one and one-tenth miles from the present Union Station post office, and that it costs so much to bring the automobiles over from that garage and to take them back, and that the saving in transportation for three or four years would more than pay for the rent of the garage.

He said that the cost per mile with the driver would average 25 cents; and if it costs 25 cents per mile to move an automobile from the Union Station post office over to the garage on asphalt pavement, then would it not cost that much to move an automobile on a highway in the country, and, at 25 cents per mile, the rural carrier would get $1,800 on a 24-mile route, paying him nothing for his extra services as clerk of the post office, issuing money orders, and so forth, simply paying him as a driver and cost of maintaining equipment.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. Last year, under an order made by the Postmaster General, the rural carriers' salaries were increased 15 per cent. Is this 20 or 25 per cent increase carried in the conference report an increase over the 15 per cent?

Mr. STEENERSON. Oh, no. The increase made last year was 20 per cent. The committee reported, as the gentleman says, 15 per cent, but on the floor of the House it was increased to 20 per cent, and now the Senate added 5 per cent, so that the total increase is 25 per cent from former basic salary.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. For a short question.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman state right there what is the compensation of a rural carrier?

Mr. STEENERSON. The compensation on the standard route of 24 miles will be $1,500. As reported to the House, the bill provided for $1,440, but the 5 per cent increase makes it $1,500—$60 additional put on by the Senate. The House yielded on that increase. This gives you a compensation for a rural carrier, whether he furnishes the horse or the motor vehicle upon the so-called horse-drawn vehicle routes of 24 miles, less compensation per mile than it actually costs here. You give $300 less than it costs to run an automobile of ordinary size upon a paved street. We are simply increasing the compensation that he is entitled to by reason of the increased cost in operation and of his equipment. The actual pay per day of the rural carrier for his labor has not been increased.

Mr. SNYDER. Just one more question, to finish this up. Will the gentleman tell us what the extra compensation of the rural carrier is when he goes extra mileage?

Mr. STEENERSON. He gets $24 per mile per year for each mile in excess of 24. So that the charge of extravagance is not well founded. We are simply appropriating an amount which seems large, but which will be made up, we hope, if business is good next year, by the increased postal receipts. The Postal Service should be run so as to be self-sustaining, and we think that it will be. It is not a burden to the taxpayer as long as it is self-sustaining. The charge of extravagance does not apply.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. What was the increase in receipts because of the 3-cent postage against the 2?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will explain that. The 3-cent postage never went to the postal receipts at all.

That is estimated monthly and paid into the Treasury for the benefit of the general fund, and we have never counted that when we counted the receipts, as I have stated.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will.

Mr. LOBECK. These increased receipts this year have not been counted in?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly not; the gentleman is correct. We do not count that at all, and they will be abolished as soon as the next fiscal year begins, I understand. So they are absolutely to be disregarded.

Now, in regard to this disputed road provision. Can the charge of extravagance be laid against it at this time? The Post Office Committee never considered that, so far as the House committee was concerned. They are not to blame that it comes into the bill. It was put on as a kind of rider by the Senate committee, and they insisted on the provision. Now, if it had been something with which we were ignorant, something that had not been understood, it would perhaps be proper to throw it out, but I want to say that we created a special committee of this House to study the road question. They have studied that question for years; they brought in what is believed by all fair-minded men to-day to be the fairest division of money to be contributed by the National Government to improve the roads that has ever been devised. It is based on the compound system of allowing for distance, population, road mileage, rural-route mileage, so that it gave satisfaction. The House of Representatives agreed to that road law almost unanimously, and this provision here is simply a provision that increases the allotment under the road law. It is limited here in this provision to postal roads. Of course, the post roads are under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Committees of both Houses, so that in increasing the allotment which was made under the original road act, which was administered by the Department of Agriculture, we were simply taking advantage of an existing law to increase the amount of road construction that was to be made in the next two years. Now, some say it is a bad time to build roads, because everything costs so much. Well, I do not know that there is very great argument in that. If wages are high, of course they are no higher in that line than anything else. Roads are undoubtedly needed in the country. A good road is a matter of economy, it is a good investment. It is what may be called and is called a productive investment, because it cheapens transportation, and therefore every dollar you put into that kind of an investment is a profitable dollar. It earns more than it costs in interest to the public.

We thought it was an opportune time for many reasons to increase this road work in the different States and encourage it by Federal aid. One reason was that there might be a number of soldiers returning who wanted this kind of employment and this kind of employment was increased by this appropriation. Another thing was that the War Department is supposed to be in possession of a great many motor trucks and road-making machines that they have used in the war and which will be absolutely worthless unless they are utilized at this time for that purpose. We are not expecting another war, and all these things that we have acquired for road making perhaps can be availed of now for this useful work, and who can better use them than the soldier who is familiar with them? These machines, these motor trucks and powerful machinery, can be handled by them, as it is believed. Another thing was that the States have only recently been awakened to the advantage of availing themselves of this Federal aid. Many of them have engaged to contribute a sufficient amount, and they are showing signs that they are coming in, and the more that come in the more roads will be built and the more roads that are built the better it will be for the whole country.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield, if it will not interrupt him?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask if this provision, in reference to the employment of soldiers in connection with the construction of roads, was put in the bill for the purpose of helping the soldiers or for the purpose of helping the road proposition?

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, it was probably to help the roads. We simply put that clause in that preference shall be given to the soldier if he wants work of this kind. The wages, as I understand, for running machinery are from $5 a day up, and it is good employment—out-of-door employment—and if they desire it they should be preferred over anyone else. That is all there is to it. We do not expect a great many to avail themselves of it.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman understands, of course, the Government does not initiate any of this road construction at all?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will not discuss that.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman permit one observation? The gentleman also ought to know, if he does not know, that these contracts for State roads are let to contractors, who control the question of who they shall employ to build the roads. Does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. STEENERSON. Probably they are, but I will not discuss it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. For a question.

Mr. WALSH. Does this scheme which is provided in this bill require the States to appropriate $200,000,000 before they can take advantage of Federal aid?

Mr. STEENERSON. It does not require anything; but if they want $200,000,000 from the Federal Government, they will have to appropriate $200,000,000 of State funds, and if they want $50,000 they will have to appropriate $50,000. Some States have constitutional provisions that prevent them from contributing the amount required to enable them to receive the full allotment of Federal aid under the road act. One of these States is Minnesota. The bill now before you contains a proviso as follows:

Provided, That where the constitution of any State prohibits the same from engaging upon internal improvements, or from contracting public debts for extraordinary purposes in an amount sufficient to meet the monetary requirements of the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, or restricts annual tax levies for the purpose of constructing and improving roads and bridges, and where a constitutional alteration or amendment to overcome either or all of such prohibitions must be submitted to a referendum at a general election, the sum to which such State is entitled under the method of apportionment provided in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, shall be withdrawn by the Secretary of the Treasury from the principal fund appropriated by the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, upon receipt of the certification of the governor of such State to the existence of either or all of said prohibitions, and such sum shall be carried by the Secretary of the Treasury as a separate fund for future disbursement as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That when, by referendum, the constitutional alterations or amendments necessary to the enjoyment of the sum so withdrawn have been approved and ratified by any State, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon receipt of certification from the governor of such State to such effect, shall immediately make available to such State, for the purposes set forth in the act of July 11, 1916, or any act amendatory thereof, the sum withdrawn as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be deemed to prevent any State from receiving such portion of said principal sum as is available under its existing constitution and laws.

This will give such States the opportunity to change their constitutions and thus enable them to avail themselves of the Federal aid allotted to them.

The amount available to Minnesota from the Federal Treasury under existing law and pending provision during the next three years will be $7,814,682.78; that is, in the event that she amends her constitution so as to permit her to contribute an equal amount. I believe the legislature has already taken steps to submit the question to the voters, and if they approve there will be a total of $15,629,365.56 available.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee has 15 minutes, if he desires to use that time.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker: This is no new road legislation. Permit me to call the attention of the House to the fact this bill merely carries an appropriation in aid of the existing road act, and every dollar hereby appropriated will be expended in conformity with the terms of a measure which this body heretofore passed with practical unanimity. And let me say another thing in this connection. This bill has not been offered to the House as a bill that ought to be passed merely because it contains a provision referring to the returning soldiers. No such contention has been, or is being made. This appropriation will be in aid of road work in the United States under a comprehensive existing law. Wisely, it contains a provision to the effect that any soldier desiring employment on road work shall be given preferential consideration. Who is there that will object to this provision? Permit me to go a step further, and point out that there will be a considerable number of soldiers who will secure employment in this connection, although the bill is not offered on the ground that it will be exclusively, or even chiefly for the benefit of the soldiers.

In the first place, a great deal of machinery is used in the process of modern road building, and many of the soldiers returning from abroad, who have been in the motor transport, or other mechanical service, will apply for and secure employment as expert operators of this machinery.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. ROSE. Under the present law, as I understand it, the Agricultural Department is permitted to appropriate the sum of $10,000 per mile to any State in the building of roads. If I understand this bill properly the only thing this amendment does is to increase the appropriation already made by law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have already stated in the most emphatic fashion that this is precisely what this bill will do. In this connection I will state that the limit of contribution under the act of 1916 on the part of the United States was $10,000 a mile. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD] came before the Roads Committee of this body, and pointed out that in view of the cost of modern road construction, growing in part out of the war, and in part out of other causes, this limit was too low, and should be raised. The Roads Committee agreed with this contention, and reported a bill which is incorporated as an amendment in the pending measure, raising this limit to $20,000 a mile. Pass this bill, and the State of New York which will derive something like $14,000,000 from the appropriations herein made, will be able to employ that fund as aid in building roads that may cost as much as $40,000 a mile. But to return to the soldiers.

Engineers will be needed in all of the States in connection with road construction. Many of the soldiers returning from the war are engineers, and will find employment in this field. Foremen of construction will also be needed, and the returning soldiers will supply these foremen. Many of the soldiers drafted into the American Army were men engaged at the time in road work in the States. I have no doubt that a considerable proportion of these men when they return to private life will naturally turn to their former line of work which they will find actively in progress, and affording opportunities of immediate employment at attractive wages. So that it will be true that in the aggregate many soldiers will secure employment in connection with the road activities that this appropriation will set in motion.

Yet the advocates of this measure do not present it on the sole ground that it is designed to aid the soldiers, but, rather, on the ground that in a large way it will benefit the entire country, and incidentally will afford attractive employment to a very considerable number of returning soldiers. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has pointed out, and very justly, this appropriation will stimulate road construction on a large scale in the States. This construction will not only call for labor, but for tools and machinery. This will mean orders for the industrial plants, and activity in those plants, so that the actions and reactions that this construction will effect, will play no inconsiderable part in our economic readjustment from a war, to a peace basis.

These activities will afford employment on a considerable scale, and in many communities, in every State in the Union, and the political economists are agreed that the employment of labor at this time is a vital issue.

A number of questions have been asked by the opponents of this appropriation, some of them reasonable and entitled to an answer, others showing an entire lack of acquaintance with the provisions of the original road act. One gentleman wishes to know how much has been expended up to the present time under this act. How is it an argument against the proposed appropriation that all of the appropriations heretofore made has not been expended? It is enough to know that what has been expended, has been expended economically and judiciously. As a matter of fact, since the road act went into effect, two years ago, road building has been below normal in the States, though there has been much activity in preparing for road work on a large scale with the return of peace. In my own State road construction, and even road maintenance have been practically suspended during that period.

For what purpose do the gentlemen opposed to this appropriation bring this fact of suspended activity, into this discussion? Do they wish that state of suspended animation to continue? The money heretofore appropriated is still available for future construction. The appropriation in this bill merely serves to enlarge this fund and increase the scale on which roads will be built during the next three years. Now that our efforts in the war have been crowned with victory, the whole world will soon be knocking at our doors for our raw materials and finished products. The work of destruction has come to an end, the work of construction must begin. A necessary part of this work of reconstruction will be the reconstruction of our highways. The need for this reconstruction has been fully recognized, and within the last 12 months under the stimulus of potential Federal aid many States have voted great sums to build modern highways of the latest and most approved type. Traffic on the railroads is approaching its limit, for rails will carry just so much, and no more. "But the modern highways with the motor transport, and an efficient system of rural motor express, can and will bear any burden thrust upon it. The highways are the natural arteries, while the motor truck is the transportation medium that will bind us together as a Nation."

Mr. SNYDER. Does not the gentleman think the question was raised due to the fact that there is still $70,000,000 of the appropriation not expended?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not $70,000,000 derived from the United States. That is where the gentleman makes a mistake. This $70,000,000 is composed in part of Federal, and in part of State contributions, but the entire sum is available for present road work. To that sum this bill will add $50,000,000 to be used during the year 1919.

Mr. SNYDER. And much of it has been allotted and not spent?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. All has been allotted, but very little spent. The bulk of the appropriations for the past two years, which only amounted to $15,000,000 for the years 1917, and 1918, and $15,000,000 for the year 1919, has not been expended for the reasons that I have mentioned. What argument do you derive from that fact? If the States have not been able to spend this money, it has not been wasted. It is still available for road purposes under the act of 1916.

Mr. MANN. For information I would like to ask the gentleman a question. He stated awhile ago that they had authorized road building up to $30,000 a mile. Was it not $40,000?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It may have been $40,000. I think the amount was changed in the Senate from the amount reported in the House bill.

Mr. MANN. I simply wanted the information.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman is probably right. A Member from the State of New York came before our committee, and asked to have the road act amended, so that Federal aid could be given to an amount greater than $10,000 to the mile.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said $30,000 a mile. Whether that meant two-thirds contribution by the General Government and one-third by the State I did not know.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I referred to the total cost of the roads on which the Federal aid was proposed to be applied. The road act limited the application of Federal money to $10,000, a mile, that is one-half of the cost of a road costing $20,000, a mile. Under the Senate amendment a State can use its quota to the extent of one-half of the cost of a road not to exceed $40,000 a mile. That is to say that the new limit of cost for the Federal money will be $20,000, a mile.

Mr. SNYDER. The other reason for making that observation was it was thought on the part of some gentlemen here that if it has taken two years to spend less than $5,000,000, we could not possibly spend $70,000,000 this year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does the gentleman think that is a fair criticism, having in mind the conditions in the United States during the past two years?

Mr. SNYDER. I do know——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think it is.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will not let me answer.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. My time is too short to permit the gentleman to make a speech in my time. I would be perfectly willing to yield to him if I had more time.

Mr. AYRES. The gentleman knows that the Capital Issues Committee has practically stopped all road building, does he not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. In all parts of the United States both road building and road maintenance have been practically suspended during the last two years. It has also been stated in the course of this debate that the States are not in shape to do this road construction economically at the present time. That is a mistake. Most of the States are now provided with all the organization and the personnel necessary to expend every dollar of this appropriation to the very greatest advantage. But concede that all of the money available for the present year, will not be expended during the calendar year 1919. The act provides that any unexpended balance in a State's quota in any one year, will be available for use in the succeeding year. With respect further to the suggestion that the States will not expend this fund economically, it may be said in reply that the Secretary of Agriculture will be responsible for any wasteful, or extravagant expenditure. The act gives the Secretary of Agriculture ample authority to protect the interests of the Federal Government. No project can be entered upon until the Secretary is satisfied that the plans provide for the proper construction of a properly located and desirable road. Moreover the Federal fund can not be drawn upon until the Secretary, acting with the aid and advice of his engineer assistants is satisfied that the road has been constructed in conformity with the plans, and at the cost which he has approved.

Another thing that I wish to say is in response to a statement made I think by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that this bill provides an initial expenditure of $200,000,000. That is a mistake. The bill makes an appropriation of $200,000,000 for the next three years. That means about $66,000,000 to be expended annually by the Federal Treasury for road building in the several States during the next three years. Is that an extravagant or prodigal sum to be expended for this great work of domestic development in the entire United States?

The fact is that but for the war and the burdens imposed by the war, the appropriation for road building should exceed one hundred millions a year. It is only the state of the Treasury and the exigent demands in other directions that hold this appropriation within the moderate limit reported. There is one further reply that may be made to the suggestion that all of the Federal appropriation has not been used during the past two years, and that is that not only has the shortage of necessary labor been very great during that time, but in addition the States in many instances have had to create the organization necessary to put themselves in shape to make avail of the Federal fund. Comprehensive road plans have had to be formulated, to be followed up by elaborate project statements. All of this work had to be done in advance of any actual construction. But these preliminary details have been largely completed, and this year will witness road building on a large scale in every section of the country. The war was won by the united effort of the whole people. That same union of effort should now be applied to the great work of economic readjustments. A thoroughly systematized and vigorously prosecuted scheme of road construction in the States will play no small part in bringing this readjustment speedily to pass.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have five minutes left?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MOON. I yield three minutes of that time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, nor am I a member of the Committee on Good Roads. Moreover, I am a Representative of a district entirely embraced within the city of Baltimore, and yet I am very strongly in favor of good roads.

I think it is very refreshing now to have a chance to vote for an appropriation for construction and not for destruction, as we have been compelled to vote some billions for war in the past two years. I tell you that as a Representative of the State of Maryland, which has had an experience of many years in good-road building, there is nothing so valuable as good roads. Maryland is not excelled, or equaled, in good roads in all this country. We have found it very profitable, indeed, to pay out $30,000,000 of State funds for good roads. It is not only profitable to the man in the country, but it is also profitable to the man who lives in the city. Baltimore, which pays a large proportion of the entire taxes of the State, has always advocated improved highways. Our city friends find it extremely profitable, as does the man who lives in the country.

When I was a boy, living 6 miles south of the city of Baltimore, I was compelled many times to go in a cart to the city on Monday mornings to attend school, because the roads were so bad that a buggy or a wagon could not get over them. It took two mules to this cart to get us to the city, with the mud up to the hubs. To-day you can speed in an automobile to the city of Baltimore in 15 or 18 minutes. Let some one who is qualified to answer say what that is worth to the farmer and to the city man to get goods transported in the wintertime as well as in the summer. Good roads and improved farm machinery has largely taken the sting out of agricultural work. Keep up the good work and keep the boy and girl on the farm.

Traveling in France, as some of you have done, has enabled me to know the meaning of a system of good roads. One of the things that enabled the allies and our Nation to win this war is the splendid system of good roads that prevails throughout France. What would have happened at Chateau-Thierry and Belleau Woods but for good roads. Here we are talking about $200,000,000, to be spread over three years, and some gentlemen question whether it is good policy. We should do the same thing in regard to the country that we do in regard to our own individual business; we should do with regard to the community what an individual does with regard to his own interests. If a man wants his business to be profitable he will put his money into such things as will enable the machinery of his business to be run easily and economically, and if we want to build up the business and farming interests of this country we must construct good roads and have good roads and good streets where they can be obtained.

In 1904 I was a member of the House of Delegates of Maryland, when the first bill was introduced appropriating $100,000 toward the construction of the present boulevard between Baltimore and Washington. I advocated this appropriation and voted for it, and it was the first money which the State of Maryland put into good roads. [Applause.]

The experiment proved so valuable that at the very next administration, in 1908, a complete system of State highways was laid down by the road commission, and from that time until now we have been appropriating and building good roads throughout our State.

As I have said, the roads have cost in the neighborhood of $30,000,000, and I do not believe you can find a score of people in the whole State who believe the policy to be unwise. If a little Commonwealth like Maryland, of less than one and one-half million people, can expend $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 upon its highways, what does $200,000,000 amount to throughout the whole United States when divided into three payments of $50,000,000 the first year and $75,000,000 during each of the two succeeding years?

It ought to be a pleasure for this House to vote for a measure of reconstruction such as this after having gone through the vast appropriations for carrying on the war in Europe. France and its allies won the war largely through the operation of trucks and cannon over the splendid highways of that Republic.

Not only are they so immensely valuable in time of war, but throughout all the years they have been the most profitable investment of the Government and assisted business and made pleasure.

I hope the league of nations, which we will no doubt form, will prevent any wars in the future; but then, these highways which we are to construct will be of wonderful service to all our people, and if by chance another war should come they will be of wonderful advantage in connection with that.

The highways of Maryland have been most valuable to the National Government during the war. They have served as a means of transportation when the railroads and other transportation facilities fell down. All the countries of Europe have seen the wisdom of splendid highways for many years. Even the Roman Empire in the height of its glory saw the wisdom of such construction.

I hope that we may be able in the near future to lessen the appropriations for Army and Navy by virtue of the league of nations, and that we may begin internal improvements upon a larger scale than heretofore. The Government is calling upon individuals, States, and cities to speed up on construction. Why should not the National Government do the same? Why should we not have more roads giving employment to labor rather than the construction of temporary buildings, which will be useless within the near future, and which will largely be completed for the purpose of giving employment?

The automobile has broken down the State barrier, and great trunk lines of good roads are demanded. There ought to be a trunk line leading from the Atlantic to the Pacific of one of the best highways in the country. There ought to be others leading from the South to the North and from the Capital to the various important sections of our land. This would not only give employment to labor but would enhance the value of property, reduce the cost of transportation, and induce more people to take to the farms and the life of production in the country instead of living in the crowded cities, where they are now largely congregated. Every inducement ought to be offered to have the people live in those localities where they can benefit by the sunshine and fresh air and thereby improve the health of the entire people.

As I said at the beginning, I am from a city which will get benefit from this expenditure only incidentally and from a State whose highways are largely completed; nevertheless I think there is no better way for the United States to spend its money than in the construction of good roads. It gives employment, improves the business, and grants pleasure. It solidifies the land and improves health. Let us have more good roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, being a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I have followed with considerable interest the conference report on this bill and have listened to some of the criticism on the part of some of the Members of the House as to the agreement of the conferees on Senate amendment No. 71, which provides an appropriation of $200,000,000 to aid the States in the construction of improved highways under the act of July 11, 1916, the appropriation to be divided as follows: Fifty million dollars for this fiscal year, $75,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1920, and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1921. I think that the conferees would have been subject to just criticism if they had not agreed to that amendment. I do not know of anything that has contributed more to the rapid building of improved highways in the United States than the good-roads bill that we passed in July, 1916, and to my mind the reasons for further activities of that kind are much greater to-day than they were in 1916, when we set the precedent by passing that law. A very wise and helpful precedent, I think it was, of a proper cooperation between the National and State Governments.

Now, some gentlemen undertake to argue that a bill of this kind is contrary to democratic principles in that it imposes upon the National Government an activity which it was never intended that it should assume. When I remember that the greatest of all Democrats, and the most profound statesman that America has produced, Thomas Jefferson, was an advocate of the building of national highways, I have no fear of being criticized as having abandoned democratic principles when I advocate a bill of this kind. A measure of this sort does not in any sense relieve the States and their several subdivisions of their duty and responsibility in the matter of building improved highways, but simply supplements their good work and gives intelligent and helpful assistance and, most important of all, a lively stimulus. It was never intended to relieve the States of any of their responsibility. Those who have studied the improved-highway situation as it has been affected by the good-roads act which we passed July 11, 1916, are bound to be impressed with the thought that the following good results have been obtained by reason of the enactment of that legislation:

First. State laws have been enacted providing effective State control of a large measure of road work, making funds available to meet the Federal appropriations, systematizing the work so that there might be definite and correlated results instead of haphazard construction.

Second. By means of the rules and regulations put into force and effect by the Department of Public Roads and Rural Engineering of the Department of Agriculture a standardization of form and arrangement for highway plans and specifications has been obtained. This will in time be very helpful and beneficial not only to the Federal Government but also to the States by way of encouraging simplicity and standardization in the matter of building good roads.

The citing of the good results following the passage of the act of July 11, 1916, could be extended to cover many more matters of interest, but time forbids now. I shall certainly vote for the adoption of the conference report. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Two gentlemen from Virginia make the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, as does the gentleman from Arkansas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recommit the bill. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON moves to recommit the bill H. R. 13308, with instructions to the managers on the part of the House not to agree to Senate amendment 71.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question being taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 41, noes 101.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 267, answered "present" 4, not voting 88, as follows:

Mr. WEBB with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

On this vote:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania (for) with Mr. BELL (against).

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea," but I find I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, and I request that my vote be changed to "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FILLING VACANCY IN BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 195.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 195.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 195) providing for the filling of a proximate vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Mmbers of Congress.

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, which will occur on February 6, 1919, by reason of the expiration of the term of George Gray, of Delaware, be filled by the reappointment of the said George Gray for the ensuing term.

Mr. MANN. I do not object, but I want to offer an amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 5, by striking out the words "will occur" and insert in lieu thereof the word "occurred."

Mr. PADGETT. That is proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended by striking out the word "proximate."

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the river and harbor bill, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the river and harbor bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I think we had better have the Senate amendments printed first.

Mr. SMALL. The Printing Office reports that they are very busy and can not have them printed before to-morrow morning. There will be no meeting of the conferees before to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Then there is no reason for sending it to conference to-day.

Mr. SMALL. Except that we want to know who the conferees are, so that they may be studying the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Some other Members want to study the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman insist on his request?

Mr. SMALL. I prefer to insist upon it, but if the gentleman is insistent——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman insists on his request and refuses to let it be printed, I will object now and hereafter.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill H. R. 12211.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

JOHN A. KING,
SAM R. SELLS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15979, making appropriations for fortifications.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15979, the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa if we can not agree upon some time for general debate?

Mr. GOOD. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. About an hour on a side.

Mr. GOOD. I have a request for over three hours on this side.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman realizes, I think, that, if possible, we want to finish this bill to-day. I hope that gentlemen can cut that down. There will be other appropriation bills to follow this.

Mr. GOOD. Not very many, and these gentlemen are very anxious to address the House. I am anxious to do all I can to expedite the bill. Will not the gentleman give us three hours and a half for general debate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Can not the gentleman make it three hours, and that will take us until 6 o'clock?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield some of his time to this side?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would not care to promise, because I have a number of requests from gentlemen on this side, but I may be able to yield some of my time. I do not want to be bound by any promise, however.

Mr. GOOD. Well, we will try to get along with that understanding.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the pending bill be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion, the gentleman from Tennessee asks that general debate be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall reserve the right to object in order to get some information, if I may be permitted to do so. Three hours of general debate will run until about half past 6 o'clock, I take it. It will not take very long to pass the bill under the five-minute rule, for I imagine there are not very many controverted items in it. Is it the intention, then, to keep on this evening and take up the railroad deficiency bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I think we would better find out. I think Members of the House would like to know. Then I would like to know what we are going to do to-morrow and Thursday and Friday. Is it the intention to bring in the wheat bill for consideration, and, if so, when?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I think we will try to finish this bill to-day.

Mr. MANN. Ah, that is too easy. We could do that and have seven hours of general debate.

Mr. KITCHIN. To-day?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. And then to-morrow we will take up the railroad bill.

Mr. MANN. I thought probably we would go ahead with the railroad bill to-night. That is what I would do if I were running the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. And the wheat bill Friday, and by that time we hope the sundry civil bill will be reported—by Friday, so that we can begin its consideration on Saturday.

Mr. MANN. If they have good luck, they may get the sundry civil bill in on Friday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I would say this bill to-day, the railroad bill to-morrow, the wheat bill Friday, and then begin the sundry civil appropriation bill on Saturday morning.

Mr. MANN. No rule is required for the railroad bill, but I take it that the Committee on Rules would report a rule for the wheat bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will ask unanimous consent that the wheat bill may be in order for consideration under the general rules of the House. Otherwise we will have to go through the form of reporting a rule.

Mr. WALSH. On Friday?

Mr. RAYBURN. To follow the railroad bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To be in order as a privileged bill.

Mr. MANN. We want to know when it is coming up. Will it be in order to take it up following the railroad bill? Of course, it would not have to come up under such conditions.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill known as the wheat bill shall be in order after the disposition of the railroad deficiency bill. We will not take it up until Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the wheat bill shall be in order after the railroad bill, under the general rules of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that general debate upon the pending bill shall not exceed three hours, half of that time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortifications appropriation bill, with Mr. CLARK of Florida in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the fortification bill carries items for the seacoast defenses of continental United States, the insular possessions and Panama, and also for mobile artillery and artillery ammunition for the armies of the United States. In addition to that, this bill carries appropriations for the barracks and quarters for continental United States, the insular possessions and Panama, items which have heretofore been carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and which for the first time are carried in the bill now pending.

The seacoast defenses of the United States, the Panama Canal, and the insular possessions have been carried forward from time to time under the reported projects of various boards of the War Department. The first comprehensive scheme of coast defenses was based upon the so-called Endicott board. This was revised by the Taft board, and that in turn was revised by the board of review as late as November, 1915. The report of the board of review called for the expenditure of approximately $100,000,000 for additions, alterations, and modifications of existing defenses and the initiation of defenses at new points. All of the schemes of coast defense up to and including the original board of review report were based upon the installation of fixed armament. A subsequent modification of the board of review project by the War Department provided for the procurement of a limited number of heavy guns mounted upon railway carriages to supplement the fixed fortifications at a point of attack. The development of the use of and the procurement of heavy railway artillery in the present war has brought some confusion into the future scheme of coast defenses. So far as fixed fortifications are concerned the better military opinion is to provide for coast defenses mainly by use of heavy railway mounted guns and guns mounted upon tractors.

The board of review project has never been fully appropriated for or carried out. No estimates were submitted this year for the manufacture of the armament remaining to be installed, the whole question of further fixed fortifications and railway mounts being reserved for further study and recommendation by the War Department. The United States has on hand now a very considerable number of heavy guns mounted upon railway cars, and additional guns are under manufacture.

It is the belief of the committee that in view of the very great change which has come in the use of heavy railway and tractor mounted guns that a careful survey of our entire coast-defense system must be made and a policy determined upon.

The estimates for seacoast cannon and armament in connection with this bill have been practically eliminated. The War Department in most instances has large balances on hand unallotted and unobligated which can be used economically and slowly in arriving at a policy of coast defense. No considerable expenditure should be made until a determination of correct policy has been arrived at.

The estimates upon which the bill is based have been very greatly modified since they were first prepared. As originally prepared before the signing of the armistice, the estimates call for $645,576,961.01. After the signing of the armistice the War Department made an arbitrary cut in the estimates of 90 per cent, and since that cut was made further reductions were made. In addition thereto a number of supplementary estimates were submitted. The total revised estimates upon which the bill is based call for $92,893,657.71. The committee, after a very careful consideration and a hearing of some length, has reported a bill which carries $11,199,291. Of this sum it may be said that $4,161,849 is for the construction of permanent barracks and quarters for the Panama Canal, $225,000 for barracks and quarters in the Hawaiian Islands, and $40,000 for certain improvements in barracks here in continental United States.

If these sums be eliminated, the remainder of the bill is $6,764,442, a little more than the amount of the fortification bill prior to the embarkation of the Government upon the board of review projects for the enlargement of the coast defenses.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. TILSON. There was some confusion a few minutes ago and I do not know that I understood the gentleman correctly, but I did understand him to say that nothing is to be appropriated for the construction of large semimobile guns, guns to be installed on railway carriages or to be driven by tractors.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is correct. There was no estimate submitted to the committee for the construction of heavy guns, with the exception of an estimate for an 18-inch gun, which was intended to be constructed for experimental purposes.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that in view of the large part which these very large semimobile guns played in the present war in Europe that we ought to at least go on with the development of something along that line?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will state to the gentleman that there are now in process of construction eight 16-inch rifles and also twenty-five 14-inch guns which are not provided with mounts. In addition thereto, the project of installing thirty-six 12-inch guns mounted on Barbette carriages will soon be completed. There have also been acquired six 50-caliber 12-inch guns which were originally manufactured for the Chilean Government, and there will also be acquired thirteen 14-inch guns on railroad mounts.

Mr. TILSON. There are sufficient funds to go forward with their manufacture?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are sufficient funds to complete those guns; but, to be entirely frank with the gentleman, I will say that the department estimated for 25 railway-mount carriages for these 14-inch guns to which I have referred, and the committee makes no recommendation of an appropriation for that purpose. These railroad carriages can be constructed, of course, much quicker than the guns can be forged and machined. In addition thereto, it was stated to the committee that so much has been learned from our experience in the war and the experience of our allies that there is more than likely to be a great development and improvement in the construction of railway mounts and also with reference to the use of tractors for guns.

Mr. TILSON. That is, so far as there has been a pause it is only to wait until we can get authentic up-to-date information together and then decide upon a final and permanent plan for these large guns?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is entirely correct, and the department has in its hands a sufficient amount of money to carry out the present project. And I will say to the gentleman and the committee that the sum of $11,000,000 carried in this bill is not the only money which will be spent, in all probability, during the coming year. The department, as I have stated, has now a very large sum on hand unallotted and unobligated, and the committee believes that after settling the obligations now existing that it will be able to save quite a considerable sum of money out of which to carry forward and take care of the experimental and development work now under consideration, and also to do such salvage of ordnance and ammunition as is necessary.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman state, approximately, how much of the money that has been appropriated heretofore and not expended will be available in addition to what will be carried in this bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. For field-artillery purposes alone there are now available appropriations aggregating $2,290,209,905.18. That sum is to be held for the settlement of outstanding obligations and allotments aggregating $2,182,946,813.52, on the basis of paying 75 per cent of their face value, and for the settlement of outstanding reservations created, $4,353,331,966.13, on a basis of 15 per cent of their estimated cost. The gentleman will remember that those were the percentages which were used in the deficiency bill, or the covering-in bill, which was passed by the House and Senate some days ago, and the committee, as I stated before, thought that was a very liberal percentage, especially with reference to the reservation of appropriations which have been made and which were entirely unallotted and unobligated. The question was asked of those appearing before the committee whether or not they would not be able to save enough money out of the money on hand to carry forward these various experiments and development processes thought necessary, and also to make proper salvage of ordnance and ammunition, and, while they insisted they ought to have the appropriation, none were willing to deny that they would not be able to save enough money to——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question which I think is vital and fundamental. I have been reading very carefully the constitution of the league of nations, which, I understand, is to make all future wars impossible. If that be the fact, what is the need of any fortifications at all?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I do not think that the time will ever come when this country can afford entirely to abandon its coast defenses, and I will say this to the gentleman——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Then the gentleman would abandon the league of nations?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I certainly would not do that. This bill does not undertake to make any appropriations for additional work. It is only to carry out projects which are now under way and, in many instances, very nearly completed.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Well, the appropriations originally were useless. None of these coast defenses have ever fired a gun and never will be called upon to fire a gun.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true, I will say to the gentleman; but that in itself does not prove the want of necessity of having coast defenses.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I understood the war was to make the world safe for democracy. If it is made safe for democracy, what do we need of fortifications?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I do not care, of course, to enter into any lengthy discussion upon that particular proposition, but I will say to the gentleman that I think the time is far distant when we will not need substantial coast defenses as a measure of safety and protection against possible attack.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But I will admit that it would be a most happy result——

Mr. SHERWOOD. Then let us aim at it. If that is a happy result, let us aim at it then.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As long as we make appropriations for as large a Navy as we have done, as long as we make appropriations for a considerable Army, I take it we ought to have appropriations for keeping up our coast defenses.

Mr. DENISON. Do I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to state that this bill carries no provision for any additional coast defenses, but is simply a continuation of what has heretofore been provided for?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This bill simply carries appropriations to continue work now under construction. I will say to the gentleman there was no estimate submitted, no request made, to the Committee on Appropriations for what might be called new projects in continental United States. There was an estimate for the purchase of some land in the island of Oahu, in Hawaii. But that was not allowed.

Mr. DENISON. Are there under contemplation no further increments of defense of the Panama Canal?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does that bill carry any such provision for any additional coast defense at the Panama Canal?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This bill carries no provision for coast defense at the Panama Canal. There is an appropriation in the bill for the clearings and trails and for barracks and quarters in Panama. But I will say to the gentleman that the officials of the War Department are of the opinion that in view of the fact that we have just passed through a great war and that there are many lessons to be digested as the result of that war, in view of the fact that there was at the time of the signing of the armistice a great development taking place in the way of improving our mobile artillery, our guns and their mounts, that there ought to be time given to enable the proper board to study the proposition and to make necessary experiments in order to determine just what is the most up-to-date form of armament before we make any very heavy further expenditures in the way of providing new coast defenses.

Mr. DENISON. The department has made no estimate, then, for any increase or improvement of the defenses of the canal?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. There was a considerable estimate for aerial stations on the Panama Canal that I was about to overlook.

Mr. DENISON. It was stated on the floor of the House, I think, last week, by a Member of the House, and, I think, a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who had been in Europe during this war, that the canal could not be defended for one day against an enemy. Does the gentleman think that statement was wrong or is there some foundation for it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have now, of course, considerable defenses in the way of fortifications on the Panama Canal. Some considerable money has been spent there. An appropriation was made last year for the purchase of land on an island near the Canal Zone, in order to provide for additional fortifications on the Pacific side.

Mr. DENISON. Has that island been purchased?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It has not. A commission has been appointed, consisting of certain Panamans and officials of our Government. They have had the matter under consideration. They have not yet been able to agree upon the acquisition of the land and no action has been taken for that reason. But they have the money.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman know what island that is?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The island of Taboga.

Mr. DENISON. A question in reference to the statement the gentleman made awhile ago; I understood him to say there was an amount appropriated for permanent barracks at Panama.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is an amount slightly over $4,000,000 carried in this bill for permanent barracks and quarters at Panama.

Mr. DENISON. What is the purpose of that appropriation?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. To provide barracks and quarters for two regiments on the Canal Zone and also barracks and quarters for two companies of Coast Artillery, 150 men each, at Fort Sherman, which, as the gentleman will recall, is near the mouth of the Chagres River. There is a battery now in the course of construction, not yet completed, at the mouth of the Chagres River, which is known as Fort Sherman. There is no place there in which to house the men who will man that battery, and this bill carries $150,000 for the purpose of constructing barracks and quarters for 300 men. And in addition to that, as I have stated, there is a recommendation for $3,900,000, in round numbers, for two regiments to be located on the canal. I will say to the gentleman that an estimate was submitted last year, and resubmitted this year, that called for $13,000,000 for barracks and quarters for six regiments, two regiments of Infantry, to be located at the Gatun lock and dam, and two regiments of Infantry at Miraflores, and two regiments, one of Cavalry and one of Artillery, at Corozal. The committee did not allow the full estimate, but did allow sufficient money for barracks and quarters for two regiments, believing that was all that could be efficiently done this year.

Mr. DENISON. Where are the barracks to be located that are called for in this bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was not determined. It was the idea to have barracks and quarters at the three places I have named. The committee has left it entirely with the War Department as to whether they will put them at one place or the other. We simply make provision for barracks and quarters for two regiments.

I will state, Mr. Chairman, in connection with what I have said concerning the amount of money carried in this bill by way of appropriation, that the committee has recommended a provision covering back into the Treasury $1,819,000. Therefore it should be noted that while this bill carries appropriations aggregating $11,199,291, it repeals appropriations heretofore made aggregating $1,819,000, so that the net charge upon the Treasury by this bill is $9,380,291.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will not make the point of no quorum unless the gentleman thinks he wants it. I think this is an important debate, and this bill is against the whole policy of the administration and against the high ideals of the President. I think we should not change the policy of the administration unless more gentlemen are here. I will not make the point, however, unless the gentleman wishes me to do it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not do that. There are quite a number of Members present now, but I would like to see a larger attendance here in the discussion of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SHERWOOD. You are making an important speech.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. Does this bill provide a much greater appropriation than the bills heretofore?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. LONDON. It does not increase the amount over them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This bill is a very few dollars more than the appropriations made for fortifications prior to our entrance into the war. The gentleman will remember that up until 1917, the year in which we entered the war, there was never appropriated for the purposes carried in this bill more than $9,316,000, and in nearly every instance it was $4,000,000, $5,000,000, or $6,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I was just going to ask that question as to the years from 1913 up to 1919. Will the gentleman put those figures in, please?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. In 1913 the amount carried by the bill was something over $4,000,000. In 1914 the appropriation was $5,218,250; then an additional amount of $31,000 was carried in a joint resolution for a site at Cape Henry. Then in 1915 the appropriation was $5,627,700. In 1916 the appropriation was $6,060,216.90, while in 1917 the appropriation was $25,747,550. The gentleman will remember that a great deal of that appropriation was required for some extra fortification purposes in the Panama Canal, and that it was made in pursuance of the revised plans of the board of review.

Mr. SNYDER. I remember that distinctly. But I just wanted to point out the fact that now, in the face of a league of nations and a world's peace, we are asking three times as much for fortifications as we did in 1913.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. SNYDER. Practically three times as much.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. This bill, it is true, carries $11,191,000, but of that amount more than $4,000,000 is for barracks and quarters in this country and also in Panama and in the insular possessions. As a matter of fact, that portion of this bill which the gentleman can justly compare with the bill that was passed in 1913 amounts to only $6,764,442.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the fact that I wanted to bring out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will see that it is very little larger and in some cases less than what was carried in some of those years. As I have said, this bill carries no appropriation for new defenses or additional armament.

Mr. LONDON. How much of that $25,000,000 appropriated for 1917 has been expended?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think practically all of it. It is impossible for me to answer that question, because these are continuing appropriations, but practically very nearly all of that money has been expended on projects now in course of completion.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. In order to make the gentleman's statement complete, should he not refer to the fact that in the fortifications bill and other bills during the year 1919 there were over $5,000,000,000 appropriated or authorized for the most important item of this entire bill, which is mountain, field, and siege cannon, the acquisition of ammunition, and so on? The gentleman does not carry a single cent in this bill for any of those objects, for the reason that we have on hand already, or in process of manufacture and nearing completion, a large supply of the most important things needed for our Military Establishment, which have been provided for under the appropriations for 1919. Is not that a fair statement?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. I am obliged to the gentleman for the statement. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. How many troops has this Government in Panama now, and how many has it been maintaining there heretofore?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The estimates submitted to the committee call for barracks and quarters for about 10,000 men.

Mr. DENISON. In this bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In this bill. But the committee has submitted a recommendation only for barracks and quarters which will house approximately 4,000 men. There have been down there, according to my recollection, about eight or nine thousand men, but it has been stated that the commanding officer has requested permission to withdraw the greater portion of those troops on account of the fact that there are no decent quarters for them to live in. He says there is no place for them to live in a decent manner.

Mr. DENISON. How have they been housed?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have been living in old wooden buildings, some of them constructed by the French at the time the French Panama Canal Co. was trying to dig the canal. These buildings are old. Last year $500,000 was appropriated by Congress to repair some of those buildings. As a matter of fact only $275,000 of the amount was expended. The commanding general reported to the War Department that he would not spend the $225,000 remaining for repairs because it was merely throwing good money after bad, and that the buildings were not worth repairing.

Mr. DENISON. So that there is need of permanent barracks?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am convinced in my own mind that if we are to keep troops in Panama, they need barracks and quarters. For my part I think when private soldiers are required to stay there for a year or two they ought to be given decent and proper housing.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman give the name of this officer who refused to waste the money in that way? I think he ought to be commended and given a medal of some kind.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Gen. Blatchford.

Mr. DENISON. He ought to be commended.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I must hurry along.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Section 7 of the bill, it seems to me, is one of the most suggestive and interesting provisions. The law of 1916 provided for appropriating $417,000 to procure one radio-dynamic torpedo unit, and provided also, did it not, for the purchase by the United States, and the transfer by John Hays Hammond, jr., to the United States of all the patent rights of Hammond?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, this pending bill amends that, so as to appropriate $400,000 and get one radio-dynamic unit to control torpedoes, but not to get the patent rights of Hammond. That is a very different thing.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that the situation is just this: The law of 1916, to which the gentleman refers, appropriated $30,000 to be used in making certain tests by a board to be appointed by the President and composed of Army and naval officers. And it provided that upon their approval and recommendation $750,000 should be paid to Mr. Hammond for the acquisition of the entire patent rights of his radiodynamic torpedo, and that after acquiring all those rights $417,000 should then be spent in the installation of a unit. Now, since that law was passed, a board of Army and naval officers have conducted a number of trial tests at different times. They state to the committee that they are thoroughly convinced and satisfied that Mr. Hammond has demonstrated that he can control what might be called a waterborne, or surface, craft, or a torpedo on top of the surface, but that they are not entirely prepared to recommend payment of the $750,000 until they are more clearly satisfied that he can control a torpedo under the water. Some of them expressed the opinion that they thought that Mr. Hammond would be able to demonstrate his ability to control a craft or a torpedo under the water.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. By wireless?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. By wireless or radio. They asked the committee, therefore, to reverse the process and to permit them to spend $417,000 now in the installation of a unit, so that they can thoroughly test out his invention before recommending the payment of $750,000 to him; and the committee felt that, owing to the importance of the matter and the large amount of money involved, it was an entirely proper thing to do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then the gentleman from Tennessee says that the law of 1916 provided for the appropriation of $417,000 for the procurement and installation of one radio-dynamic torpedo unit, and then provided that no part of that should be expended unless the Government got all the rights of Hammond, and Hammond was to receive $750,000——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In advance, before the installation of the unit. Now, this is simply turning the thing around, to provide for the installation of the unit and the actual demonstration of his ability to do what he says before paying him for his rights.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If this bill is enacted, will it then still leave the law so that upon the payment of $750,000 to Hammond he must transfer to the Government all his rights to this invention?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, yes; provided this board of officers under the act of 1916 approve the purchase of his invention.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reading of the provision in the pending bill rather confused me. I did not understand from reading it that if the Government paid the $750,000 it would receive the exclusive rights owned by Hammond. In other words, I did not want it so that $417,000 would be expended for the procurement of one of these units and still leave the possibility of Hammond retaining the exclusive right to the patents.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; the gentleman will notice that when this $417,000 is expended this unit shall belong exclusively to the United States, which shall have control of it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then if the board of Army officers are satisfied that this invention does what he says it will do, they will recommend the payment of $750,000 and therefore acquire all of his rights to the invention.

Mr. DENISON. If they do not recommend it, then the $417,000 will be lost?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not altogether lost, because there will be a good deal of salvage.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The language to which I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee is the last proviso, found on line 7, page 12, of the bill:

Provided further, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the United States shall first receive from John Hays Hammond, jr., and from the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.) an unconditional license to use without cost said unit and all repairs and replacements thereof, in the event that the United States shall not acquire as heretofore provided the exclusive rights of said John Hays Hammond, jr., and of said Radio Engineering Co.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That language refers to the expenditure of the $417,000 for the installation of the unit, and does not refer to the $750,000 which will eventually be paid to Mr. Hammond provided he satisfies this board of Army and naval officers.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further in that connection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is an important point there.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I have not before me the language of the law, but I believe it provided for acquiring the entire rights to this invention. Now, this proposition is to amend the prior language so as "to read as follows"—and then follows the language. What I wish to know is how much of the former language is repealed by this?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No part of the law is repealed except that provision which provided for the installation of the unit and the expenditure of the $417,000 after the acquisition of the rights of Mr. Hammond. This simply reverses the process. It does not undertake to repeal any portion of the law. It simply undertakes to give authority for the installation of the unit, in order that this test may be made properly, and that the board may be thoroughly convinced before directing the payment of the money.

Mr. MANN. The power, then, to acquire the entire rights of Hammond would still remain on the payment of the $750,000?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; undoubtedly.

Mr. GOOD. Less the $30,000 already paid out for tests.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois raises the exact point I had in mind.

Mr. MANN. Without having the language of the original law before me, it strikes me, as it does the gentleman from Wisconsin, to inquire as to how far, if at all, that modified the right of the Government to acquire the entire rights in the invention?

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will yield to me, I think I can explain that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Before the gentleman makes his explanation, let me make one suggestion. I think it is in the mind of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], too. The proviso of existing law quoted on line 17, page 11, reads:

Provided, That no part of said sum—

That is the $417,000 to be paid for the unit—

shall be so expended unless the United States shall first acquire as heretofore provided the rights of the said John Hays Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York.

Now, that means, does it not, that you shall not expend any part of the $417,000 for the construction of the radiodynamic unit until by the expenditure of $750,000 you have first acquired the rights of Mr. Hammond?

Mr. GOOD. Now, let me explain. When the matter first came before the committee the War Department desired to purchase outright these patents, 128 of them, from John Hays Hammond, jr., for about $1,000,000, and an appropriation of $417,000 to construct one unit. The committee, after having hearings for more than a week, reported out the bill, which was adopted and became a part of the law, that the War Department had entered into a contract with John Hays Hammond, jr., for the purchase of these patents for $750,000, of which $30,000 was to be paid in developing experimental work. The balance should not be paid until the general board appointed by the President should be satisfied that the proposition was a workable one, and the torpedo or boat containing the explosive could be controlled by this process. For the last three years they have been conducting experiments and they have had several before this board.

The matter has developed to such a state that the War Department is satisfied that John Hays Hammond, jr., has done what he promised and more before he came to Congress, but they want to see whether or not one of these torpedoes constructed as he proposes can be controlled and managed just as he can control and has controlled a surface boat, and Mr. Hammond has agreed to give a license to the Government to construct, without any payment to him, one unit that is to cost $417,000; that the Government shall own the unit, shall have the unconditional right to use it in any way, whether it purchases afterwards the patents or not.

Now, the Government proposes with that money to construct these units, and then if the board, after seeing the completed unit in operation, is satisfied that they can make a report, then the Government will pay Mr. Hammond the balance of the $750,000?

Mr. MANN. What we want to know is whether, when the Government expends $417,000 for the purpose of demonstrating whether the patents are any good, the Government is then certain to be able to own the patents.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On the payment of the $750,000. Suppose Mr. Hammond does not carry out the contract. He would not get the $750,000?

Mr. GOOD. No; and an action could be commenced to enforce the specific performance.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the proposition is demonstrated to work the way it is supposed it will work, it will be worth a good deal to foreign countries to own the patents. But I have no doubt the committee has given full consideration to that proposition. We ought to know for sure that we do not expend $417,000 to demonstrate that Mr. Hammond has a good patent.

Mr. GOOD. The committee was strongly impressed with the high character displayed by John Hays Hammond, jr. It is his desire to have the Government of the United States own the patents, and we are satisfied that if he had wanted to sell them he could have gone abroad and sold them for a great deal more than twice that provided for here. But he is now willing to give the patents for the unit without any payment at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In lines 16 to 21 of the bill, page 11, is a copy of the law of 1916. If this pending bill is enacted into law it will absolutely repeal that, because line 22 says that the language is amended so as "to read as follows." Therefore that provision from the law of 1916 will be repealed and the only law on the book touching that subject will be that remaining on pages 11 and 12, and the proviso on page 12 contemplates that the United States Government may never get the patents.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me show the gentleman. Beginning on line 7, page 12—

> That no part of said sum shall be expended until the United States shall first receive from John Hays Hammond, jr., and from the Radio Engineering Co. of New York (Inc.), an unconditional license to use without cost said unit and all repairs and replacements thereof, in the event that the United States shall not acquire as heretofore provided the exclusive rights of said John Hays Hammond, jr., and of said Radio Engineering Co.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; but that was simply to enumerate——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The language of the act of 1916 as it appears on page 11 is this:

> For procurement and installation of one radiodynamic torpedo unit, $417,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be so expended unless the United States shall first acquire as heretofore provided the rights of the said John Hrys Hammond, jr., and the Radio Engineering Co. of New York.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. "No part of said sum"; that is, the $417,000 which is appropriated for the installing of one radiodynamic torpedo unit; but that does not refer to the $750,000 which was to be paid to Mr. Hammond for the acquisition of all his rights.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. You can not expend under the law of 1916 one cent until you get the patent rights.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. DENISON. That is not correct.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes; it is.

Mr. DENISON. You do not have to have the patent rights, but you have to have the right to go ahead and make the experiment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is, under this proposed bill, but under the act of 1916 no sum could be expended for the installation of a unit until you first acquire the patent rights of Mr. Hammond.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly; I knew that was existing law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is proposed to permit the establishment of a unit in advance of acquiring his rights.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But it does not in any way interfere with or disturb the law of 1916 in so far as subsequently acquiring all of the rights of Mr. Hammond, providing this board so recommends.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there anything in the law to show that the United States has a contract with Mr. Hammond or with that engineering company?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have a contract with him.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there anything in the law to show that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The law provides for a contract, and there has been a contract entered into between Mr. Hammond and the department officials. I think it is set forth in the hearings.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It seems to me that the law of 1916 is absolutely repealed if we enact this into law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will examine the law of 1916, I feel sure he will find that he is in error. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the committee will permit me to proceed now for a few minutes more, as I have promised to yield some of my time to certain gentlemen. Estimates were submitted to the committee for the building of certain aerial stations and balloon stations, both in continental United States and in the insular possessions and Panama, calling for quite a number of millions of dollars. The committee has declined to recommend any sum for the construction of aerial stations or balloon stations, but there is in the hands of the department the sum of $10,821,000, which is left with the department, and with that they can proceed to construct a number of stations in continental United States.

The failure to carry any appropriations for field artillery purposes in this bill does not mean that the Ordnance Department will not have funds for these purposes until June 30, 1920. It does mean, however, that in order to finance the 1920 needs in connection with field artillery items, that the sum of at least $31,000,000 must be saved from the balance on hand for the discharge of existing obligations. Neither does it mean that the committee entirely approves of the comprehensive plan of experimentation and development work outlined by the War Department under these items.
